This conference is a deliberate effort to drive down the value of farm land and to frighten the public. This conference will do irreparable injury, to the extent of millions of dollars, to the farm owners of America. Most of our farmers have their entire life savings invested in farm lands and farm homes. Why should they be singled out as the one group in our economy for the slaughter of the value of their investments? What about city property? That, too, has substantially increased in value along with the increase in the national income.

The letter written by the President was ill advised and ill timed. The truth is, this letter has already resulted in the entire amount of $25,000,000 being stricken out of the agricultural appropriation bill which the administration, the Department of Agriculture, and the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations had recommended and approved. It further resulted in a $7,000,000 cut in administrative funds for the Farmers Home Corporation. The effect of these cuts will mean that at least 49,000 veterans who have applications now pending will not be able to finance the purchase of farm homes.

The conference should not have been called. The record clearly shows that farm-land values have neither kept pace with commodity prices, with the Nation's farm income, nor the national income of this Republic. The Governor of the Farm Credit Administration is the person responsible for the conference.

Suppose the president of Standard Oil Co. should announce to the public that Standard Oil stock was not worth the money it is now bringing in the market place. Suppose the president of General Motors or the president of any of the thousands of other big corporations of America were to announce to the public that an investment in the stocks of their companies was not a sound investment; that the investment of such stocks would be inflationary and unsafe. Do not you know that the directors of such corporations would throw out such an unfaithful officer.

The truth is, this man, Ivy Duggan, is poison ivy to the farmers of this Nation. He is a perfect example of a "tomtit" in a top-flight job. The farmers of America should immediately demand his resignation.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Is not this a clear example of the inconsistencies now existing within the administration all around?

Mr. COOLEY. This is a glaring inconsistency, I may say to my friend. I am a good party man and I do not criticize unless I think I am justified, but how on earth can a man say he is consistent when he asks Congress to liberalize his lending power and then tells private enterprise to be careful and tighten up the lending by private agencies?

According to press reports, there has been a 92-percent rise in farm-land prices above the 1935–39 average. Even if this percentage is accurate, it does not indicate that land values have reached inflationary levels. As I have said, land values have not kept pace with either farm income or with the national income. According to information furnished to me by an agricultural economics statistician of the Department of Agriculture, cash receipts from farm marketings in 1935 were $7,086,000,000 and in 1946, $23,933,000,000—an increase of 238 percent. Net income to farmers in 1935 was $5,052,000,000; in 1946, $15,144,000,000—or an increase of 200 percent. The national income in 1935 was $56,398,000,000 and in 1946 it was $165,000,000,000—or an increase of 195 percent.

Land values have not kept pace with commodity prices. Cotton in 1935 sold for 11.09 cents per pound and on May 15, 1947, cotton sold for 33.50 cents per pound, an increase of 202 percent. Wheat in 1935–39 sold for 83.1 cents per bushel and on May 15, 1947, wheat sold for $2.39 per bushel an increase of 188 percent. Tobacco in 1935 averaged 18.4 cents per pound, and in 1946, 44.6 cents per pound, an increase of 142 percent. I do not have available the information showing the situation with regard to the increase in value of stock in American corporations, but I make the assertion that there has been a far greater increase in the value of stocks of corporations and also in the value of city property generally than there has been in the value of farm land.

Land values have not kept pace with manufactured articles. From 1935 to 1947 there was an increase in the price of men's overalls of 164 percent, of work shirts 163 percent, of women's house dresses 220 percent, unbleached muslin 216 percent, sheets 190 percent, cotton blankets 106 percent, comforters 149 percent.

Certainly farm land values have increased between the years 1935 and 1947. During a substantial portion of that time our Nation was at war and there was an unusually large demand for the products of both our fields and factories. Even though we are now in the postwar period, the world-wide demand for agricultural commodities is just as great, if not greater, than during the war period. If American farmers are expected to supply domestic, civilian, and military needs, and to make a substantial contribution to the food and fiber supply of the world, there is every reason to believe that farm income should continue at or about the present level. We cannot hope to support the vital functions of the Government and to pay the tremendous national debt hanging over this country with declining commodity prices and wage levels. We must maintain our national income at or about the present level. If our agricultural economy is wrecked or thrown out of balance, it will have an immediate effect upon our national income and upon the country's economy.

This is a matter of great importance and if the officials of the private lending agencies of America are expected to follow the lead of the Government in the field of farm lending, it is only natural for them to want to know which way the Government is leading. How can they tell which way the Government is leading when one official of the Government is advocating more liberal loans, before a congressional committee, while another official of the Government is telling private lending agencies to bear down on farm loans and to stop making such liberal loans on farm property? In this important matter, officials of the Government should at least be consistent.

Frankly, I have observed no inflation in farm values in the community in which I live, and I believe that every acre of North Carolina land is worth every dollar that it will bring on the present-day market.

Mr. Duggan should read again the remarks he made before the House Committee on Agriculture in testifying in behalf of H. R. 3330 on May 15, 1947, less than 30 days ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN] provides for the introduction of a sales tax in the District of Columbia. As he said at the outset, it is a tax that will raise $15,000,000. The committee gave a great deal of consideration to the sales tax. Our greatest difficulty has been in trying to find some equitable way to spread the tax load as we feel we have done in the section dealing with the real estate tax, the income tax, and Federal contribution. With the adoption of the amendment to the income tax title we are about one million away from balancing the budget in the fiscal year 1948. With the income tax deleted we still have other sources of revenue which have been recommended by the Commissioners that are still open for consideration by the Committee. We feel, however, that this bill ought to go to the Senate but not containing a tax so wide in scope as a sales tax exempting practically nothing and raising $15,000,000 when we need to raise only $1,000,000. Under the revised schedule that we submitted with the report on this bill we found a surplus at the end of the year of $2,108,000. If you take $3,100,000 away by reason of the revision of the income tax title of this bill it would leave us with a deficiency of only $1,000,000 to meet in order to balance the budget, yet this sales tax amendment provides $15,000,000.

The gentleman from Washington says that our bill does not balance the budget. We are providing the means of revenue by which all the proper requirements in the 1948 budget will be met.

Not only are we providing means by which the 1949 requirements will be met; but we are providing in this bill provisions for an expenditure of $25,000,000 in capital outlay considering funds now available; of that amount $7,000,000 will be available to spend this year for school buildings. I have in mind also, when the gentleman speaks about the overcrowded conditions of the District, that in 1938 there were 92,000 school children in the District of Columbia. Today there are only 90,000. Yet during that period of time we have spent huge sums of money.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The gentleman does not want to misinform the House.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HORAN. Dr. Corning said that is an illusion, that those statements are not backed up by facts. He said that as a matter of fact, and everybody knows it, the birth rate has been on the increase and instead of having less school children there is going to be an increase.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I will answer that by citing figures I received from the School Department today verifying facts I received only a week ago. These figures come from the School Department: In 1938 there were 92,178 children in the public schools of the District of Columbia. As of May 1947, according to the School Department, there are 90,764 children, 1,400 less in the schools of the District of Columbia than there were 10 years ago. During the 11-year period of time, 1937 to 1938, inclusive, for school construction, that is for capital outlay, we have provided $18,611,770. This year there is available for school construction over $5,000,000. In other words, available in 11 years for school construction, at a time when the school population was decreasing, over $23,000,000. It seems to me that that is a lot of money for school construction in any city at a time when the school population is actually less than it was 10 years ago.

Mr. Chairman, this sales-tax bill is a new venture into the tax problem, raising as it does over $15,000,000, which is a fair estimate, when we need only $1,000,000. We ought to defeat the pending amendment this afternoon and permit the bill to go to the Senate for further consideration.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I may say that I had reserved time on this amendment and the gentleman obtained his time before I did.

The CHAIRMAN. The last 5 minutes is available to the committee, but the gentleman from Massachusetts may yield to the gentleman from California for a statement, if he so desires.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, this bill of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN] which he has offered as an amendment is a very comprehensive one. I would not be able to state exactly all that is in it. Nevertheless, I think the mere fact that the amendment will raise so much money is a mighty good argument in favor of it, so that ultimately we can reduce the real-estate tax in the District of Columbia instead of increasing it and cutting out the income tax altogether, letting those who use the services of the city of Washington pay for the running of the city. If this will raise fifteen or twenty million dollars it is a mighty good deal.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. What the gentleman is suggesting is that we completely rewrite the tax bill on the floor of the House this afternoon and not have in mind anything at all in respect to the equity of the taxes which we are suggesting. It was brought out on the floor of the House this afternoon that the real-estate tax in the District of Columbia has not been increased since 1927; that the ratio of assessed value to real value in the open market is only about 70 percent of its actual value, and that the adjusted rate is lower than any city, with one exception, in the United States with a population of 500,000 or more.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BUCK. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: If the Horan amendment is adopted, would not that permit the elimination of article VI, which is Federal contribution, altogether?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Of course, as I say, if you want to write the whole tax bill over on the floor of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HORAN) there were—ayes 38, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE II—INCREASE IN RATE OF TAXATION OF REAL AND TANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY

For eacn of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1948, and June 30, 1949, respectively, the rate of taxation imposed for the District of Columbia on real and tangible personal property shall not be less than 2 percent on the assessed value of such property.

ARTICLE III—AMENDMENT TO MOTOR FUEL TAX ACT

SECTION 1. Section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for a tax on motor vehicle fuels sold within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved April 23, 1924, as amended, be, and the same hereby is, further amended by striking out the numeral "2" and inserting in lieu thereof the numeral "4."

SEC. 2. Section 14 of said act approved April 23, 1924, is hereby amended by striking out the numeral "2" and inserting in lieu thereof the numeral "4."

SEC. 3. Section 1 of the act entitled "An act increasing motor vehicle fuel taxes in the District of Columbia for the period January 1, 1942, to June 30, 1951," approved December 26, 1941, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. This article shall become effective on the first day of the first month following the approval of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 84, line 14, strike out all of article III and insert:

"ARTICLE III—INCREASE IN MOTOR-FUEL TAX

"SEC. 1. The tax of 2 cents per gallon on motor-vehicle fuels within the District of Columbia, sold or otherwise disposed of by an importer, or used by him in a motor vehicle operated for hire or for commercial purposes, imposed by the act entitled 'An act to provide for a tax on motor-vehicle fuels sold within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' approved April 23, 1924, as amended, and increased by the act entitled 'An act increasing motor-vehicle-fuel taxes in the District of Columbia for the period January 1, 1942, to June 30, 1951,' approved December 26, 1941, to 3 cents per gallon effective January 1, 1942, and extending to and including June 30, 1951, is hereby further increased to 4 cents per gallon effective on the first day of the first month following the approval of this act and extending to and including June 30, 1952, and thereafter the tax shall be 3 cents per gallon. When, pursuant to section 14 of such act, gasoline or other motor-vehicle fuel is sold by an agency of the United States within the District of Columbia, for use in privately owned vehicles, such agency of the United States shall, by agreement with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, arrange for the collection of the full amount of the tax per gallon herein authorized to be imposed and as increased by this section, and shall account to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia for the proceeds of such tax collections.

"SEC. 2. Section 1 of the act entitled 'An act increasing motor-vehicle-fuel taxes in the District of Columbia for the period January 1, 1942, to June 30, 1951,' approved December 26, 1941, is hereby repealed."

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this article close in 15 minutes, the last 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the members of the subcommittee and the full committee and the Commissioners have failed to prove to me that it would best serve the interest of the District of Columbia to build superstructure highways of the latest model over the District of Columbia. I understand they want to use this extra tax to build elevated highways and a few other super-duper model highways around Washington. My State has been unable to secure the approval of the Bureau of Public Roads for erecting additional concrete and steel bridges. I can see no reason why they should approve more superhighways in Washington if the States cannot get approval of this appeal at the present time. You can spend $5 now and get about $2 worth of construction. I just cannot see where it is so urgent that we should build additional highways in the District of Columbia at such extreme cost. I do not doubt that we need new school buildings and we need new construction of other types, and I am for getting more money for the District of Columbia, but I just do not believe that it is so urgent that we have additional highways in Washington that we should impose another cent tax on gasoline at this time and deprive the States of material they can use for much needed concrete bridges and other structures the District of Columbia has been having during wartime. As I stated this morning, the District has constructed over $10,000,000 worth of highways during the war, although the States were not permitted to construct any type of bridges whatsoever.

I just cannot go along with this amendment. I think it should be stricken from the bill. I promise to go along with increased taxes or doing anything else to help the people of the District of Columbia get additional highway construction when material gets down to normal where you can get a dollar's worth of material for a dollar. If it were very urgent I would be for it today, but, as I stated before, I just cannot see why this provision should be in the bill when the Highway Department has a surplus of funds at the present time. With the Government funds matching, this fund amounts to around $8,000,000 a year. I cannot see how they can spend any more than that in 1 year when all the streets are paved already and the only thing they can spend it for is building additional bridges, which we need, I will admit, but they can wait until at least one more year, since we have passed the critical war days when we had unusual traffic in the District of Columbia.

I hope this amendment will be voted down. The people of the District can be assured that Congress will assist them in every way possible when material is where it should be. I do not think the District of Columbia needs any more lights or traffic signs. I understand the District has more lights than any other city in the world. I know they are not synchronized as they should be. I am not in favor of giving the Highway Department any more money until we get what we have under control. We have one item in this bill of $1,800,000 for miscellaneous expenses that can cover a multitude of sins. I want to wait until we get some more information on this work before we vote additional funds.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, there is no justification for raising the gasoline tax in the District of Columbia at this time when revenues from the present tax rate are increasing in such an encouraging manner. Already motor fuel tax receipts in the District have reached the previous peak level, which was achieved in 1942. At that time, you will recall, we granted an increase in the gasoline tax from 2 cents per gallon to the present 3 cents to help the Highway Department carry out the very same program for which they are now asking a further increase in the tax. Due to the effect of the war, of course, there was a falling off in collections, but now we are witnessing a resurgence in the funds available from 3-cent gasoline tax.

At the present time the situation is entirely different from conditions which existed when the tax was last increased. We are now in a period of rapidly expanding gasoline consumption, and the receipts from the present tax rate is bringing in more funds than ever before for highway construction and maintenance purposes. Also, it seems obvious from a study of the projected revenues from the current gasoline tax and other highway-use levies that enough funds will be available from existing sources to carry out an extensive program of highway improvement in the District over the next few years. This seems particularly true when it is considered that it is impossible to proceed with a number of the projects at this time because of the inflationary level of construction costs.

I understand that it has been necessary recently for the Highway Department to turn down bids on certain planned improvements for this reason. As you know, the Public Roads Administration has felt that highway construction should not be performed at just any cost, so that when bids are too far out of line as compared with 1940 they refuse to approve the project for Federal aid.

The people of the District are no different from those in any other part of the country when it comes to feeling the pinch from the rising cost of living. The mere fact that most people agree that it would be nice to have immediately all the highway improvements that are planned for the 7 or 8 years cannot eliminate the other much more important factors in this whole problem. In other words, we cannot ignore the added burden that a 33⅓-percent increase in the gasoline tax here will impose on the motor-vehicle users at a time when all the Government's efforts are being devoted to bringing about a reduction in living costs through the Nation.

Moreover, it must be obvious to even the most amateur economist that larger highway funds from a gasoline tax increase now would only serve to compete with other construction funds in bidding up prices to still more inflated levels. This, of course, would mean that the people could expect to receive less for their money in the way of highway improvements than would be the case if we were a little less frantic about doing work now which could and should be postponed until conditions become more normal.

Another way in which an increase in the gasoline tax would reflect to the disadvantage of the general public is the effect it would have on transportation costs. All foods, fuel, clothing, and so forth, moves to some extent by motor vehicle in its journey from the producer to the consumer. Any increase in the gasoline tax, therefore, necessarily would result in higher prices of essential commodities.

When the funds which the District of Columbia receives from its present gasoline tax are compared with the total motor fuel tax collections in a number of the States, it becomes apparent how ridiculous is the plea that the District cannot get along on its current tax. For example, the District's gasoline-tax revenues in 1946 actually were greater than in seven States—Delaware, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Wyoming. And the highway mileage for which these States are responsible is many times that of the District Highway Department.

Considering all special levies imposed upon the highway users in the District of Columbia, the tax burden is already very heavy. This is shown by the fact that total taxes per vehicle for private and commercial cars and trucks amounted to over $85 last year which is a third or more higher than the average of such taxes throughout the country. Under these circumstances, it seems unfair to further increase this burden at the present time, particularly since additional funds are not needed now to carry out the Highway Department's long-range program.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by the committee would increase the gasoline tax of the District of Columbia from the present basic law of 2 cents to 4 cents until June 30, 1952. During the war, in order to get increased revenues for highway purposes in the District, the gasoline tax was increased from 2 to 3 cents. That 3-cent tax was to expire in 1951 and then it was to revert to 2 cents as formerly provided.

The bill as it was originally presented to the committee by the subcommittee contained a permanent provision for a 4-cent tax. In the consideration of the amendment for this increase before the committee, the committee agreed and reported the amendment to the bill to apply the increased tax of 4 cents for a period of 5 years.

We all recognize the fact that we must have highway and street improvements in the District of Columbia. The only question in my mind in connection with this amendment is whether or not the District can actually and will actually expend the money during this period of time, and whether it is needed or justified.

It is proposed that we will have this increase until June 30, 1952, at which time we will then revert back to the 3-cent tax in the District. But if you read the report as it is presented, you will find the real capital outlay beginning in 1950 and running through to 1955. It is not possible to understand why it is necessary to increase the gasoline tax in the District of Columbia by 1 cent for the next 5 years and then when the actual capital outlay on street and structures and improvements begin that it can be reduced to 3 cents. That just does not make sense to me.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Can the gentleman inform the committee what the tax is in Maryland and Virginia on gasoline?

Mr. HARRIS. The tax is 6 cents in Virginia and 5 cents in Maryland.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. What is the present tax in the District of Columbia?

Mr. HARRIS. It is 3 cents, and this increases it to 4 cents. That is the only question in my mind, Mr. Chairman, in connection with this increase. I do not hesitate for a moment to say that if we need the money for these capital outlays, certainly we should go ahead and provide for it in some way that would permit the highway department of the District to proceed with these improvements. I do not think, however, we should take it out on increasing tax on gasoline. We are trying to reduce taxes and reduce expenditures when possible. I say again this places our Republican friends in an unusual position. They have been "squalling" their heads off for tax reductions and reduction in expenditures, but here they insist on increasing instead of reducing. We have had a pretty fair amount of construction on our streets and highways during the war in the District of Columbia. As was pointed out a moment ago by the ranking minority member of our committee, we are now confronted with the high cost of construction and shortage of materials as we have been in the past. They tell you that the big project here at Dupont Circle, which was initiated some time ago, must be deferred until 1950. Why? Some say because they do not have the funds. But yet they say they are going to postpone this until 1950 because they do not have the funds, and shortly thereafter they are going to reduce the tax and bring it down to the old figure of 3 cents. It just does not make sense. It does not add up to a program.

Furthermore, we have an annual revenue from the gasoline tax in the District of Columbia of approximately $5,000,000 or just a little more. We have the apportionment from the Federal Highway Act of approximately $3,000,000 annually for 1946, 1947, and 1948, which means that for the District of Columbia you have an annual outlay of improvements for streets and highways totaling between $9,000,000 and $10,000,000.

I maintain that with all the efforts and the fine work of the highway department of the District of Columbia, they will not be able to actually expend the increased amount of money that would be derived from this proposed increased tax. This amendment should be defeated and further consideration given as to the need of the highway program and how best to provide for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] to close debate.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this is the very much discussed gasoline tax. The present gasoline tax in the District is 3 cents. It was 2 cents prior to 1940. In 1940 an additional 1 cent was put on to run until 1951. This bill provides a permanent 3-cent gas tax, and an increase of 1 cent beyond that, up to and including the fiscal year 1952.

This is one of the revenue bills to which we have given a great deal of thought and consideration. As a matter of fact, the petroleum industry was well represented and right on the job. We gave their representatives a great deal of time, to see whether or not there could be any possible way by which we could reconcile the outlays or expenditures in the next 3 or 4 years with the revenue from the 3-cent gasoline tax. I am frank to say that after three different days, with a restudy of all the figures they could possibly possess and a reexamination of all the expenditures presented to me by the Highway Department, we had to come to the conclusion that there is no way by which all these major projects we have heard so much about, such as the two highway bridges to Virginia, the K Street elevated project, the South Capitol Street project, and the Dupont Circle project could be carried on. There is absolutely no way by which those major projects can be carried on unless we do find some way to increase the revenue. To that end this 1-cent gasoline tax increase will provide about $1,600,000 a year. If the increase is not made, I tell you frankly, and I express the point of view of the District officials, that the work on the South Capitol Street job or one of the other major projects will have to be stopped. The Dupont Circle job that we hear so much about in the newspapers, which they thought might be started next year or the year after, even with the 1-cent gasoline tax increase cannot start until 1950.

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand the expenditure sheets from the period 1947 up to and including the last quarter of 1950. I say to you that we have given a great deal of thought and study to this question and have made a complete analysis of all the facts in order to determine in our own minds whether or not that increase could be justified. We have come to the conclusion that there is no way to avoid it if we want these projects, which have already been authorized by the Congress, to be carried through to completion. We must not forget that in the District of Columbia we have had a tremendous expansion in miles of streets since 1937 when there were 826 miles (based on 30-foot width). There are at present 990 miles, an increase of 164 miles in 10 years. The population since 1940 has increased from 663,000 to 860,000 people at the present time an increase of over 200,000 people. It seems to me, with the accelerated cost in labor, material, and supplies, and everything else that goes into construction of these highways, there must be some additional way by which we can develop revenue by which we can complete these heavy projects that the District of Columbia has planned ahead. The authorization and contracts have been entered into for some of these projects. The only way we can carry them through is to increase the gasoline tax for the next 5 years to 4 cents a gallon. When we do that, we find we are below the gasoline tax in Maryland which is 5 cents. In Virginia it is 6 cents. I trust the report of the committee in this regard will be accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCMILLAN of South Carolina) there were—ayes 103, noes 23.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE IV—AMENDMENT TO MOTOR VEHICLE INSPECTION ACT

SEC. 1. Section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the annual inspection of all motor vehicles in the District of Columbia," approved February 18, 1938, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"That at the time of the registration of each motor vehicle or trailer there shall be levied and collected a fee known as the 'inspection fee' of $1."

SEC. 2. Section 3 of said act is hereby amended by inserting immediately after the words "motor vehicles" the words "and trailers."

SEC. 3. Section 4 of said act is hereby amended by inserting immediately after the words "motor vehicles" the words "and trailers."

SEC. 4. This article shall become effective 30 days after the approval of this act.

ARTICLE V—INCREASE IN WATER RENTS AND ASSESSMENTS FOR WATER MAINS

SEC. 1. Water rents charged by the District of Columbia for water used in the District of Columbia on and after July 1, 1947, shall be increased 25 percent over the rents now in effect. Whenever the application of this increase to an existing rate results in a rate with a fractional part of a cent, the rate shall be, if the fraction be one-half cent or more, the nearest higher amount not containing a fraction, and, if the fraction be less than one-half cent, the nearest lower amount not containing a fraction. In computing the rent for the consumption of water in excess of the minimum amount allowed by law for metered service, if the rent is charged for a period beginning prior to July 1, 1947, and ending thereafter, the rent for such excess consumption shall be prorated.

SEC. 2. The rate of assessment for laying or constructing water mains in the District of Columbia under the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the laying of water mains and service sewers, and for other purposes," approved April 22, 1904, is hereby established at $1.90 per linear foot for any water mains constructed or laid on and after July 1, 1947.

ARTICLE VI—FEDERAL PAYMENT

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for each fiscal year thereafter there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, as the annual payment by the United States toward defraying the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, the sum of $12,000,000, of which $11,000,000 shall be credited to the general fund of the District of Columbia and $1,000,000 shall be credited to the water fund of the District of Columbia, established by law (title 43, ch. 15, D. C. Code, 1940 ed.).

ARTICLE VII—SEPARABILITY CLAUSE

If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to the other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revert to page 22 for the purpose of striking out two words.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I realize the time is getting late but I feel that before we approve this bill there should be at least a word or two in the RECORD regarding the increase in the water tax. Under the provisions of this bill the District is to embark on a $45,000,000 major waterworks construction program. In order to finance the program we provided for an increase of 25 percent in the rate plus a million dollar Federal contribution. From these revenues we will be able on a pay-as-you-go policy to carry on this program over a period of 15 or 20 years and save the taxpayers of the District about $10,000,000 in interest charges that the District would have been compelled to pay if the program of borrowing money was approved as suggested in the bill we had before us.

I just wanted this brief explanation to appear in the RECORD as to the reason for the increase in the water rate and the increase of $1,000,000 in the Federal contribution for water purposes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ARENDS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3737) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Does any member of the minority desire to offer a motion to recommit? [After a pause.] Is the gentleman from Washington opposed to the bill?

Mr. HORAN. I am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HORAN moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia with instructions to report back the bill with the inclusion of more revenue.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

THE ELECTION IN THE THIRD DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, the election of Republican RUSSELL V. MACK in Washington State's Third Congressional District is a repudiation of the Truman administration and radicalism.

Do not forget that President Truman endorsed the candidacy of the loser, New Deal Democrat Charles R. Savage. The Democratic national organization made a desperate campaign on behalf of Mr. Savage.

This election again shows that the Democratic Party nationally is dominated by radicals with their ruinous policy of tax, spend, and elect.

The people again have shown where they stand on that kind of government. What happened in the Washington congressional district is what will happen across the country. Radicals will capture Democratic nominations and the people will continue to vote Republican as the sure way to keep the American way of life.

During the Washington State campaign the issues of sane retrenchment in Government expenditures, relief from outrageous tax burdens and sensible labor legislation, were fought out. Mr. MACK was and is in harmony with the Republican Party.

Mr. Truman certainly would not have endorsed Mr. Savage if he did not believe that, all issues considered, he wanted Mr. Savage elected. The people rejected his plea.

President Truman presently has his opportunity to repudiate Henry Wallace by signing the labor and tax relief bills which the Republican Congress initiated and passed by huge majorities in response to the will of the people and by supporting us in our efforts to cut the cost of government.

Mr. MACK's election is a timely reminder to President Truman that the people are sick and tired of the tax-eating bureaucracy that surrounds him.

The people are for the Republican economy and tax-reducing program. Vetoes of the tax relief and labor bill will be interpreted as expediences to placate the radical masters of the Democratic Party.

As majority leader of the House of Representatives, I congratulate the people of the Third Congressional District of Washington State in sending Mr. MACK to Washington to help us reestablish sanity in government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on the subject of rural electrification, and to include a table of statistics.

ABSENCE DURING QUORUM CALL

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, when the call of the House came today I was unavoidably absent, being before the Supreme Court of the United States moving the admission of a constituent. I want the RECORD to show why I was absent during the roll call.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LODGE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include two statements.

ABSENCE DURING QUORUM CALL

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Speaker, at the time of the roll call this morning I was also in the Supreme Court moving the admission of a member of the Philadelphia bar, therefore unable to be present.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.] is recognized for 20 minutes.

LATIN-AMERICAN POLICY

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Speaker, have we hit on a consistent policy in Latin America? Is it the maintenance of dictatorships?

A message from the President to the Congress submits a program for the arming of Latin-American Nations, contained in a bill to be entitled "The Inter-American Military Cooperation Act."

If enacted into law it might better be entitled "The Inter-American Meddling Catastrophe."

On a recent national holiday in Brazil, nearly as many paraded in a military show of force as we now have under arms in the United States Army. A friend of mine said to the Bolivian Ambassador, "Whom is this intended to impress?" Said the Bolivian, "Why not ask my friend the Ambassador from Argentina, who is standing next to me? He knows." "Are you impressed, Mr. Ambassador?" said this inquiring gentleman. The Argentine Ambassador replied, "Not particularly, sir."

Well, perhaps he was and perhaps he was not. But he had seen pass in review a mighty show of force including scores of United States tanks and massed weapons, marked "Made in the U. S. A." and presented by us to Brazil. The exigencies of war may have been ample justification for all of this matériel being in Brazil, but its use on this occasion sharpens the point. There is none of it in Argentina. This may be as it should be.

But Argentina has been purchasing Meteor IV jet fighters from Great Britain and negotiations are reported to be pending for the sale of warships by Great Britain to the Argentine Republic.

What is our purpose in arming our neighbors?

Surely not for aggression—all of us, and the administration first of all, would deny that such is our intent.

For defense? Against whom?

Against attacks from abroad?

A prominent Central American said to me recently: "With the kind of arms you're sending us we couldn't begin to defend ourselves against any major power. We know—and you know—that your country would have to step in and do that for us. We strongly suspect that you are simply keeping the current regime in power, whether our people think it is good or bad. How will we ever get a bad man out of office after this?"

Is this, then, a program to prevent the spread of Communist thought throughout Latin America? If it were that, and could be operated effectively, it would command as powerful support as did the Greek-Turkish program.

The Truman program to legitimatize gun-running cannot be directed against communism, if it is a continuation of our present arms-selling program, because one of our favorite customers appears to be Chile, which is paying us $746,000 for equipment that cost United States taxpayers $6,000,000. Chile is the first country in Latin America to welcome Communist members in a recent cabinet. And we give Chile—at about 12 cents on the dollar—landing craft, attack cargo ships, and combat ordnance for one infantry regiment and one field artillery battalion.

And it is no secret that a left-wing government maintains itself in power in Guatemala by tanks and guns generously supplied by us at a time when they might have done more good in United States hands overseas.

Presumably we will give arms to the same countries to whom we lent them or sold them; therefore we will continue to build up the left-wing elements in Chile and Guatemala.

If the program is intended to mean the arming of any and all countries in Latin America, we can pick up—where perhaps we never left off—in Nicaragua. There Dictator Somoza has just kicked out his hand-picked President, using soldiers whom our United States Marines had taught the acts of war.

A policy of helping all without discrimination means helping Argentina, too. And what will our liberals think of that? Certainly they will much prefer to have Argentina buy her guns instead of butter from Britain. Thus she may keep up in the arms race with the United States-aided neighbors.

And while right-wing Argentina puts an economic squeeze on left-wing Chile, as she is now reported to be doing, do we arm Argentina so that she may save the money she is now spending in Britain or do we arm Chile? Or do we arm both?

The British policy, in its high old imperialist prime, was to arm both.

If this new Truman doctrine is "Arm everybody," is that progress?

Up to now, the right wing government in one Latin-American country has known well enough what its left-wing neighbor is doing—both of them—as in the case of Nicaragua and Guatemala—have been loading up with arms donations from Uncle Sam.

Is our future program to include the sending of machine guns to maintain a left-wing government in Cuba while we send military technicians to the Dominican Republic to make certain that Trujillo's tryanny does not totter?

And what connection does any of this have with the good-neighbor policy?

If it be contended that the idea is to avert the growth of communism, how do we know when the Army and Navy equipment which we supply to Brazil may not be taken over by Luis Carlos Prestes, the Communist leader there?

Or when the Communist former cabinet members in Chile may return to power—and to control of the United States-given military supplies?

But the State Department will protest that is not our project. The President's message refers to our "determination to guard against placing weapons of war in the hands of any groups who may use them to oppose the peaceful and democratic principles to which the United States and other American nations have so often subscribed"; the message also says that our arms distribution will not be "indiscriminate."

So we are being told, perhaps, that not everyone will get to ride the gravy train, at the same time that we are being assured that our purpose is to standardize the weapons used throughout the Western Hemisphere—that is, to maintain a market for our munitions makers?

If our purpose is simply to standardize weapons of war in use in the Western Hemisphere, why do we not proceed as we have with other American problems—should not such a proposal be presented to the next Pan-American conference and if our cause is good and our arguments logical we may arrive at the desired result without pressing our armaments upon our neighbors? As surely as we arm one nation we will arouse demands in all of the other nations on her borders for similar weapons from us. As presented in the Presidential message, the program has no end.

If the vague terms of this message can be taken to mean that we will arm only those American Republics we happen to like best at the moment, then we are about to use our tax receipts to buy ourselves some temporary friends and some permanent enemies.

The new Truman doctrine faces backward to the bad old days of intervention into the internal affairs of other American Republics. The one difference is that where once we sent the soldiers now we arm our neighbors and tell them to use their own soldiers, in the event of war or revolution. Our new Truman proposal ought to be labeled the "Wimpy doctrine: Let's you and him fight."

For we cannot truthfully claim that once we supply the arms they will never be used. There have been more than two score wars and armed revolts in the Western Hemisphere since 1932. Napoleon said: "You can do anything with a bayonet except sit on it."

No one will sit indefinitely on all this bargain counter hardware.

Let us not deceive ourselves. The purpose behind this distribution of arms is not to maintain freedom but stability. Save in a few instances, such as Mexico, Costa Rica and Uruguay, for example, our outpouring of military and naval supplies, furnished gratis or cut-rate, will be used to keep in power the current going dictatorships, many of which have survived as long as they have by virtue of our largesse with lend-lease weapons.

Has anybody thought to ask the opinion of Juan Pablo, the Latin American man-in-the-street? Juan Pablo, like John Q. Public, knows that the chance of establishing true democracies where they do not now exist, will diminish in proportion as we pour armed assistance into the hands of established dictatorships.

Do we distrust the "common man" so much that we must rush to prop up every tyrant who oppresses him?

As is to be expected, no estimate of the possible cost of this vast program accompanies the Presidential message. A partial estimate obtained later from the War Department guesses that it would cost about $10,000,000 a year for 10 years to standardize the weapons of the nations in this hemisphere with those of the United States and to train the other nations' soldiers, sailors, and airmen here in the United States.

Yesterday the Navy Department announced that 4 cruisers and 117 other vessels are ready for transfer to Latin-American Nations. These are valued at $21,115,020. It is not clear what they may have cost us in total.

Even so, these items total over $121,000,000 as a partial installment on the cost of plunging this hemisphere into numerous conflicts—for all of which we shall be roundly blamed by the participants, or at least by the losers.

The $121,000,000 does not include the cost of so-called surplus weapons, the new gifts to be pressed upon our neighvalue of which may well exceed a billion dollars for this surplus property alone.

And this is only a drop in the bucket. There will of course be new weapons and bors; there will be military, naval, and air missions, civilian liaison and clerical staffs, and the State Department will find it necessary to enlarge all of its embassies, consulates, and legations to take care of the new intervention business.

Nor must we forget that the State Department will require substantial funds for information and propaganda. Someone will have to explain how the new weapons are to be used only for the most peaceful pursuits.

The entire program may ultimately run into billions and do much to solve the unemployment situation for the politically faithful.

I have tried to back up the administration's foreign policy as presented to this Congress. But I cannot follow these new vagaries. This slap-happy policy of arming our friends against each other—for that is how it will work out—is the last straw.

I have had enough, Mr. Speaker. I am not going to support a policy which has not been weighed carefully for determination of the many dangers and disadvantages it holds for us, in loss of hemispheric good will and national resources.

There is no sign of a reasoned, consistent over-all policy here, unless there be consistency in a policy dedicated to the maintenance of dictatorships.

If we follow this Presidential proposal, we not only toss away our friends and our dollars—we take leave of our senses.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BREHM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLEVENGER (at the request of Mr. HALLECK), for 4 days, on account of important official business.

To Mr. GAMBLE (at the request of Mr. ARENDS), indefinitely, on account of death in family.

To Messrs. HINSHAW, O'HARA, HARDIE SCOTT, BULWINKLE, and PRIEST, for 3 days, on account of official business in connection with transportation investigation.

To Mr. LANDIS (at the request of Mr. SPRINGER), for 10 days, on account of death in his family.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BRYSON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

PROHIBITION OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, the problem of liquor traffic is greater today than at any other time in the history of our Nation. Our Nation is drinking itself to death, and it is my opinion that the only adequate way to handle the liquor traffic is to wipe it out completely—to prohibit it by constitutional law.

Our homes, our churches, our schools, and our institutions of government are suffering as a result of the liquor traffic. The only thing that is being built up under the present system is the profits of the alcoholic-beverage traffic whose sales have increased from $3,500,000,000 during the year 1941 to more than $8,000,000,000 in 1946.

Divorce rates, broken homes, and crime are steadily rising, and those factors can to a great extent be attributed to the liquor traffic. Read your daily newspapers and see how many of the major crimes are directly connected with the consumption of intoxicating beverages.

I am introducing today a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to prohibit the manufacture, sale, transportation, or possession of beverages containing more than one-half of 1 percent alcohol by volume.

The problem of beverage alcohol is one that has concerned this country almost from the days of its first settlement. The first prohibition law was passed by the General Court of Massachusetts in 1637. It prohibited the sale of "sack or strong water" to Indians. The Virginia Constitution of 1676 prohibited the manufacture and sale of "ardent spirits."

In 1808 the first temperance society was founded at Moreau—Saratoga—N. Y. It was known as "the Union Temperance Society of Moreau and Northumberland."

In 1829 the selectmen of each town in the State of Maine were authorized to decide whether or not liquor selling should be prohibited.

In 1833 a congressional temperance society, composed entirely of Members of Congress, was organized by Secretary of War Lewis Cass, of Michigan. In 1840 the Washingtonian Temperance Movement was inaugurated at Baltimore, and some 150,000 men throughout the United States took the pledge.

In 1847 all but one county of Iowa voted dry under local option. In 1850 Vermont went dry by 8,000 votes and throughout the 1850's many States passed prohibitory laws, including the State of New York. Most of these laws were defeated by technicalities.

In 1856 the movement for national constitutional prohibition was inaugurated by the Sons of Temperance.

In 1372 the Catholic Total Abstinence Union was organized.

In 1873 occurred the famous Woman's Crusade when bands of praying women closed many saloons, and out of which grew the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

In 1873 the Legislature of the State of Minnesota enacted a law providing for a special tax on saloon keepers, the funds realized to be used for an inebriate asylum.

On December 27, 1876, the first step toward the enactment of the eighteenth amendment was taken when a Member of the other body rose from his knees at a prayer meeting held in a house on the site of which the Supreme Court now stands, went to the Capitol and introduced a bill providing for the submission to the States of a prohibitory resolution and made a speech in its behalf.

In 1879 the House of Representatives of the United States, by a vote of 128 to 99, created a House Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic. The same year the National Liquor Dealers Association was organized at Cincinnati, Ohio, and the following year they got an alcohol-leakage bill adopted, under which later many scandals arose by reason of the alcoholic-beverage traffic cheating the Government out of taxes.

In 1882 again a resolution for a national constitutional prohibition amendment was introduced in the other body. In 1885 this was reintroduced and the committee reported the resolution out favorably.

In 1888 the same resolution was introduced in the other body, and Representative J. A. Pickler, of South Dakota, introduced it in the House. Again it received a favorable report from the committee of the other body.

In 1913 the resolution which afterward became the eighteenth amendment was introduced in the other body, and in the House it was introduced by Representative Richmond Pearson Hobson. The Hobson resolution received 197 votes for and 189 against, failing of the two-thirds vote necessary for passage.

The same resolution was introduced in the House in 1915 by Representatives Edwin Y. Webb, of North Carolina, and Addison T. Smith, of Idaho; and in the Senate, by two Members in the other body. Both resolutions were reported favorably by the respective Judiciary Committees, but died on the calendar.

But in 1917 the same resolution reintroduced in both Houses was adopted 282 to 128 in the House; 65 to 20 in the other body, was submitted to the States, and finally became law. It remained the law of the land until 1933, when it was repealed by the twenty-first amendment.

This history has been repeated to show of what slow, gradual growth was the movement that finally led up to an overwhelming determined majority of the common people of this country taking a decision to completely and nationally outlaw beverage alcohol in 1920 and holding to it for 13 years.

The adoption of a national constitutional prohibition in 1917, which was quickly ratified by the required number of States, came after 28 States had already adopted State-wide prohibition; in 7 other States more than a majority of the people were living in dry territory in counties, villages, and townships; and in still 3 other States a majority of the members of the State legislatures represented legislative districts which were under local prohibition by a majority vote of the people.

The upswing toward State prohibition began about 1906, 11 years before the eighteenth amendment was adopted. By 1913, when the amendment was introduced, there were 9 dry States, with a population of 14,685,961; 31 other States which under local prohibition had a population living in dry territory of 26,446,810. But the swift multiplication of dry States ending in Nation-wide prohibition took only 4 years—from 1913 to 1917.

It was a people's movement. Political leaders for the most part ignored or resisted it. The people were led only by ministers, priests, converted drunkards, and nonenfranchised women. But they raised up for themselves leaders and devised techniques. For 13 years they successfully resisted all assaults on this, their achievement.

Now again a peoples' movement has started. The Gallup poll has shown consistently 33 percent or slightly over, of the people favor a return to national constitutional prohibition. A steady increase of dry territory under local option has been proceeding ever since repeal. While it is difficult to obtain accurate local option figures because some States do not require returns on such elections to be made to the State liquor authorities, it has been estimated that, of some 20,469 local option elections held since repeal, the drys have won 12,519. Local option net gains in 1946 were more than twice as great as in 1945. Elections were held in about 2,078 places in 25 States, of which the drys won 1,276 and the wets 798. The steady increase in no license territory has been remarkable in some States, such as the State of Kentucky where 92 out of its 120 counties are now dry. It is estimated that about one-third of the territory of the United States with a population of some 30,000,000 is dry today, although 12 States, some of which are the driest in the Union, have no local option. These States are: Arizona, California, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Nevada, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Utah, and Wyoming. The District of Columbia and the Territories of Hawaii and the Virgin Islands are also denied the right to vote on whether they shall be subjected to the sale of alcoholic beverages or not. Two States are nominally dry by constitutional provisions, Kansas and Oklahoma, but permit beer sales. Mississippi is dry except for beer and wine.

A not inconsiderate number of the people of this country have been disenfranchised on a question of as much moment to them as the right to ban the sale of alocholic beverages in their own communities if they see fit. The State of South Carolina has by an overwhelming popular majority elected to return to State prohibition, but this right has been denied them by the State legislature. The Federal Government by a practice of issuing tax receipts for taxes collected on the sale of alcoholic beverages in the several States in violation of the laws thereof has created a situation in which all law is being brought into contempt. This immoral action has reached the point where a Kansas newspaper has charged that a Federal tax receipt was issued by a Treasury Department employee to a Kansas bootlegger at the sheriff's desk in a jail in which he was imprisoned for violation of Kansas State law. The State of Mississippi has been persuaded by this immoral practice of the Federal Government to tax her black market in liquor profits, thus condoning instead of prosecuting and fining violations of her State liquor law.

Meanwhile, the condition of the people of this country under the free sale of alcoholic beverages has become pitiable.

Reports of the Federal Bureau of Investigation show arrests for offenses connected with the use of beverage alcohol during the repeal period, as follows:

Year	Total number of arrests	Arrests per 100,000 population
1932	373,124	1726.3
1933	557,764	1842.0
1934	637,390	2085.0
1935	742,675	2249.1
1936	803,584	2266.8
1937	852,268	2269.6
1938	786,277	2044.4
1939	815,539	2083.6
1940	888,635	2160.0
1941	926,002	2346.6
1942	938,099	2777.9
1943	1,038,342	2414.1

Increase in arrests for drunkenness have soared from a ratio of 22.7 percent per 100,000 population of 1933 over 1932 to 134.2 percent per 100,000 in 1945. Two States, Connecticut and Massachusetts, have made surveys of their condition as regards drunkenness. The Connecticut War Council, which made its survey in 1943, reported two-thirds of all nontraffic arrests were for drunkenness and that this burden had a bad effect on courts, jails, and the police. The special commission to investigate the problem of drunkenness in Massachusetts found the State was paying out approximately $61,000,000 per year for mental patients, crime costs, and dependency due to alcohol, while taking in some $13,000,000 a year in tax revenue from its sale. Offset this against the reports of Dr. George W. Kirchway, former dean of Columbia Law School and former warden of Sing Sing Prison, a noted criminologist, who stated:

As between 1910 and 1923, the latter date being the high-water mark of reaction against national prohibition, there was a decrease of 37.7 percent in general criminality in the United States in proportion to population. The chief reductions were in public intoxication, 56.3 percent; disorderly conduct, 51.5 percent; vagrancy, 52.8 percent; fornication and prostitution, 28.8 percent; malicious mischief, etc., 68 percent; larceny, 42.3 percent; assault, 53.1 percent; and burglary, 11.4 percent.

And Sanford Bates, Superintendent of Federal Prisons and Commissioner of Correction for the State of Massachusetts, who stated in his report for 1928:

Offenses against the person declined from 11,394 in 1910 to 7,962 in 1927.

Offenses against property declined from 12,179 in 1910 to 12,160 in 1927.

However, the rate of offenses against the person during this period declined from 337.42 per 100,000 to 187.69 per 100,000, while the offenses against property declined from 360.66 to 286.66 per 100,000 population.

Mr. Bates showed that under prohibition the number of offenses against the person declined more than 40 percent; offenses against property, about 30 percent; drunkenness, 40 percent; while neglect of children had declined more than 50 percent.

Many States are being impelled to erect special hospitals and clinics for the care of their alcoholics at an expense which will greatly increase the discrepancy between tax revenue and outgo caused by the use of such beverages. The Keeley Cure Institutions which had reported 8,000 patients a year before prohibition, in 1931 had only a parent institution in Dwight, Ill., with 35 to 50 patients and only a dozen branches as compared with 100 branches and 300 competing institutions in preprohibition years. Prohibition practically solved the problem of alcoholics.

The Attorney General of the United States, opening the citizenship meeting of the District of Columbia American Legion, on April 8, said:

The seriousness of the need for building resistance in our youth is best seen when it is recognized that about 70 percent of all men and women sentenced to Federal penitentiaries have records of juvenile delinquency.

He said these statistics clearly indicated—

We can expect better results from all-out efforts to build up this resistance to the spread of this highly communicable infection on our social structure than from any efforts to cure the disease, no matter how vigorous. Once the thinking of youth is warped to unsocial and destructive tendencies, it appears that our efforts to turn these delinquents to constructive and useful lives becomes very difficult. Our problem, therefore, is to devise ways of immunizing youth to the spread of this destructive thinking.

The best place to build up this resistance is in the home. We may be pardoned for doubting, however, that it will be built up in homes where the mother leaves little children neglected while she spends her time in beer parlors and cocktail lounges, or takes babes in arms and children of 3 and 4 with her into these places and feeds them beer out of her glass.

The only thing that is being built up under the present system is the profits of the alcoholic beverage traffic whose sales have increased from $3,327,664,370 during the fiscal year, ending June 30, 1941 to $7,770,000,000 for the fiscal year, ending June 30, 1945.

Everything else is being broken down, including the home.

We have waited until the war was over and the troops were home to introduce this measure, in order that there might be no question as to the full discussion and free determination of all the people of the United States on this matter of public policy.

If it is desired by the people that the present conditions shall continue, that is their privilege and also their responsibility. But if the people are tired of these conditions and desirous of changing them, it is proper that they should be given an opportunity of doing so, and that the people of those States which have been disenfranchised on a subject of such vital importance to them should have their remedy through the Federal Government.

If it is argued that there will again be resistance to law by those who will refuse to abide by the decision of the majority in this matter and that the people are helpless to put their decisions on a high level of public policy into effect, I have only to point out that this amendment cannot become law without the will of a majority of the American people. And that as before, leaderless, the people themselves raised up leaders and devised techniques, so there is still in the genius of the American people when confronted with a problem, that power of creating techniques through the power and pressure of public opinion which will, once they have arrived at clear-cut conclusions and decisions on this question, bring about that effective enforcement which will not admit of their longer being balked in their desire to raise their children in healthy communities, free from the intrusions of offensive liquor advertising and the monopolization of public amusement by an utterly soulless traffic that delights to profit on the destruction of youth under the pretense of providing recreation.

We have practically succeeded in banning opium from the entire world.

I introduce, not the eighteenth amendment, but a resolution for a proposed amendment to the Constitution which includes the good features of both the eighteenth and twenty-first amendments and which I believe furnishes a framework within which that other narcotic drug, alcohol, that is destroying the American people, can be relegated to the shelves of the curious poisons of the Middle and Dark Ages.

This is not an exercise of Federal controls over the functioning of normal activities of the States but an exercise of the police power to ban completely the sale of a dangerous narcotic drug, similar to our present Federal control of opium.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

SPECIAL TAX STUDY GROUP NOT AUTHORIZED BY COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the appointment by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of a Special Tax Study Committee came as a stunning surprise. The matter was never discussed by the committee—either in open hearings or executive session—and, as far as I know, the committee has not authorized the appointment of this or any other advisory committee of outside experts. The chairman of the committee has taken it upon himself frequently to make decisions that should have been reserved to the entire committee. But the star chamber procedure of making committee decisions in the Knutson private office must stop.

Under the Legislative Reorganizaton Act, each standing committee is required to keep a complete record of committee action. I charge that there is now in existence no record of any committee action authorizing the appointment of a special tax study committee. Since the chairman obviously has exceeded his authority, the tax study group has no official standing, and I shall strongly oppose any efforts to legitimatize its present illegitimate status.

There are several reasons for my opposition to giving any official status to this outside advisory group:

First. The committee already has the constant and able advice of the Chief of Staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, Mr. Colin Stam, and his competent staff of full-time tax experts. The Secretary of the Treasury has assured the committee that his staff, as well as the tax legislative counsel, Mr. Surrey, and the director of tax research, Mr. Shere, whose experience and capabilities are recognized among tax authorities throughout the country—will be available for consultation by the committee during the proposed revenue revision. The technical and administrative people of the Bureau of Internal Revenue are subject to our call. Mr. Stam, Messrs. Surrey and Shere, and internal revenue representatives, in order to obtain the recommendations of industry, agriculture, and labor on tax matters, already have held frequent conferences with taxpayers' groups on the subjects which the Committee on Ways and Means now has under consideration. Many of these taxpayers' groups, however, will present their problems directly to the committee in open hearings. Moreover, a staff of technical advisers has recently been added to assist the committee in its day-to-day activities. Whenever we go into executive session, therefore, to draft the tax bill, we shall have as much information and as proficient technical assistance as can be efficiently utilized. It is difficult to see what useful role a "special tax study committee" can perform. This group cannot sit on a full-time basis with the committee or with our professional staffs. A comprehensive revision of the Internal Revenue Code is a matter for continuous and painstaking study and draftsmanship and even the ablest and most objective advisory group of Federal tax specialists, on a part-time basis, would be nothing but a hindrance to the committee and its staffs.

Second. If an advisory committee is to be appointed, it should not be stacked with members whose views on tax matters are so openly one-sided. Roswell Magill, selected by Chairman KNUTSON to head the advisory group, and Mr. John W. Hanes were the two witnesses before the Committee on Ways and Means in favor of H. R. 1, which the minority report correctly described as "a discriminatory patchwork of political expediency, neither equitable, timely nor sound." At least four of the remaining members have at various times supported the enactment of a Federal sales tax.

Mr. J. Cheever Cowdin has for many years presented the tax views of the National Association of Manufacturers to the Congress, while Dr. C. S. Duncan has been for 25 years an economist with the Association of American Railroads.

This tax study committee is overloaded with a group of reactionaries on tax matters. This hand-picking of the members renders utterly ridiculous Chairman KNUTSON'S observation that the inclusion of several Democrats on the committee "will assure that the tax revision bill which we hope to bring out early in the next session will have the united support of both parties."

This episode is diabolical in its cleverness—but it is too slick to be palatable even to many Members of the Republican Party in Congress. The Knutson theory of Federal taxation is now revealed for all to see. As the author of H. R. 1 he advocates income-tax reduction which will result in an increase in take-home pay of 4 cents an hour to the $4,000 man, but $19 an hour for the $300,000 man. To provide this bonanza for the rich, he now proposes a host of Federal excise or sales taxes which everybody knows falls heaviest on the poor.

I do not make these charges idly—for this intention of the Republican majority has been expressed several times in the current hearings of the Committee on Ways and Means. The final touch has been the affected air of impartiality through the appointment of this Special Tax Study Committee to pronounce the NAM benediction over the sordid scheme.

I serve notice that these efforts will not go unchallenged. Mr. Magill and his cohorts have no official status, and they should be given none. Should they ever appear in executive session of the Committee on Ways and Means, I shall raise a point of order. And if I am overruled on the point of order, I shall take the matter to the floor of the House The Constitution vests the House of Representatives with exclusive power to originate revenue legislation. The House has delegated jurisdiction over tax measures to the Committee on Ways and Means. The people are entitled to the assurance that only their duly elected representatives, or properly selected professional employees of the Government, shall participate in the drafting of tax legislation. The taxing power so carefully restricted in the Constitution should not surreptitiously be delegated to, or subverted by, small groups representing their own selfish interests.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Bridgeport Post of June 5.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

SENATE

TUESDAY, JUNE 10, 1947

(Legislative day of Monday, April 21, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord of our lives, wilt Thou teach us true discrimination, that we may be able to discern the difference between faith and fatalism, between activity and accomplishment, between humility and an inferiority complex, between a passing salute to God and a real prayer that seeks to find out God's will. We can stand criticism. We can stand a certain amount of pressure. But we cannot stand, O God, the necessity of making grave decisions with nothing but our own poor human wisdom. Our heads are not enough and our hearts fail us. Cabbages have heads, but they have no souls. We, who are created in the image of God, are restless and unhappy until we know that we are doing Thy will by Thy help.

This is what we pray for, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, June 9, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Mills, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 1634. An act to amend section 1, and provisions (6), (7), and (8) of section 3, and provision (3) of section 4 of chapter V of the act of June 19, 1934, entitled "An act to regulate the business of life insurance in the District of Columbia," and to add sections 5a, 5b, and 5c thereto; and

H. R. 3737. An act to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 1288. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant a private right-of-way to Roscoe L. Wood; and

S. J. Res. 115. Joint resolution authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to continue and establish offices in the territory of the Republic of the Philippines.

RATIFICATION OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION RELATING TO TERM OF OFFICE OF PRESIDENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a certified copy of a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Connecticut ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the term of the office of the President, which was ordered to lie on the table.

PARKING PROGRAM FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

By Mr. BRICKER (for himself, Mr. CAIN, and Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia):

S. J. Res. 125. Joint resolution to strengthen the common defense and to meet industrial needs for tin by providing for the maintenance of a domestic tin-smelting industry; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING APPLICATIONS FOR MUSTERING-OUT PAYMENTS

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to extend the time during which applications for mustering-out payments may be filed in the case of persons who were separated from the service prior to the enactment of the Mustering-Out Payment Act of 1944. I request that an explanatory statement of the bill prepared by me may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the explanatory statement presented by the Senator from Maryland will be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1410) to extend the time during which applications for mustering-out payments may be filed in the case of persons who were separated from the service prior to the enactment of the Mustering-Out Payment Act of 1944, introduced by Mr. O'CONOR, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. O'CONOR and ordered to be printed in the RECORD is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HERBERT R. O'CONOR IN RE MUSTERING-OUT PAY BILL

One of the numerous benefits provided by the Congress, on behalf of a grateful Nation, to the men and women who served in the armed forces during World War II, has been the mustering-out payment, provided by Public Law 225 of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

Under this act which was passed and became law in 1944, members of the armed forces honorably separated from the service after the date of enactment automatically received this payment—one-third of the stipulated amount at the time of final discharge from active service, and the remaining amount in two equal installments, 1 month and 2 months, respectively, from the date of the original payment.

Any members of the armed forces entitled to mustering-out pay who had been discharged before the effective date of the act were given 2 years from such effective date in which to apply, and it is with reference to such former members of the various services that I am now concerned.

In checking into this matter with officials and others within the State of Maryland, I find a situation—and I presume a similar condition exists in all the other 47 States—to the effect that many who were entitled to the benefits of this act did not make application within the prescribed 2 years and, therefore, have lost their opportunity for payment.

Inquiry to the various services discloses that there are no accurate figures available as to the number of eligibles who failed to apply. Coast Guard headquarters officials, however, estimate that out of approximately 250,000 veterans eligible, possibly 50,000 have not applied. At the War Department I am informed that, while the accurate figures had not been compiled, they would estimate that possibly 250,000 of the 1,250,000 eligibles had failed to make application. No figures are available at the Navy Department but it is suggested that a like percentage of Navy personnel and marines eligible for this mustering-out payment, had not applied.

On the basis of these figures it would appear that some 400,000 to 500,000 members of the armed forces who had been discharged between December 7, 1941, and the date of enactment of the act of 1944 are now unable to avail themselves of the payments which had been made to so many other former servicemen. While possibly some of these former service people may not desire this pay, it can be taken for granted that many of those who did not, for one reason or another, apply within the period set forth in the act would be helped now if another opportunity were given them to procure the payments provided for them. In fact, I am informed by service officials that applications are still coming in, even though the law no longer permits payments.

It seems to be only simple justice to these former service men and women to renew the opportunity for their applications, just as has been done time and again in the matter of reinstatement of service insurance and the like. Accordingly, I am introducing a bill which would provide for acceptance by the services of applications for mustering-out pay at any time during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this act and ending 1 year after such date.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES RELATIVE TO EMPLOYEES AND EXPENDITURES OF FUNDS

Mr. WHERRY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 123), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That every committee serving the Senate shall report to the Secretary of the Senate within 15 days after December 31 and June 30 of each year the name, profession, and total salary of each person employed by such committee or any subcommittee thereof during the period covered by such report, and shall make an accounting of funds made available to and expended by such committee or subcommittee during such period, and such information when reported shall be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The first such report shall cover the period beginning on January 3, 1947, and ending on June 30, 1947, and succeeding reports shall cover the 6 months period ending on the preceding December 31 or June 30, as the case may be.

SEC. 2. The information required to be reported and published under this resolution shall be in lieu of the information required to be reported and published under section 134 (b) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended, in the case of committees of the Senate and their subcommittees.

BENEFITS FOR CERTAIN OFFICERS AND MEMBERS OF POLICE AND FIRE DEPARTMENTS OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—AMENDMENT

Mr. McGRATH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 1997) to provide seniority benefits for certain officers and members of the Metropolitan Police force and of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia who are veterans of World War II and lost opportunity for promotion by reason of their service in the armed forces of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 1634. An act to amend section 1, and provisions (6), (7), and (8) of section 3, and provision (3) of sectior 4 of chapter V of the act of June 19, 1934, entitled "An act to regulate the business of life insurance in the District of Columbia," and to add sections 5a, 5b, and 5c thereto; and

H. R. 3737. An act to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

HUNGRY HORSE DAM AND MONTANA RECLAMATION PROJECTS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR MURRAY

[Mr. MURRAY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address entitled "Appropriations for Hungry Horse Dam and Bureau of Reclamation Projects," prepared by himself for delivery in Montana, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE MISSOURI VALLEY AUTHORITY—ARTICLE BY MORRIS L. COOKE

[Mr. MURRAY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Plain Talk About a Missouri Valley Authority," written by Morris Llewellyn Cooke, and published in the January 1947 issue of the Iowa Law Review, which appears in the Appendix.]

STEEL REQUIREMENTS FOR FULL EMPLOYMENT—A STUDY BY DR. LOUIS H. BEAN

[Mr. MURRAY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a study on steel requirements for full employment, by Dr. Louis H. Bean, economist in the Bureau of the Budget, which appears in the Appendix.]

SETTLEMENT AND COLONIZATION OF UTAH—ADDRESS BY SENATOR WATKINS

[Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Deseret—Land of the Honey Bee—A Unique Experiment," delivered by Senator WATKINS at the opening of the exhibition showing an early pictorial history of Utah and its colonization by the Mormon people, in the Congressional Library on June 7, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

UNIONS AND POLITICS—EDITORIAL FROM THE WASHINGTON POST

[Mr. MCCLELLAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Unions and Politics," from the Washington Post of June 8, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

COMMITTEE MEETINGS DURING SENATE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary be permitted to sit during the session of the Senate today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Veterans' Affairs of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare may meet at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a subcommittee on the Committee on the Judiciary be permitted to meet today at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a subcommittee of the Committee on Civil Service may meet this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

NOTICE OF HEARING ON NOMINATION OF DAVID CHAVEZ, JR., TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF PUERTO RICO

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, and in accordance with the rules of the committee, I desire to give notice that a public hearing has been scheduled for Tuesday, June 17, 1947, at 10 a. m., in the Senate Judiciary Committee Room, room 424, Senate Office Building, upon the nomination of David Chavez, Jr., of New Mexico, to be United States district judge for the District of Puerto Rico, vice Hon. Robert A. Cooper. At the indicated time and place all persons interested in the nomination may make such representations as may be pertinent. The subcommittee consists of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], chairman, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN].

SEVENTH TRIENNIAL CONVENTION OF WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, because of the urgency of the matter, I am about to make a request concerning House bill 1179, which was placed on the Senate calendar some days ago with a favorable report from the Committee on Foreign Relations. The best way to explain the bill is to quote the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations:

The purpose of the bill is to authorize an appropriation of $5,000 to enable the United States Government to assist in defraying the expenses of the Convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union to be held in this country next month. It seems proper and desirable for our Government to render such assistance. This is particularly true at this time, when we cannot fail to recognize the desirability of encouraging better understanding and relations among the peoples of the world. To this convention will come representatives from 55 nations. Moreover it will be recalled that representatives from the United States attending world conventions of women's organizations in other lands have been accorded courtesies by the governments of those lands.

During the consideration of the bill by the Foreign Relations Committee, it was pointed out that in 1936 an appropriation of $10,000 was authorized by the Seventy-fourth Congress to aid in defraying the expenses of the Sixteenth Triennial Convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union. A similar act authorized an appropriation of $10,000 for expenses for the meeting of the Associated Country Women of the World in the United States in 1936. Ample precedent, therefore, exists for the proposed legislation.

The report from the State Department raises some question about the establishment of a precedent should this bill be enacted, but I feel the above statement from the committee report answers the Department's question. Mr. Dean Acheson, Acting Secretary of State, goes on to say:

After consideration of the provisions of the proposed bill, the Department has concluded that from the standpoint of our international relations there is no objection to its enactment.

In closing, I invite attention to the fact that the sum which would be authorized is but 50 percent of the money appropriated for similar purposes on previous occasions. This, I think, is in keeping with the present efforts at economy.

The urgency for action lies in the fact that the present Seventeenth Triennial Convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union is in session. Inasmuch as it has passed the House and is on the Senate Calendar with a favorable report from the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 1179.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate consider House bill 1179 to aid in defraying the expenses of the Seventeenth Triennial Convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union to be held in this country in June 1947?

Mr. MCGRATH. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island objects.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] are necessarily absent.

Mr. BARKLEY. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] is absent because of a death in his family.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate, having been appointed a delegate to the International Labor Conference at Geneva, Switzerland.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLANDERS in the chair). Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, from the Committee on Foreign Relations I desire to report favorably five nominations. They are being reported unanimously. In each instance there is a very definite emergency which calls for immediate action by the Senate, as I think will be obvious when I state the names. Therefore, pursuant to the formula recommended by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], I am going to ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. After that consent is granted, if it shall be granted, Mr. President, I shall ask for the consideration of the nomination of Dwight P. Griswold, of Nebraska, to be Chief of the American Mission for Aid to Greece. I am sure it is perfectly obvious to all Senators that there must be no further delay in designating the Chief Administrator of the program for aid to Greece.

I shall also ask for the confirmation of the nomination of Richard F. Allen, of the District of Columbia, to be Field Administrator of the United States Foreign Relief Program, which Senators will recall was also voted recently by the Senate. Mr. Allen is a lifelong international executive of the American Red Cross, and obviously is a uniquely available person for this responsibility.

I shall also ask for the confirmation of Norman Armour, of New Jersey, to be an Assistant Secretary of State. Here again the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Braden requires immediate attention. Mr. Armour, I am sure all Senators will recall, is a lifelong career diplomat in the American Service with an exemplary record, which I shall be very glad to detail if any Senator wishes.

I shall also ask for the confirmation of Emmet O'Neal, of Kentucky, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of the Philippines. This post is vacant at a particularly difficult and important moment due to the retirement of former Ambassador McNutt. Mr. O'Neal has the unanimous approval of the Foreign Relations Committee.

I shall also ask for confirmation of the nomination of Monnett B. Davis, of Colorado, to be the representative of the United States of America in the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East. Mr. Davis is now American Consul General to Shanghai. The commission to which he is appointed is meeting in Shanghai on June 16, again making prompt action necessary.

Therefore, Mr. President, on the basis of this brief explanation, which I hope may suffice, I repeat that all nominations are unanimously reported, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLANDERS in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I now report the five nominations to which I have referred and ask unanimous consent that they be stated by the clerk for action in executive session.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee I am glad to cooperate with our distinguished chairman in offering these nominations for confirmation, but in the case of one name particularly, for the RECORD I should like to make a brief remark. I have known Mr. Norman Armour, who has been nominated for the important post of Assistant Secretary of State, all his life. He comes from my State of New Jersey. I am very proud that he does, but he has also been a personal friend of both myself and my family for years. I have followed with enthusiasm his wonderful record of service in representing the United States in many countries of the world, including especially the countries of the Western Hemisphere. It is a great privilege for me to say this brief word in urging the confirmation of his nomination for this important post.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have in my hand the Executive Calendar. The first name on that calendar is that of Mr. Joe B. Dooley to be United States district judge for the northern district of Texas. That nomination has been before the Senate since the 28th of April. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that at the termination of the consideration of the bill which is now before the Senate—and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]—the Senate proceed, in executive session, to consider the nomination of Mr. Joe B. Dooley.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection——

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield for an inquiry?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. With respect to the nomination of Mr. Dooley, am I to understand that the Senator from Texas wants to take it up——

Mr. CONNALLY. After the termination of consideration of the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. REVERCOMB. After consideration of the bill which is now before the Senate?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, I will say that it is my purpose, after the bill which is now pending shall be concluded, to move that the Senate consider the succession bill. I understand that at that time the distinguished Senator from Texas proposes that the Senate shall go into executive session in order to consider the nomination of Mr. Dooley to be district judge for the northern district of Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct. I made that statement.

Mr. WHERRY. Has the Senator any idea how long the nomination will take?

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to be conservative in my statement. I think one afternoon will be the maximum time required. I have no objection to fixing a limit on debate when the time comes to consider the nomination.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask the distinguished Senator if he will withhold the request until later on in the afternoon in order that I may confer with him and see if it is possible to arrange matters so that we cannot only take up the nomination to which the Senator from Texas refers, but also the legislation I mentioned, in a manner agreeable to both sides.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that if he makes the request, I shall defer to his request, but I was assured by those whom I thought were responsible leaders that when the tax bill was out of the way I could obtain action on the nomination of Mr. Dooley. The leaders, however, had different programs. I did not cause any disturbance in that connection; I permitted them to proceed with the legislation they wished to have considered; but I think it is time that the nomination be now considered.

Mr. WHERRY. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. It has been before the Senate for a long while; it is important, we must face it, and I hope very much that the Senator from Nebraska will find means to allow the Senate to proceed with the nomination.

Mr. WHERRY. I will say to the distinguished Senator that if he will confer with me we will arrive at some conclusion which I think will be satisfactory to him.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may offer the suggestion that this request can only be made when the Senate is in executive session.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senate is in executive session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know that, but if it goes over until later in the day the Senate would have to go back into executive session before the request could be made. That might be a needless process.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Texas can ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session at a moment's notice. There is no difficulty about that. I have no ulterior motive in this matter at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sure of that.

Mr. WHERRY. The bill to which I referred was supposed to be taken up, and I would deeply appreciate it if the Senator from Texas would withhold his request now so we may confer and see if we can arrive at some conclusion which will be satisfactory to all. I shall be glad to join with the Senator to ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session for the consideration of the nomination in which he is interested.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I shall submit to the request of the Senator from Nebraska. I wish to observe, however, that all legislation is important.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. But it is also a part of our constitutional duty to pass on nominations. That is of importance also. The Senator will bear witness that I have not irritated him or annoyed him about this matter, because I have given way on a number of occasions on the assurance that the nomination would be taken up at a certain time. I have not caused any disturbance, but I do want to insist at this time that the nomination should be considered and disposed of.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I want to make the observation that, in my opinion, the nomination to which the Senator from Texas has referred will take up very considerable time, and it will not be possible to pass upon it with only a brief period of discussion.

Mr. CONNALLY. I said that I thought a day would be sufficient. I wish to be generous. I do not want to cut off anyone from discussing the nomination.

Mr. MOORE. Of course, I could not predict how much time it may take, but it is very controversial.

Mr. CONNALLY. No matter when the nomination comes before the Senate, the same situation will prevail. It will be necessary to consider the nomination at some time or other.

Mr. MOORE. It is a matter which involves the policy of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. MOORE. That is my opinion about the matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not wish to argue with the Senator from Oklahoma. I am willing to defer the matter until later in the day, with the understanding that the Senator from Nebraska will cooperate with me to obtain consideration of the nomination. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. CONNALLY subsequently said: Mr. President, since I made the unanimous-consent request with respect to the Dooley nomination, certain information has come to me. I am informed that the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] has been called to Texas because of a death in his family. I anticipate that he will return within a few days. I would not desire to proceed with the nomination until his return. That will in no wise interfere with our agreement, if we can get together with respect to fixing a time. I desired to make that explanation so that there would be no suspicion or charge that I had called the matter up under those circumstances. I had no knowledge whatever of the fact that the junior Senator from Texas had gone to Texas, and no knowledge of the death in his family until advised a few minutes ago by Mr. Johnston, secretary to the Senate minority.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask that the five nominations be stated by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be stated.

ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR ASIA AND THE FAR EAST—NOMINATION OF MONNETT B. DAVIS

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Monnett B. Davis, of Colorado, to be the representative of the United States of America in the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East established by the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations March 28, 1947.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

THE AMERICAN MISSION FOR AID TO GREECE—NOMINATION OF DWIGHT P. GRISWOLD

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Dwight P. Griswold, of Nebraska, to be Chief of the American Mission for Aid to Greece.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES FOREIGN RELIEF PROGRAM—NOMINATION OF RICHARD F. ALLEN

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Richard F. Allen, of the District of Columbia, to be field administrator of the United States foreign relief program, pursuant to Public Law No. 84, approved May 31, 1947.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Norman Armour to be Assistant Secretary of State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

AMBASSADOR TO THE PHILIPPINES

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Emmet O'Neal to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of the Philippines.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before that nomination is acted upon I wish to say just a word with respect to this appointment.

Mr. O'Neal is a member of one of the old and prominent families of Kentucky. His father was an outstanding lawyer of the Louisville bar. One of his brothers was mayor of the city of Louisville and a member of the highest court in the State. Mr. O'Neal himself in his younger days was sheriff of Jefferson County, which is the county in which the largest city of the State is located, the city of Louisville. He served for 14 years in the House of Representatives. He became a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and there was no more industrious, painstaking, or conscientious member of that committee than Mr. O'Neal was during his membership on it.

He is a man of excellent judgment. He is level-headed. He knows the Philippine Islands by reason of his association with its problems while he was a Member of the House of Representatives. He is a man of the highest integrity and of the finest character. I think he will be a most excellent representative of this country in the new Republic of the Philippines at this critical hour of their history, and I am glad to give my endorsement to his nomination. I predict that he will have a successful career as a representative of this country in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I endorse everything my colleague has said in expressing approval of the nomination of Hon. Emmet O'Neal to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Republic of the Philippines. Although we belong to opposite political parties, I have known Mr. O'Neal for many years, and I believe I am acquainted with the estimate which the people of his native State place upon his ability and character.

As my colleague has stated, Mr. O'Neal has had a distinguished career both as an official and in his profession as a lawyer. I know that in his own State of Kentucky, where he is very widely known, he enjoys the respect and confidence of the people. Like my colleague, I believe that he will discharge his duties in this position with great ability and with honor to his country.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I should like to add a word with respect to this nomination.

For many years I served in the House with Emmet O'Neal. He became one of my close personal friends. As both Senators from Kentucky have said, he is a man of very high character and outstanding ability. I know that the people of Kentucky are proud of him.

During his term in the House of Representatives, in his service on the Committee on Appropriations, Emmet O'Neal made it almost a hobby to understand the problems of the Philippines. This is a new Republic, embarking upon a new governmental policy in the Far East. I am sure that Emmet O'Neal will not only represent the United States well in Manila, but will be of great help in the problems of the Philippine people in the days to come as a new nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Emmet O'Neal to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of the Philippines?

The nomination was confirmed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent, in connection with each of these five nominations, that the President be immediately notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Michigan move that all the nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service, which have been on the calendar for many days, be now considered and confirmed en bloc?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest that the Senator from Georgia make the request, inasmuch as my request for the consideration of executive business was limited in scope.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all the nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service, which have been on the calendar for many weeks and have had the approval of the Committee on Foreign Relations, be considered and confirmed en bloc, and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nominations? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service are confirmed en bloc; and, without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLANDERS in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. REVERCOMB, from the Committee on Public Works:

Col. Dwight F. Johns, Corps of Engineers, for appointment as President, California Debris Commission, vice Col. Edwin H. Marks, Corps of Engineers, to be relieved.

By Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Paul J. Sturm, of Connecticut, and sundry other persons for appointment as Foreign Service officers and secretaries in the diplomatic service; and Hugh S. Cumming, Jr., of Virginia, and sundry other persons for appointment as Foreign Service officers and secretaries in the diplomatic service.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CARRIERS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 110) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, after the proponents of a measure taken up for consideration by the Senate have presented their views, it is customary for the signer or signers of the minority views to proceed. However, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who presented the views of the minority of the committee on the pending bill, was not here yesterday, so I took the floor in opposition to the bill. The Senator from New Hampshire is now present and wishes to go forward, so I yield the floor.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, in Senate bill 110 the Senate has under consideration a measure of far-reaching importance to the humblest citizen of this country. I marvel that the leadership of my party allowed the bill to come up at the present time. In my judgment, there is no possible justification for interfering with the progress of pending legislation, as we have, by interrupting the session for 3 or 4 days for the consideration of this bill. My justification for that statement lies in the fact that the bill has to do very pertinently with the enforcement by the Department of Justice of the antitrust laws, and with two famous cases thereunder, one being the Lincoln, Nebr., case, and the other the Georgia case, each of which is now pending before the proper tribunal.

The bill has no time limit in it. The Department of Justice would take no steps to interfere with the railroads or the shippers unless this bill were brought up at the present time. Here it is. The baby is on the doorstep; and I greet it to the best of my ability, and in language which I hope the people can understand.

The propaganda for the railroad monopoly bill (S. 110) continues to ease the way of this transgression on American free enterprise. Although the bill would place a monopoly grip on the neck of American small business and American farmers, propaganda has been flooding Congress that everybody in America wants this bill.

The Association of American Railroads tells us of the extraordinary unanimity in support of this monopoly bill. This overwhelming support, they tell us, comes from every section of the country. Their general counsel says that their bill is endorsed by every kind of shipper. In other words, the little businessman, as well as the big one, wants his shipments of goods to be conducted by a legalized Nation-wide monopoly. Important farm groups, the railroad association's lawyer says, want to be under this monopoly. State government officials want this bill, the railroad association says.

In this jungle of propaganda, I have made an exploration. I have tried to find some one person, out of the 140,000,000 Americans, who is against the monopoly bill. I have found two. Right out in public, where everybody can see them.

The railroad association did not overlook them. It could not for those two men had gone on record against any railroad monopoly.

Let me tell the story of the policy of two men who are not marching in step with 140,000,000 lovers of railroad monopoly—those unanimous Americans in the railroad association's fairy tale.

I found the two dissenters from the railroad association's unanimous monopoly, on a tip-off which the railroad association gave me. These men testified last year. Their unanimous testimony was melted down into golden words in the Senate committee's report in favor of the monopoly bill. That report was 15 pages long. In those 15 pages, the boiled-down testimony of the railroad association tells 15 times, once for every page, about the transportation policy of the United States. It seems that this transportation policy of the United States intended to give the railroads a monopoly.

So, I looked further in that promonopoly report. I looked for that transportation policy. And I learned that the transportation policy is stated in a congressional statute, the Transportation Act of 1940. It seems that the authors of that statute made a little slip. They failed to put in the statute enough words to give the railroads the monopoly they say this statute intended to give them.

So I thought I would look for the authors of this statute and this policy, to see whose brains produced them—promonopoly brains or antimonopoly brains?

The railroad association did not let the public or the Congress in on the secret, so I will tell it. The authors of the Transportation Act of 1940 and its transportation policy for the United States are two well-known men, named Burton K. Wheeler and Harry S. Truman.

Their views on railroad monopoly are well known. Former Senator Wheeler was in the Senate last year, when the same monopoly bill that is now in Congress was reported favorably to the Senate by a majority of the members of his committee. But he was against it—lock, stock, and barrel. He fought the monopoly bill. He insisted on through hearings. He disagreed with the railroad's monopoly lawyers. He finally introduced a compromise bill, Senate bill 2333, to draw all the teeth and all the fangs of the railroad association's monopoly bill.

His coauthor of the Transportation Act of 1940 and of the transportation policy of the United States was not in the Senate last year. But that coauthor, President Truman, is also on record against railroad monopolies. I quoted from his report to the Senate when I previously spoke on this subject earlier this year.

So we find some big cracks in the railroad association's story about unanimity. First, the association appeals to the transportation policy as causing a big vote for monopoly, but the words of the American language in that policy do not say so. Next, the association appeals to the Transportation Act of 1940, in which that policy is stated, but that statute registers no vote for monopoly. Next, we look to the authors of that statute and that transportation policy, and we find them registered against railroad monopoly.

Encouraged by this, the first clue that there is something wrong in the association's story of "unanimity," I began to look further. Let me tell you what I found.

I looked at the names of the subcommittee for whom Senators Wheeler and Truman wrote their report against railroad monopoly. One of the names was the distinguished and experienced senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], now the minority leader. I was gratified, but not surprised, that he arose on the floor of the Senate on January 31 and said he would vote against this railroad monopoly bill.

Let me give some more names on the Senate committee for which former Senator Wheeler and President, then Senator, Truman, wrote their report against railroad monopoly several years ago. One name is that of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. I am confidently looking forward to his vote this session against the railroad monopoly bill. Another name is that of the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. It is a satisfaction to me that my name is also in the distinguished company for whom former Senators Wheeler and Truman made their report.

Also among the members of that committee, none of whom dissented from the report when it was written, are Senators of my own party, now high in my party's councils. I mention particularly the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], whose admirable speech on January 22, 1947, I quoted here earlier this year—the speech in which he pledged my party, the Republican Party, to the small businessman and against monopoly. I anticipated his vote this year against the railroad monopoly bill

The junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] was not in the Senate when Senators Wheeler and Truman submitted their report against railroad monopoly. But the railroad association should not therefore count on him to repair its already cracking "unanimity." A few weeks ago, on the floor of the Senate, he called for a Senate Small Business Committee to protect the small businessman against monopoly, and pointed a special finger at the railroads and at railroad rates.

Further encouraged by these names registered against railroad monopoly, I thought I would look more closely at the railroad association's claim. I wanted to see the stuff of which this claim was made, this claim that shippers unanimously want a railroad monopoly, chambers of commerce unanimously want a railroad monopoly, State legislatures and State officials unanimously want a railroad monopoly, everybody wants it, except, of course, the negligible number I have discovered, the President of the United States, and Republican and Democratic leaders in the Senate.

Continuing my search, I examined the reports made to the Senate by Senators Wheeler and Truman. I wanted to see what it means when the railroad association tells us it has the support of shipping organizations, chambers of commerce, and lots of other organizations.

Nobody will question the accuracy of former Senators Wheeler and Truman. The documents they reported to the Senate are enough. Those documents come right out of the files of the railroad association. And they are very revealing.

The railroads have shown great skill as creators of organizations. They have built organizations and put them into action as independents, neutrals, unbiased organizations. That is a part of the trickery. The railroad associations have created taxpayers' leagues, educational foundations, transportation associations. These have gone to the public, to city and State authorities, to Congress, peddling the railroads' propaganda. There was always one stipulation, and only one stipulation—keep the railroads in the background. Never reveal the connection of the railroads with these dummy leagues and foundations. That is a part of their game.

The railroad associations have also made use of organizations already in existence. In these cases the railroads made every effort to conceal their own role.

Where do I get the facts? From one of the reports submitted to the Senate by former Senator Wheeler and Senator—now President—Truman. They cited one example after another. They said that the railroads "preferred to work under cover, hiding behind apparently nonpartisan organizations stamped 'neutral,' 'independent,' 'unbiased'."

No one in America has been too young or too modest or too remote to receive such education from the railroads. Former Senators Wheeler and Truman told the story of one "taxpayers' committee" organized by the Western Railroad Association. This story will interest especially the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], who was on the special committee to protect farmers and small businessmen from big monopolies, and the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], who spoke in support of my party's leadership in the Senate for the creation of a special committee to protect our people.

The railroad association created one of their "taxpayers' " committees in Davenport, Iowa, hired a staff to operate a battery of telephones, and had them telephone all over that city to urge the citizens to attend citizens' meetings. The meetings were called by the railroads, concealed behind the name "Taxpayers' Committee," to speed the railroad propaganda and to produce local and State governmental action favorable to the railroads.

What a perversion of the American town meeting, that institution which has been at the heart of American democracy from earliest Colonial times!

Senators Wheeler and Truman gave some examples of the skill of the railroads in indoctrinating even America's school children with railroad propaganda. They did this through "educational" organizations. I will mention one, which should interest the Senators from Ohio—the example I have taken from the report which was submitted by Senators Wheeler and Truman was developed by a big railroad through a "foundation" in Ohio. In 4 years that "foundation" got the railroad propaganda to a quarter of a million school pupils 865 separate times—an average of once every school day for 4 years, to 250,000 school children.

This railroad-supported foundation had a four-word name, and one of those words was "transportation." That word stuck out so conspicuously, said this railroad stooge, that it might make the boys and girls in the grammar schools, and at any rate the bright young people in the colleges, smell railroads somewhere in this educational foundation. So the stooge organization reported to the railroads that it had changed the label to "social engineering fund." Again I say, What is in a name?

I hope the Senators from Ohio and from neighboring States, whose children and colleges received this railroad propaganda, will ponder one of the letters written to that distributor of the railroads' secret propaganda. The letter was from a college professor. He wrote that, at first, when he received the educational material:

> I had some doubts about the motives behind the thing, but my doubts have been dissipated. Nowhere did I find the first semblance of propaganda.

Mr. President, how many similar organizations have been supporting the railroad monopoly bill, Senate bill 110? How many innocent organizations have been induced to support that bill by railroad propaganda which they, like the college professor, were deceived into believing was not propaganda at all?

I used the word "deceived." Is that too strong a word? Senators Wheeler and Truman stated that the railroad associations in their use of false fronts for their propaganda stooped to stark deception.

We may be told that the organizations supporting the railroad monopoly bill are not colleges or educational foundations, but are hard-headed, hard-bitten organizations which know their way around and could not be deceived into becoming stooges for the railroads. We are told that chambers of commerce are for the monopoly bill, mirabile dictu.

Again I ask the Senators from Ohio to take a close look at the educational foundation which I mentioned a moment ago. Its railroad propaganda was distributed through the Ohio State Chamber of Commerce.

Well, we are told, some genuine taxpapers' associations have registered in favor of the railroad monopoly bill. I suggest that the Senators from California examine the report of Senators Wheeler and Truman, and see how much money the railroads have poured into the taxpayers' association in their State. I suggest that the Senators from New Jersey examine that report on the activities of the New Jersey Taxpayers' Association, which became the sponsor and distributor for railroad propaganda in order to keep the railroads in the background.

Mr. President, I would further suggest, by way of interpolation, that in all these cases a close inspection be made to find out how much money from the railroads went to chambers of commerce for multiple memberships, and so forth, with the result that the master's voice was speaking through those agencies.

"All right," we may be told, "we can rule out some of the chambers of commerce and some of the taxpayers' associations, but how about manufacturers' and shippers' organizations which are supporting this monoply bill," the multiplicity of which were inserted in the RECORD yesterday by the Senator from Kansas. The trouble with that argument is the thoroughness of the railroads' propaganda programs and machinery, which omit from their network no type of organization.

There was, for example, the Shippers and Manufacturers' Transportation Association, which for several years worked jointly with the railroads on legislative propaganda, but then decided that the way to work for the railroads' legislative program was to sponsor the legislation in the name of this manufacturers' association with the railroad contacts working in the background. The executive committee of this manufacturers' association, so-called, put the truth in a confidential memorandum in which it recognized the opposition to open railroad propaganda, and added that a nonpartisan organization, such as this was made to appear, could do the job without arousing the prejudice awakened by open railroad propaganda. That organization was later absorbed in another of the transportation associations which claimed to be an organization of representative businessmen throughout the country plus representatives of agriculture. The organization was supported by a great deal of railroad money, and it experienced difficulty in getting an agricultural representative who was prorailroad. Every farmer whose name they got had the wrong attitude toward the railroads.

The railroads themselves made good use of that organization, guiding the preparation of its educational and research propaganda. This material was then sent to chambers of commerce, to trade associations, to newspapers, and to genuine educational foundations. Some of those recipients may today be supporting the railroad monopoly bill, innocently accepting the educational material which has come to them, not from the railroads, but from the organizations of representative businessmen fronting for the railroads.

But we are told that no matter what we say about all other organizations, we cannot say the same of shippers, for all of them are for the bill, and surely shippers would not want to fasten a railroad monopoly on their own necks. That is true. But the records show that the railroad associations have used shippers' organizations to serve and advance legislation which the railroads want for their own purposes, and the records also show that sometimes shippers do not even know that they are being used to advance railroad purposes.

One businessmen's organization which was listed by Senators Wheeler and Truman in one of their reports to the Senate received heavy financial backing from the railroads. It was really doing railroad propaganda. The president of one of the large railroads said in a confidential communication that it was in fact duplicating the work of the Association of American Railroads.

Now I come to the subject of shippers' advisory boards, whose support of the pending railroad monopoly bill is being so widely touted on Capitol Hill. I have no doubt that most of the shippers who are represented by those boards, and most of the men among their directors, just as in the case of chambers of commerce, have no knowledge that they are being used for railroad purposes either to support the monopoly bill or for other legislation desired by the railroads.

I think it is only fair that the Senate and the country shall be reminded of the relation between the Association of American Railroads and those so-called shippers' advisory boards.

The Association of American Railroads confidentially described those shippers' boards as "a splendid set-up bringing in every important section of the country and every industrial and agricultural interest in each section."

When those boards were induced to enter the political or legislative field, one of their directors promptly resigned. In his resignation, which obviously did not come to the eyes of most of the directors of these shippers' advisory boards, he said that the entrance of the shippers' advisory boards into the field of legislation meant that they would be under the influence of the railroads for this purpose, and that there was no use in kidding themselves to believe anything else.

Even the late president of the Association of American Railroads had to admit, under examination by Senator Wheeler, that the Association of American Railroads used those shippers' advisory boards to promote the legislative program of the railroads.

I shall give two examples of how the railroads have used such shippers' organizations. One example relates to an advisory board which at its annual meeting was induced to adopt resolutions in favor of a special railroad bill. A good show of some minority opposition to the bill, to prove that thorough and impartial discussion was had, was put on at that meeting. One of the division chiefs of the railroad association wrote that "the antagonism shown was from a small minority bloc"—God bless them!—"which we use as 'scenery' occasionally, and they performed very nobly in this case, although they do not know it."

The second example relates to the State of California, where one of the advisory boards was used to contact "practically every shipper in California" against a bill which had passed the State legislature. As a result, the Governor of that State was induced by the railroads, operating through the shippers, to veto the bill.

In one case the representatives of the railroad association said they were trying to impress Congressmen in Washington with the idea that bills desired by the railroads "were backed by solid public opinion," and therefore the shippers' boards were made to appear like independent organizations.

The railroad association also wants us to believe that State government officials and commissions are supporting the pending railroad monopoly bill. It may well be that State officials have been persuaded to the sincere belief that this bill is a good one; but I should like to give a few examples of how State officials frequently act without knowing that they are being so used. State officials are only human; they have the same ills of the flesh that we who are on Capitol Hill have. Senators Wheeler and Truman showed how this was being done in a number of Middle Western and intermountain States. I call this part of their revealing report to the attention of the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], who spoke a few months ago so effectively in support of his resolution to create a special small business committee, and pledged my party to help small businessmen against monopolies. I similarly call that report to the attention of the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who made so splendid a fight in the last Congress against the attempt to grant insurance companies immunity from the antitrust laws. The report of Senators Wheeler and Truman shows how railroad associations used State and local officials in the great States of Nebraska, Wyoming, and in many other States, through innocent-appearing organizations and intermediaries, to serve the propaganda of the railroads.

I call the attention of the junior Senator from Illinois, a member of the standing Senate committee which considered the railroad monopoly bill, to the evidence in the Wheeler-Truman report of the railroads' use of a former floor leader in the Illinois State Legislature, and of how he mobilized Illinois State officials into the service of the railroads, without their knowledge, and on the basis of nonexistent demands from his constituents.

I call the attention of the Senators in this body to the many examples in the Wheeler-Truman report of the railroads' use of city and county officials in a great many States, without knowledge by those officials of the fact that they were being used to carry out the program of the railroads.

That recalls an experience when I was a freshman member of the New Hampshire House of Representatives, that august body with 438 members, at that time, 1915, the largest legislative body in the world, outside of the Russian Duma. I remember getting railroad propaganda along the lines of the propaganda now being circulated, and it aroused my anger. I never heard of such things, and I was completely disgusted. Looking into the matter, lo and behold, I found that New England railroads were paying $35 a week to a humble newspaper correspondent, who was writing a weekly letter for the weekly newspapers in New Hampshire. He got $35 a week for trade stories he incorporated in his weekly newspaper article, on condition that he included matters favorable to the railroads. So the propaganda went out. The public, getting these news stories and reading them, thought that the gentleman who wrote the articles was giving his convictions, when, in fact, he had to listen to his master's voice, and was receiving $35 a week for that service.

I call the attention of the Senators from Minnesota to the evidence in the Wheeler-Truman report of the ability of the railroads to make use of their influence in the Minnesota State Legislature, and to the confidential railroad letter which was uncovered by Senators Wheeler and Truman, in which the railroads' representative revealed how he had stopped a bill that had been introduced in the Minnesota State Legislature. He called on the right man in that legislature and then wrote to his railroad superiors: "When I left him I had the bill in my pocket." No doubt the railroads raised that fellow's salary. It should be known to the Senators from Minnesota, as well as to the State legislators and voters of that and all other States, that the railroads have been able to exercise a pocket veto of legislation in some State legislatures.

The devices employed by the railroad associations to accomplish their purposes, without their sponsorship becoming known to the public, or to officials, are too numerous to mention, or even to uncover. They hired business salesmen selling products of established business concerns as a channel of spreading their propaganda—salesmen who, as the representative of the railroads wrote in a confidential report, "apparently have no connection with us whatsoever." They hired "engineers" to make reports damaging to competing forms of transportation, and in one instance when the report was produced in a committee hearing Senator Truman said that he knew the real facts and that the report was false. It is rare that the railroad propaganda can be so neatly nailed down.

The railroads have, of course, made it their business to get to the newspapers their propaganda for their railroad monopoly bill, and for a great deal of other legislation in Congress and in the State legislatures.

Only a short time ago my distinguished friend the Senator from Kansas, in referring to the Bulwinkle bill—I beg pardon, the Reed-Bulwinkle bill—said, "What is the use fighting this measure? We have the votes, and it is going through." I said something about a Presidential veto. He said, "We will pass it over his veto."

What assurance! What great confidence! I congratulate the proponents of the bill on that state of mind. But time will tell. The end is not yet.

The Wheeler-Truman report shows that in New Jersey the State Taxpayers' Association was used for the purpose of spreading editorial propaganda among the newspapers of that State.

The railroad associations have set up newspapermen to run friendly newspaper services. The Wheeler-Truman report tells of one specific case in Iowa. It tells of another paper called the National Constitution—what a name with which to conjure!—which was described by a representative of the railroads in a confidential report as "an independent Republican weekly—backed by a group of Middle West businessmen." Through this "independent" newspaper—with a question mark after "independent"—railroad propaganda was disseminated, and competing forms of transportation were spied upon, without the public knowing that the hand was really the hand of Jacob.

There is one example from the Wheeler-Truman report which should move the heart of every Senator in this Chamber who spoke for the Special Committee on Small Business and for the need to protect the small businessman. Senators Wheeler and Truman told of the attempt of the railroads to drive out of business the small businessman engaged in truck transportation. They quoted the report of one of the railroad representatives that the best way to kill off the competition of any small truckman—a small businessman, if you please, struggling to make a living and support his family, pay his taxes, and feed his children—the best way to kill off the competition of any small truckman was to have him arrested two or three times; and the confidential report stated that that would be sure to "put him out of business."

This leads me to refer to the danger of giving the railroads a monopoly grip by granting them immunity from the Antitrust Acts. Even without such immunity, they spent a great deal of money and years of effort to retard and to "eliminate," as they put it, the competition of the trucking industry. Some of their cover-up methods were so successful that at times the railroads enlisted in their campaign against their truck competitors even the Association of American Railroads and led an important truckers' association to believe that the railroads were engaged in "constructive efforts to effect coordination" with the trucking industry. Sometimes men ought to pray to be delivered from their friends.

In their campaign the railroads even used parent-teachers' associations and the National Safety Council to spread propaganda against the trucking industry, and of course the associations so used never knew that they were being used.

It was during the hearings when these activities of the railroads were exposed that President, then Senator, Truman criticized the railroads for trying to destroy competition. In the report which he and Senator Wheeler submitted to the Senate they discussed those monopoly attempts of the railroads to destroy competing forms of transportation, and reminded the country of the fact that our economic system is "founded on the belief that competition is the life of trade."

In evaluating the claim that the railroad monopoly bill has the unanimous support of all organizations and the solid backing of the people, it might be helpful for all persons in Congress to know the 10-point plan of the Association of American Railroads for getting its legislation through Congress. I shall here summarize that 10-way plan, from the detailed quotations that Senators Wheeler and Truman produced out of the files of the railroads themselves.

First. The two Senators report that elaborate mechanisms have been set up whereby the whole country is divided into areas. Through these local divisions pressure is brought to bear upon Members of Congress.

Second. The Association of American Railroads has called upon officials of railroads throughout the United States to prepare for it a complete dossier on every Member of the Senate and the House, and in particular to state "the influences which control him and the persons on whom he relies for support," and his entire social and political background.

Talk about the OGPU and the Gestapo! We have a peer of all those organizations in this crowd in the Association of American Railroads, who make a dossier of every Member of the Senate, this body, to see to whom they can look for support, what each Senator's background is. What have we come to in America? Free enterprise? Individual opinions? Independent viewpoint? They are all nullified by the sharp edge of such chicanery and skulduggery as this.

Third. The railroads in every district are asked to get local men who are influential with Representatives and Senators and who can come to Washington immediately when called by the association and can stay in Washington. The association required that these persons should be so "intimate" with the Members of Congress that there would be no danger of a boomerang attack on "our friends as lobbyists."

Fourth. The association suggested that its local railroad people get 100 "influential citizens in each congressional district" to talk to their Congressmen in favor of the railroad association's bills.

Fifth. The local railroad people were asked to line up merchants and businessmen along their railroad route, with particular emphasis upon the small towns.

Sixth. So far as possible, railroad bills should be introduced by Members of the House of Representatives at the request of some organizations other than railroads themselves, and the railroads should then come along and say that they regard the bill as a fair one.

Seventh. Officials of chambers of commerce should be used as witnesses in behalf of railroad bills, and the railroad association would undertake to coach them before they testified in committee hearings.

Eighth. Vacancies on committees having jurisdiction of legislation in which the railroads are interested shall, so far as possible, be filled by Members favorable to the railroads.

Ninth. The Association of American Railroads wanted to make sure that no member of its own staff would do any lobbying, and that they would only make appearances before congressional committees in hearings on bills.

Mr. President, listen especially to this: The association expressed the opinion that effective work with Congress on railroad association bills is not done at hearings held by congressional committees which consider the legislation. Think of that. I call the attention of my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which committee has jurisdiction of questions affecting the railroads, to the fact that two men in whom he believes and with whom he associated, former Senators Wheeler and Truman, reported that the association expressed the opinion that effective work with Congress on railroad association bills is not done in the hearings upon legislation, which are called from time to time, held by the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Such hearings, in the opinion of the railroad association, "are largely matters of scenery. Effective work can only be done through personal interviews with Congressmen by men having influence over them."

Is their name legion? Cry out their names. Stigmatize and crucify them before the American people, and leave the little man to wonder what it is all about, and to wonder whether we in Government care anything about him except to get his vote at election time. Ah, Mr. President, the disillusionment of people is a tragic thing, and it is going on under this Capitol dome, day after day, and night after night. But in the meantime I want to note two facts.

The revelations by Senators Wheeler and Truman were made over a period of years begining a decade ago. The policies and purposes of the railroad association which I have today described were spread fully on the record of the Senate committee and of the Senate year after year during that decade. Among the facts so recorded was the name of the amiable and able official of the railroad association who developed these highly effective policies in dealing with Congress. His policies have never been publicly repudiated by the railroad association. Instead, a few months ago, the author of those policies of the railroad association in its dealings with Congress was elevated to the presidency of that great organization. I wish him great success in his office, for the service of the public interest. But I cannot believe that the policies he outlined in previous years have been discarded at a time when he and his associates are seeking to fasten on our Nation and on its plain people a railroad monopoly based upon the destruction of all our antitrust laws.

The junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] testified on January 24 to the sorry plight of the small businessman, and the domination held over him by big monopoly. Today the small businessman is in no position to defy or attack or even disagree with the railroad monopoly. They and their banking and other corporate connections constitute an inner ring, as the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee has established, in a long series of fully documented reports. The small businessman's hold on solvency and prosperity has been described here as a hold by his mere fingernails. Any powerful railroad can dislodge the position of the small businessman and can put him out of business, if his behavior is lacking in respect for the railroad companies.

Are we now to make the dominance of the railroads over the small businessman and over the farmer and industrial worker and consumer so complete that they will have no chance to protect themselves against monopoly? The passage of this railroad monopoly bill (S. 110) will put a tight monopoly noose around the neck of every individual in the United States.

The evils to which the antitrust laws are directed are so great that we should not for a moment relax our vigilance by any abdication of power over monopoly or the possibility of monopoly. I hold it is more true today than ever that we must use every possible agency against the growth of private power when it threatens to become stronger than the democratic state itself. And if this is an evil, if there is any remote possibility that private power shall become stronger than the state, why should we disarm ourselves by permitting any exemptions to the antitrust laws?

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. I had thought the Senator probably would bring out another point in his comment on the Wheeler-Truman report and what the committee discovered in the course of its investigations. That is in reference to the railroads using other organizations as friends to do their work for them. The Senator will recall that the Wheeler-Truman report disclosed that the railroads had spent more than $180,000,000 for memberships in organizations. That will be found in the report.

Mr. TOBEY. I touched upon that in my remarks on multiple memberships this morning.

Mr. AIKEN. I was afraid that had not been mentioned.

Mr. TOBEY. No; I brought that out before the Senator entered the Chamber, I think. I understand and concur entirely.

Now, Mr. President, I digress. This is Tuesday morning, the 10th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1947. Here is a bill which in its import and ramifications would affect every large corporation and individual and every businessman and every farmer in the country, and affect them adversely, in my honest judgment, if it is allowed to become law. Here is a bill being considered. Here is the Senator from the State of New Hampshire making a speech on it—whether it is a good speech or not, he would not dare say; but it is an honest speech, it is a forthright speech, and it is founded on fact. I look around this room. I am not speaking to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, because there are none to whom I may speak. I do see one or two on the other side. But I turn to this side of the great amphitheater, and I see there are three of us in all—four now, with a Senator coming in. I merely point out that I deplore the vacancy of the Senate Chamber; I can speak to an empty Chamber and the indictment will stand whether Senators are here or not. I think I am probably the only Republican who will take the floor against this measure, to speak in any extended manner, and it was known that I would speak at this time. I do not question Senators leaving the Chamber, for the pangs of hunger affect even Senators and may be very real. But I point out that "eyes they have, but they see not, ears they have, but they hear not," for they are not here. There is a kind of vacuum in the Chamber. We debate these questions fully, but the jury who are to consider the evidence and who, in my judgment, ought to hear the truth, frequently are not present. Some effort at least ought to be made to have a respectable group of the great party which I call the Republican Party here to listen to the debate on a measure for which, if I mistake not—for coming events cast their shadows before them—there will be a large preponderance of votes on this side of the aisle, although the bill contravenes our party's platforms and our protestations to high heaven about the concern and interest we have for the small businessman, or do we? But, enough of that.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I wish that all Senators had been permitted to hear this well considered, well prepared, forthright, factual speech that has been made by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire. I am sure, however, that the Senator will recall having made some comment earlier in his remarks about the fact that it has been stated that so many votes were committed to this bill that any resistance to it was futile and a waste of time. It occurs to me it might be that senatorial consciences are not yet entirely dead, and some Senators could not afford to expose their consciences to this very remarkable exposé that has been made by the Senator from New Hampshire. They could not bear to see the hideous monster they have unwittingly embraced, stripped and exposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. I thank the Senator. He gives me assurance. He gives me new hope that it is not entirely a case of "love's labor lost."

Mr. President, I intend now to revert to the railroad monopoly in the light of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was touched upon yesterday, on the floor.

THE RAILROAD MONOPOLY BILL AND THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Mr. President, the Interstate Commerce Commission was established in 1887. When the Sherman Act was enacted in 1890, it refused to remove the rate-making activities of railroads from antitrust legislation, though the argument was available that the subject should be placed in the hands of this already existent Commission.

When the Clayton Act was passed in 1914, the same was true. Congress again refused to exempt rate-making activities from the antitrust laws.

Within a few years after the enactment of the Sherman Act, the Supreme Court ruled that the railroads were subject to the antitrust statute. Yet almost 50 years have passed and every attempt to remove the railroads from that statute has been rejected. During all those 50 years the ICC was in existence. The argument has repeatedly been made that the subject should be left to the ICC, not the courts. Yet Congress during all these years has steadfastly refused to yield monopoly power to the railroads, or their rulers, the New York bankers, either by amendment of the Sherman Act or the Interstate Commerce Act, or the Clayton Act, or by any other legislation.

Now, an all-out attempt is being made. Some advocates of S. 110 say it does not exempt the railroads from the antitrust statutes, but merely provides for interpretation of those statutes. Those advocates have crossed their signals and their wires with their supporters in Washington. For the supporters of this legislation in the Interstate Commerce Committee did not use the argument of "interpretation" when they reported the selfsame bill to the Senate in 1946—Senate Report No. 1511. That report says expressly, on page 3, that the bill would have the effect of "removing from the scope of the antitrust laws" arrangements covered by the bill. That report, by the Senate advocates of the very same bill last year, specifically says that the bill "operates to remove from the operation of the antitrust laws" action taken with approval of the Commission—see page 13 of the report. The same page says that other statutes would not be affected by the bill in its "granting of relief from the antitrust laws."

Why do this in 1947, almost half a century after the Sherman Act was passed by Congress without removing the railroads from its scope, and one-third of a century after the Clayton Act was passed by Congress without removing the railroads from its provisions? The argument is made that things are different, by reason of the enactment of the Transportation Act of 1940, and its establishment of a "transportation policy." The 1940 statute was a codification of the existing law about railroads, motor carriers, and water carriers, putting them all under the ICC. Nothing is said in that statute to indicate any purpose to remove the railroads from the antitrust laws. If that was intended, it would have been necessary to have said so in that statute. The very fact that the 1940 statute does not say so, is proof positive of no such intention. The very fact that S. 110 is now being offered proves that the Transportation Act of 1940 did not intend, and did not effect, the removal of the railroads from the antitrust statutes.

The next argument is that we must trust the ICC. But why are we afraid to trust the Federal courts? It comes down to saying: "We distrust the Federal courts; we want to substitute a commission for the Federal courts."

What have the Federal courts done to merit this stigma and this condemnation? Is it that they have been inefficient in enforcing the antitrust laws? No; the argument of the advocates of S. 110 is that they do not want the Federal courts to entertain the lawsuits that are now in those courts to enforce the antitrust statutes against the railroads.

So the claim is not made that the Federal courts are inefficient, but rather that they are too efficient in enforcing the antitrust statutes. That means that the advocates of the bill expect the ICC to be milder, more lenient, less efficient, in enforcing the antitrust laws.

There is no claim by the bill's advocates that we need some governmental machinery to enforce the antitrust statutes and to make the railroads obey those statutes. If it were so, that claim should have been made much earlier in the past 47 years, since the Sherman Act was adopted. No; the claim is that they want to substitute one enforcing agency for another, one agency that has never had jurisdiction to enforce the antitrust statutes, in place of the Federal courts, which have had half a century in enforcing those statutes.

But then another argument is advanced. The railroad association says it needs the rate bureaus and all sorts of agreements between railroads. Nobody is saying that the railroads shall be deprived of those bureaus or those agreements, provided that they do not violate the law. Nobody is stopping business of all kinds from maintaining bureaus and making agreements, provided that they do not create monopoly or restraint of trade in violation of the antitrust statutes. What the advocates of the bill are really saying is that they want the rate bureaus and the carriers' agreements, even including every action that may violate the antitrust statutes.

Their answer to objections is that the ICC will stop them if their actions constitute violations of the antitrust policy of the American people.

So their argument is not that they want rate bureaus, and that those bureaus will be destroyed under the antitrust laws; their argument is that they would rather have the ICC enforce the antitrust laws affecting the railroads than to have the courts enforce those laws. And we are back again to the question, Do you want to oust the Federal courts because they are incompetent, because they enforce the antitrust laws too poorly, or because they enforce them too well?

The Interstate Commerce Commission already has too much to do. It cannot perform adequately all the duties with which it is already charged. It operates, therefore, through divisions. Each division is really the Commission, in the work assigned to that division. Are we going to entrust the enforcement of the antitrust laws to three men, who are already swamped with other work? Are we going to put that sacred, that basic, that fundamental policy of the American people in the hands of several commissioners, who operate as technicians, who make their reports in the most technical language, whose functioning is practically unknown to John Q. Public? Or are we going to leave it in the Federal courts, whose activities are known to the people?

Are we going to take the enforcement of these antitrust laws away from the Federal courts because they are doing too good a job of enforcing those laws to suit the railroad monopolists?

The pending bill provides the means for the first time in American history of exempting a basic industry from the prohibition of the antitrust law. It sets a pattern for other big businesses to be immunized from the antitrust laws, and they will certainly follow in its train. This is the great precedent. That being so, then we are on the road to cartels, monopolies and eventually nationalization, certainly, of the railroads.

The bill provides the ways and means of placing every activity of the railroads and other land and water carriers under the control of groups dominated by the Association of American Railroads.

The Senate should understand that the bill does not relate only to rate-making, which is, of course, of primary concern to the shipping public. It should also understand that in that field of rate-making the existing law permits carriers to get together for the purpose of making joint rates, thus facilitating the free flow of commerce. There is no legislation needed for that purpose, for Congress has already recognized in the Interstate Commerce Act the need for such collaboration.

This bill extends to every activity of carriers, including servicing and facilities.

I submit that if there is any justification for private companies operating public transportation systems, it must be on the basis that the carriers should compete in improving their facilities and in improving their services. Such collaboration as is necessary in this field and which does not restrain commerce is not a violation of the Sherman Act, but if it is, clearly it should not be immunized from that act. In other words, a conference of competing carriers should not be permitted to prevent a railroad from putting on improved passenger equipment nor should a group of competing carriers prevent a carrier from speeding up his service or putting in improvements that would attract more business to the road.

The record is replete with instances of such things happening. For example, air-conditioning was prohibited on western trains and one railroad was prevented from putting on a streamline train. These are some of the charges in the Government's suit, and I am sure the Senate will agree that no legislation should be passed which would permit a continuation of such practices.

Let us hear no more about the Commission supervising all such activities, for it must be apparent that it would be physically impossible for any body of men to do so. I repeat, under the bill, what the Commission approves is the basic agreement, and from that basic agreement will flow immunity from the antitrust laws for all activities thereunder. This is the very antithesis of American private enterprise. It is the road to facsism in American business, and the people will not tolerate the tremendous power which will be placed in the Association of American Railroads as the over-all agency dominating this basic industry.

Former Senator Wheeler introduced a bill in 1943 on request. Everyone was against it, including the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the committee failed to act on the bill after extensive hearings, or to adopt any substitute.

Mr. President, a few years ago this Nation lost a great public servant. He was a member of the United States Supreme Court. I refer to the late Justice Louis Brandeis, of Boston. When Justice Brandeis was appointed to the Supreme Court I was a younger man. I shall never forget the calumny and abuse that were heaped upon that man by our financial interests in trying to thwart his nomination and confirmation. No nominee for public office ever went through a greater hell than did Louis Brandeis. But finally his nomination was confirmed and he took his place on the Court. He was the great liberal of all time, the people's friend, a man who understood the needs of the public, and who understood legislation and court law. Louis Brandeis has something to say about this question. Although dead, he speaks to us today.

The need for competition, as well as regulation, in the railroad industry was forcefully expressed on more than one occasion by Mr. Justice Brandeis:

No one has recognized more fully than members of the Interstate Commerce Commission the limitation of accomplishment through railroad regulation. No one recognizes better than they the continuing need of competition to secure satisfactory service * * * To abandon competition in transportation, and rely upon regulation as a safeguard against the evils of monopoly would be like surrendering liberty and regulating despotism. (Louis D. Brandeis, Business—A Profession (1933) 295–299.)

Again quoting Mr. Justice Brandeis:

No system of regulation can safely be substituted for the operation of individual liberty as expressed in competition. It would be like attempting to substitute a regulated monarchy for our republic. Human nature is such that monopolies, however, well intentioned, and however well regulated, inevitably become, in course of time, oppressive, arbitrary, unprogressive, and inefficient. (Alpheus T. Mason, Brandeis: A Free Man's Life (1946) 181.)

Justice Brandeis further said:

It has been suggested that we accept the proposed monopoly of transportation but provide safeguards.

Oh, that the whole Senate could hear him.

This would be like surrendering liberty and substituting despotism with safeguards. There is no way in which to safeguard people from despotism except to prevent despotism. There is no way to safeguard the people from the evils of a private transportation monopoly except to prevent the monopoly. (Felix Frankfurter (ed.), Mr. Justice Brandeis (1932), 134. See also Alfred Lief (ed.), the Brandeis Guide to the Modern World (1941), 179.)

Mr. President, as I conclude this talk, let me ask my colleagues—those who are present and those who are not—to ponder well on this specious attempt to nullify the antitrust laws of our country, which have been on the statute books for decades and which, properly enforced, stand as a bulwark of protection to the people, for whom, in the last analysis, we are trustees, charged with the prime duty of protecting their interests. We have a great trust imposed upon us. We should keep faith with the people.

The bill, Senate bill 110, should therefore, in my opinion, consistent with the people's interest, be voted down. Let us always remember that impulses from the privileged are omnipresent and strong; the voice of the unorganized, weak and faltering.

Let me say a word to the members of my party, the Republican Party. How can we vote for this bill, which, in its purposes and effect, will, if enacted, contravene our party platform's strong statement against monopolies and favoring the enforcement of the antitrust laws, especially in view of our noble professions of deep concern and interest in protecting the interests of the small businessmen of our Nation?

In my opinion, the Republican Party, by opposing this legislation, would make a much more effective record of its proclaimed interest in small business than by any amount of printed verbiage in its party platforms. A test of our sincerity of purpose in this great objective is posed in the words of Holy Writ—"By their fruits ye shall know them."

I love my party, and I believe in it. It has always been my party, with the exception of those years when I followed the immortal Theodore Roosevelt as a Bull Mooser, for which I make no apology. Something of the soul of those great gatherings in Chicago and of that great man entered into me then, and I have never lost it—a zeal for public life, a passion for the interests of inarticulate people. So I, CHARLES TOBEY, Republican, stand on the Republican side of the aisle and make an earnest, sincere appeal to my colleagues today, before they support this legislation, which in the last analysis would strike down enforcement of the antitrust laws in favor of special interests, and to let the courts rule on these pending two great cases. In my judgment the interests of the people are safe with the courts. I charge my colleagues that we should measure up to this great stewardship as trustees for the interests of the little people of this country.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert as a part of my remarks a letter from the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. signed by R. W. Purcell, vice president and chief counsel of that company, from which letter I should like to quote one sentence:

In conclusion, let me say that rather than enactment of S. 110 in its present form, I would much prefer to see the cases which are presently pending adjudicated to finality at which time the need for, and scope of, legislation could be better ascertained.

I should like to insert also a telegram from Mr. Robert R. Young, president of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., expressing his opposition to the legislation; and also an unusual letter from John L. King, of the Washington State Grange, enclosing an evaluation of Senate bill 110 by the Washington State Grange, which I commend to anyone who desires the true facts connected with this legislation.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILROAD CO.,
Cleveland, Ohio, April 14, 1947.

Senator CHARLES W. TOBEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TOBEY: A few weeks ago I appeared before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee and stated my views concerning S. 110—sometimes referred to as the Bulwinkle bill—designed to legalize rate committee and numerous other conference activities of the railroad industry. My views generally were in opposition to the bill as presently drawn. Since that time, however, confusion has been created by statements emanating from certain of the proponents of the bill which were in substance that I favored the legislation with slight modifications.

As a result of the confusion you have asked me to advise you whether the bill as presently amended is satisfactory. It is not.

I stated in my testimony, and I repeat here, that I believe rate conference activity suitably circumscribed and properly regulated under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission is both desirable and necessary. S. 110 does not satisfactorily provide for this for several reasons, one of which is that its rate-making provisions are hopelessly interwoven with its provisions relating to services and facilities.

As I stated to the committee, there should be no legislation permitting the legalization, either with or without the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, of agreements restricting facilities and services to be offered by the carriers to the public. In the absence of legislation, reasonable agreements among carriers to provide services and facilities are not today unlawful. There is, therefore, no need for legislation which would open an avenue for legalization—or argument over the legalization—of all agreements. Any such legislation would, in my opinion, be harmful and would restrict railroad progress.

There are presently pending two cases involving the application of the antitrust laws to the railroad industry. One is the case pending in the Supreme Court instituted by the State of Georgia which challenges the legality of present rate-making practices. The other is the case instituted by the Department of Justice in Lincoln, Nebr., which challenges not only rate-making practices but also the legality of numerous practices and agreements relating to services and facilities.

I believe that legislation could be prepared governing rate-making activities which would provide a feasible conference method of rate making under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission which would meet the problems posed by the Georgia case. I do not believe, however, that legislation should be enacted which would deprive the public of an adjudication of the legality or illegality of those practices relating to services and facilities of which complaint is made in the Lincoln case.

In conclusion, let me say that rather than enactment of S. 110 in its present form, I would much prefer to see the cases which are presently pending adjudicated to finality at which time the need for, and scope of, legislation could be better ascertained.

I hope that this letter contains the information which you requested of me. If there is anything further that I can do, please feel free to call on me.

Sincerely yours,

R. W. PURCELL.

NEW YORK, N. Y., March 4, 1947.

Hon. CHARLES W. TOBEY,
Senate Office Building:

In answer to your telegram, we can see no need for the Bulwinkle bill, although some legislation clarifying the rate situation would be constructive. The balance of the Bulwinkle bill relating to service agreements we consider quite unnecessary and perhaps even harmful because it may imply some sympathy on the part of Congress for agreements in restraint of progress.

ROBERT R. YOUNG.

WASHINGTON STATE GRANGE,
Seattle, Wash., May 23, 1947.

The Honorable CHARLES W. TOBEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SENATOR TOBEY: I am enclosing our evaluation of S. 110. I thought you would be especially interested in this evaluation because of the work you have done yourself on this problem. In preparing this report, we consulted prominent attorneys here in Seattle who are familiar with the antitrust laws and freight rate problems.

I am thoroughly convinced that S. 110 would be very detrimental to the economic development of the West, and certainly it appears to be diametrically opposed to the general concept of free enterprise, which the railroads themselves had been advocating.

I would appreciate any comments you have regarding this evaluation.

Sincerely,

JOHN L. KING.

AN EVALUATION OF S. 110

The following statement is submitted concerning the Reed-Bulwinkle bill (S. 110). The committee draft of S. 110 was carefully examined to determine whether it contained the same objectionable features which were present in the Bulwinkle bill, which passed the House in the last session of Congress.

The conclusion, based upon an objective study of its provisions, is that it does. The passage of this bill would not only result in a break-down in the protection of the public against the price-fixing activities of the railroads, but would establish a precedent for the newspapers, medical associations, and other industries which desire to escape the application of the antitrust laws.

There are certain fundamental evils in this bill or any other bill which grants a major industry immunity from the antitrust laws. No matter how many safeguards you include for the protection of the public, the evil is still there.

In the special number of the United States Chamber of Commerce publication, Governmental Affairs, March 13, 1947, it is said:

"For two generations, railroads have arrived at proposals for changes in rates and service through various conferences. Since shortly after World War I the procedure of rate conferences has been under a plan advocated by shippers providing systematic published notices of all rate changes and opportunity for hearings on them. After the passage of the Motor Carrier Act in 1935, motor carriers adopted similar procedures.

"Prior to this decade, the legality or propriety of such procedures was not questioned. The Interstate Commerce Commission, charged with the duty of regulating domestic carriers (other than air lines) in the public interest, knew of and encouraged them and on at least one occasion, when the railroads applied for a rate increase, the Commission in effect told them to get together and work out some needed economies."

Now, let us take a look at the record. As far back as 1897, in the case of United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association; and again, in the following year, in the case of United States v. Joint Traffic Association, the Supreme Court of the United States held that group action by the railroads in fixing noncompetitive rates was a violation of the Sherman Act and contrary to the basic public policy of free enterprise and independent initiative.

The conference method of fixing noncompetitive rates is nothing more nor less than price fixing. If the corner grocers or the farmers or the plumbers got together and decided that a reasonable price for certain commodities or certain work would be thus and so, those companies or individuals would be subject to prosecution under the Sherman Antitrust Act.

But the railroads have said, "We are different." They would have you believe that because of the "hundreds of thousands of individual rates" it is impossible for the carriers to operate without such a law.

Why is this so?

Under the Interstate Commerce Act each carrier (and, in the case of joint rates, the connecting carriers) is required to fix the rates it desires to charge, such rates becoming effective when filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission in accordance with the act. The published charges may be protested, and when a rate in force or proposed is found to be unjust or unreasonable or unduly discriminatory or otherwise unlawful, the Interstate Commerce Commission is charged with the duty "to determine the just and reasonable rate." As expressed by the Supreme Court, the Interstate Commerce Act provides "a zone of reasonableness" between the maximum, above which rates may be excessively high, and the minimum, below which the charges may be too low or noncompensatory; and it is the plan of the act that within these areas rates initiated by individual carriers or joint rates initiated by connecting carriers shall be adjusted by competitive conditions. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & Nashville Railroad (227 U. S. 88 (1912); Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States (289 U. S. 627, 636 (1932)); United States v. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Ry. Co. (294 U. S. 499, 505 (1934)); State of Georgia v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co. et al (324 U. S. 439, 65 S. Ct. 716, 727 (1945)).

As stated by the Supreme Court in the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific case and in the Georgia case, within this "zone of reasonableness" the carrier is "free to adjust its charges for itself." And as stated by the Supreme Court in the Texas & Pacific Railway case, "as the carriers are in competition for the business they may, within the zone of reasonableness, prescribed by the statute, adjust their rates so as to obtain or retain the desired traffic for their own lines," it being the "theory of the act * * * that carriers in initiating rates may adjust them to competitive conditions."

S. 110 would reverse this long-established regulatory scheme by permitting the authorization of agreements setting up private rate-making organizations which, by concerted action, could fix the rates within the area now preserved for the interplay of competition. The relief sought by the Government in its suit against the Association of American Railroads et al., and by the State of Georgia against the Pennsylvania Railroad et al. would preserve the scheme for the play within that area of competitive factors.

It should be here stated that the Government's suit does not seek to enjoin activities of so-called rate bureaus which are not unlawful or to stop them from performing functions properly designed to accomplish efficiency in rate publication and proper cooperative exchange of information. The suits do not seek to enjoin connecting carriers from freely collaborating in the establishment of joint rates in accordance with the Interstate Commerce Act, or to prevent individual or connecting carriers from initiating rates through rate-bureau facilities, so long as such rates are not fixed on a noncompetitive basis, and so long as individual or connecting roads are not bound to the views, conclusions, or action of the rate bureau or other roads or groups.

Section 6 of S. 110 provides:

"The Commission shall not approve under this section any agreement which establishes a procedure for the determination of any matter through joint consideration unless it finds or by condition requires that under the agreement there is or shall be accorded to each party the free and unrestrained right to act contrary to and independently of the initial determination or report, or any subsequent determination or report, arrived at through such procedure, and unless it finds or by condition requires that all carriers of the same class (as defined in paragraph (4) of this section) within the territorial and organizational scope of such agreement shall be eligible to become and remain parties to the agreement upon application and payment of charges applicable to other parties of the same class. Nothing in this section and no approval of any agreement by the Commission under this section shall be so construed as in any manner to remove from the purview of the antitrust laws any restraint upon the right of independent action by means of boycott, duress, or intimidation."

This section does not overcome the objection that the bill does not, by its terms, guarantee a carrier the right of independent action. The right of a dissident carrier to take independent action in the face of the integrated structure of traffic associations, with their inherent power through collective economic pressure, is more apparent than real, in our opinion. Certainly, the activities of the associations in the past do not justify the hope which has been expressed that any individual carrier would retain the right to independent action.

Here, again, let us look at the record. Time and time again we have seen occasions when the Association of American Railroads, through its traffic committees, has impeded and prevented independent competitive action. In the first place, the system is, by its very nature, coercive from top to bottom, as must necessarily follow from the fact that each individual railroad is dependent upon other railroads for through and overhead traffic, which together constitute more than 50 percent of the total tonnage carried by any railroad. The interdependence of railroads indicated by this basic factor is increased by the highly complex financial and operating relationships between railroads and by the delicate essences of economic coercion implicit in any complex industrial relationship.

The history of the activities of the railroads shows that they have never hesitated to impose economic sanctions upon recalcitrant roads by forcing unfair divisions upon such roads and withholding overhead traffic from them.

Perhaps the most serious objection which we have to the Reed bill is that the implications of the price fixing, which would be sanctioned by Congress, extend far beyond the limits of the transportation industry. That is to say, there is a different situation in the transportation industry than that which would prevail in a more or less independent industry. The power to fix freight rates is, in effect, the power to fix prices of practically every basic industry in the country. Transportation costs are a major element in every industrial pricing system and the power to control the cost of transportation is largely the power to dictate initially the location of every industrial enterprise and subsequently the success or failure of those enterprises.

Factors, such as cost of replacement, overhead, volume, sales costs, etc., have little to do in the determination of rates. Railroads are more interested in maintaining preexisting price structures and traffic movements. This, in turn, is influenced by the number and kinds of carriers in competition with the railroads. It is only natural that the railroads desire a rigid price structure throughout the transportation field. That is why they were the leading proponents of the laws to regulate motor carriers and water carriers. The complexity of the rate structure of unregulated carriers made it impossible for the railroads to fix rigid noncompetitive rates.

Proponents of S. 110 will point out that section 4 of the bill provides that the Commission shall not approve any agreement between or among carriers of different classes unless it finds that such agreement is limited to matters relating to freight classifications or to transportation under joint rates or over through routes * * *. This, they say, will prevent agreements among the different types of carriers. What they fail to mention is that one regulatory body is given the power to fix rates of all carriers. The implication is clear. The Commission in approving any particular agreement must consider those rates in relation to the rates submitted to it by other classes of carriers. This must of necessity be one of the basic issues in its consideration. The normal interplay of competition between different classes of carriers cannot exist as long as a single unit has the power to fix rates for all of them.

The ICC is given power to fix prices subject to certain limitations. One of the criteria set out in section 2 is that any agreement which it approves must not unduly restrain competition. However, in paragraphs of the bill it is stated that no agreement approved by the Commission shall be deemed a restraint of trade within the meaning of the antitrust laws. These paragraphs, considered in para materia reveal a perilous situation. In effect, Congress is saying to the Commission, "You may not approve any agreement in restraint of trade, but if you do, they shall not constitute a violation of the antitrust laws." More specifically, in paragraph 9 the Commission is given authority to approve time schedules. Under this authority it may say that X train shall leave at 12 noon and Y train will leave at 12 midnight. Competition between X and Y is not only restrained—it is completely eliminated. It is true that they may provide a more round-the-clock service, but there will be little incentive on the part of the railroads to provide new cars and those additional comforts and low-price meals to win passengers away from competitors, if schedules are fixed by the Commission and no competition exists.

If you think this is a fantastic possibility, look at the record in the Pullman case. There the railroads agreed among themselves not to put the newer types of railroad cars into operation.

The industrial basing point system and the noncompetitive freight rate structure go hand in hand. Under the basing point system no account is taken of the relation of the particular plant from which the goods are actually shipped or the method of transportation employed. For example, just outside of the city of Laramie, Wyo., is a small town, Sinclair, which is the location of the refinery owned by the company of the same name. The refinery is located in the center of a large oil producing field. You would expect the price of the gasoline to reflect the absence of transportation charges, but that is not the case. The price of gasoline in Sinclair was based on the rail price from Chicago, the nearest basing point.

These price-fixing schemes could not exist in a competitive system of determining transportation charges. The industrial basing point system must have a rigid freight rate structure behind it.

The evils of the basing point system are well known. It has been employed historically to perpetuate the industrial concentration in certain areas of the country to the exclusion of new competitors in other areas. Discriminatory rate structures have been employed to suppress the rights of new industries both in the South and in the West. There are a number of examples of these discriminatory practices alleged in the complaints of State of Georgia v. Pennsylvania Railroad and U. S. v. Association of American Railroads et al. An examination of the trial brief filed by the Government in the latter case is replete with illustrations of the practices to which we have referred.

Perhaps the most amusing anomaly of S. 110 is that apparently the same persons and political parties which protested vigorously in the recent election campaign against what it called tendencies toward regimentation and centralization of power in the Government at Washington are now engaging in one of the most effective and expensive lobbying campaigns to obtain the enactment of a law which, in our opinion, would set up just the sort of bureaucracy to which they recently objected. Of course, the stakes are high and they can afford to spend a good deal of money to accomplish their purpose.

As just one last thought, let us assume for a moment that the bill became a law and that Congress duly turned its supervision over to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Then, let us just suppose that an economy-minded Congress decided to reduce the appropriation of that agency. The hands of the Department of Justice would be tied, while the railroads of this country were run by the Association of American Railroads, a group whose membership does not contain a single representative of the public. It is not a pleasant thought.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE SAVANNAH RIVER

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, in the South, and particularly in the State I have the honor in part to represent and in Georgia, history is repeating itself.

Every conceivable effort was made to prevent development of this Nation's power resources by the Federal Government. There were those who contended that our rivers and streams did not belong to the people. Congress and the courts have decided to the contrary; and in recent years we have witnessed a remarkable increase in the value of these waterways to our people.

The Muscle Shoals fight, which began here in the Wilson administration, is well known to all of us. The Commonwealth & Southern, one of the larger power-holding companies, fought at every turn, in the courts and out, the development of the Tennessee River. Had their philosophy prevailed, there would have been no TVA, and the great Tennessee River would not today be giving to the people of that section the benefits they now enjoy.

When the Government won its fight and the Commonwealth & Southern was compelled to bow to the will of the people, I thought that never again would we witness in the South a campaign conducted by holding companies to block and thwart the Government in developing water-power resources.

Today in the South, however, we are witnessing the same tactics, the same double dealing, and the same stifling efforts to which the Commonwealth & Southern resorted in their fight against TVA.

On the Savannah River there is one of the greatest potential power developments in the South. Tied in with this development are flood control, navigation, reforestration, and recreation. The development of the Savannah River means for my people and the people of Georgia what the development of the Tennessee Valley country meant to the people of that section. Based on the testimony of the Army engineers and other competent persons, there is no doubt but that the Government development of the Savannah River is a good investment and will pay handsome dividends. Believing this, the Congress has authorized Clark Hill development, and already $6,000,000 have been expended toward its completion.

Here in Washington during recent weeks we have witnessed the lobbying activities of the Savannah River Electric Co. to shut down this development by the Federal Government of one of our great rivers.

The issue involved in the Clark Hill project is more important than the development of the power resources of this one river. The issue is whether or not the Federal Government is going to scuttle the power-development program of Franklin D. Roosevelt and other great progressives who fought so long and so hard to remove the yoke of the Power Trust from our people.

Today the American people, as never before, are enjoying the benefits of electricity. They are doing this because the Federal Government broke the monopoly the Power Trust enjoyed in power resources.

As a member of the Public Works Administration and later as governor, I led the fight in my State for the Buzzard Roost and Santee-Cooper developments which we now have there. I know how public sentiment can be poisoned, how people can be misled, how people in powerful positions can be influenced when the huge utility-holding companies turn loose their money and their lobbyists against a State or Federal power development.

In counties of South Carolina and Georgia, lawyers have been hired, advertising space bought in county papers, and every conceivable means have been employed by Savannah River Electric Co., in an effort to mislead the people there that the power company could develop Clark Hill without cost to the taxpayer and at the same time bring the same benefits to the people. They said the same thing about TVA and the other power projects which have been developed by the Government in the various sections of the country. At one time they contended there would not be a market for the power developed by these Government projects; that contention has been exploded, because in all these power developments there has been a market for the power developed, and more important, the rates charged the people and the consumers have been greatly reduced, and rural electrification lines developed in all directions.

I cannot conceive that the Savannah River Electric Co. can succeed in its efforts to take over the Clark Hill development on the Savannah River. I am confident that this Congress—even though controlled by the Republican Party—is not going to turn back the progress and reverse the power policies which have been pursued by the Federal Government for almost two decades. The American people in election after election have approved the Government's power policy.

Indeed, the same Savannah River Electric Co. which is now fighting Clark Hill, through its recognized spokesmen, have approved the development of this project by the Federal Government. The first time I ever heard of the Savannah River development was, as a member of the Public Works Board in South Carolina, when representatives urged that this project be included in a PWA program.

And what is more astounding, the very company which is now lobbying here in Washington to defeat an appropriation for continuing the Clark Hill development gave its approval and urged that the Government go forward with the development.

This company, a subsidiary of Commonwealth & Southern, for a number of years held a license for a power plant at Clark Hill on the Savannah River. They even acquired some acreage for the basin. After holding this license for a number of years and making no efforts to develop it, this company turned back the license to the Government. The company then said, "You take it, we don't want it." But now after the Government took it, spent $6,000,000, but all plans have been completed and approved, the Commonwealth & Southern, through their puppets, come up and say, "We want Clark Hill back." Well, they are not going to get it.

This week hearings will be held by a House Appropriations Subcommittee on the appropriation of funds to continue Clark Hill. As a matter of information for the Congress, at this time I want to quote statements made by an official of Commonwealth & Southern in support of this project. A hearing was held in Augusta, Ga., at which the late Preston Arkwright, president of the Georgia Power Co. and head of the other subsidiary of the Commonwealth & Southern, which hold the license for the Clark Hill project, testified.

This is what he said:

I didn't come here for the purpose of hurting this enterprise. I came here with the view of helping wherever possible. We are not in objection or antagonism toward it. We wish to cooperate with it to the full extent of our ability. I would like to say that we are here for the purpose of its support.

Further in the testimony, Mr. President, the president of the holding company of the Georgia Power Co. testified as follows:

I don't know what you want to do to dispose of the power; I don't know what the policy of the Government would be, but if an arrangement could be made with this company for the absorption of that power, or such part as you allocate to Georgia, which you fix to go into the territory of our company, and on somewhat the plan of the Boulder Dam arrangement, I think we could work out, if you wished it, a satisfactory arrangement whereby that part could be absorbed. I am not saying that we take it all. I believe the Georgia Power Co. could in time absorb it all. Not all at once. Now that means that until that was absorbed, if you wished us to absorb it, it would be turning over to the support of the development all the future growth in the electric power market in the main part of Georgia for at least until 1945.

Further on in the testimony the follow was stated by the president of the company:

I do not demand that we distribute it.

Then later on he said:

But, regardless of what plan you may finally recommend, we stand ready to cooperate to the fullest extent in making available to you any information we may have which you may think pertinent to your investigation.

I hope you will act favorably on the project.

That was the testimony, Mr. President, before the Federal Power Commission, by representatives of the same organization which this year are trying to undermine and destroy that which they approved after the Federal Government had already spent $6,000,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I appreciate that thought on the part of the Senator from Georgia, but I have a very important engagement with some Government officials this afternoon.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall, of course, defer to the wishes of the Senator.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, this is the same company, Members of the Senate, which held the license for this development and did not dig one shovel of dirt or make one effort to carry out promises they made to the Government if granted the license. It is true the company did buy some land, but they dilly-dallied and did nothing toward controlling the floods of this river, harnessing its vast power resources, or controlling erosion on the area which would surround the basin. Having failed to keep faith with the Government and exercise the right of their license, the company returned it to the Government. In other words, they bottled up the project for development by other private resources or by the Government for a number of years. They fooled the people of the Savannah River section and now they ask the right to fool them again.

What is more astounding, they are asking that the wheels be stopped on this development after the Government has already started it. They are asking the Government to abandon it and give the Commonwealth and Southern an opportunity to do something they could have done years ago.

I am confident that this Congress is going to continue this development and we are not going to let this great holding company of New York go down into the South and drive the Government out under the pretense that they will do something they once said they would do, but failed to do.

As I said in the beginning, the issue here is more than this one river and this one development. If this great power utility-holding company should happen to succeed in making this Congress do a flip-over and kill one of the best power developments in the South, then those of you from other States who have similar potential power developments may well expect a similar fate.

There are other great power resources in the United States which need to be developed. I realize the financial strain on our Government as a result of our war debt; but one of the best ways to meet that obligation is to fully utilize our natural resources, and these power projects are selfliquidating.

Mr. President, no government ever went broke developing for the people their own resources.

Look at these power developments over the United States today. They are monuments to the wisdom of great men in government who defied the power trust and said these streams and rivers are going to be developed by the people and for the people. Those developments helped us win the war. They are paying out and the people are receiving untold benefits from them.

The Government can make no better investment than to develop soundly and wisely the natural resources which now lie dormant and are doing no good to anyone.

The Clark's Hill project has passed all the tests. It is regarded as the best undeveloped power resource in the South. The sale of power will assure a return to government sufficient to pay the interest on the investment and liquidate the debt. It will make the Savannah River navigable the year around, from Augusta to Savannah. The basin will cover mostly eroded land on which no farmer could ever enjoy a decent standard of living. As a result of controlling the floods of the Savannah River, the Clark's Hill Dam will open up for cultivation some of the most highly productive land in the South along the Savannah River between Augusta and Savannah. This acreage will be equal to the acreage of the basin. In other words, our section will be trading old, worn-out, eroded land for rich and highly productive land.

Through the Forest Service, the Government will bring back the forests on the Savannah River watershed and will protect the reservoir from silt. Under Government supervision, this area will become a recreational center in a section which badly needs it.

These and many other benefits will flow from this great development on the Savannah River. I appeal to every liberal and progressive-minded Member of Congress to remember the twenties when the power trust octopus grew so powerful that it sought to dominate the political life of this Nation. Our memories are not so short that we do not remember the rates these power companies gouged from the pocketbooks of the people. We remember, too, how they brought down their high rates when the Government demonstrated how cheaply electricity could be generated.

Mr. President, I can remember, and I am sure my colleagues remember, when persons of a modest income could not afford an electric ice box, an electric hot-water heater, or an electric pump. The cost of electricity was so high that only those in the higher brackets could enjoy the comforts and benefits its use brought.

And how about rural electrification? Members of the Senate will recall that the power companies refused to supply electricity except to those who lived in highly concentrated population areas. The power companies said they could not afford to run lines into our rural areas. They were unwilling to take any of their profits from the cities to extend the benefits of electricity to the farmers who produce the commodities which support the cities. But when the Government said it was going to bring electricity to the farmers, the power companies changed their tune and rushed in to skim the cream off this rural power market.

There are those who contend that this great stride in the development of our power resources would have followed as a matter of course, regardless of what the Government did. I do not think anyone seriously believes that, but we hear it just the same as these giant utility holding companies make another upward surge to block the Government's power program, regain their control over political life, and undo what has been done during 15 years of progressive thinking on this subject by all branches of Government.

Could we have any better example of what the power companies would have done had they been left alone than the one we have in this very Clark Hill project? The Commonwealth & Southern held a permit for this Savannah River development from 1927 to 1932. That holding company has extensive resources. This project could have been completed 15 years ago and all this time the people in the Savannah River country could have been enjoying the benefits of the development, had Commonwealth & Southern discharged its responsibility. Just think of the war plants and industrial concerns which would have located in this section had the Commonwealth & Southern developed Clark Hill when it held a permit.

Now, after all these years of thwarting this development, after blowing hot and blowing cold, after saying they wanted the Government to build it, this Commonwealth & Southern crowd have the unmitigated gall to come up here and ask Congress to deauthorize a project which Congress authorized in 1944, and to turn over to them a project already authorized by Congress, and on which $6,000,000 of the taxpayers' money has been appropriated and spent.

The Commonwealth & Southern has not enough money to hire enough lawyers, to buy enough newspaper space, and to peddle enough propaganda to defeat this project.

I say this because I know the people of South Carolina are not going to be fooled. They tried to fool my people about Santee-Cooper and Buzzards Roost; but we built those projects, and they are paying off, and the people have benefited world without end from their development by the Government.

This project is going to be continued by this Congress because a majority of its membership still believes in the development of our natural resources by the Federal Government. There is no partisan politics in this issue. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I voted for Government development of natural resources in the West, just as Republican Senators joined me in supporting similar projects in the South.

Partisan politics stop at the river's edge when it comes to developing our great streams and other natural resources.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEM in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to commend the Senator from South Carolina not only for the other points he has made in the course of his speech, but particularly for the point he has just made. Certainly when it comes to developing the natural resources of the United States, all partisan politics should stop. I think the Senator from South Carolina is making a worth-while contribution to the fight which lies some days ahead of us, but which will develop in this Congress on the question of whether the development of the vast natural resources of the country shall be developed for the benefit of all the people rather than for the benefit of the private dollars of a few vested interests in the United States.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Oregon for that statement, and I assure him that during the number of years that he and I have served in the Senate, both of us have been interested in the development of the Nation's natural resources by the Government, for the benefit of the people, rather than for the benefit of the power companies. I assure the Senator that there never will be any partisan politics in my position regarding these matters.

Mr. President, I know Congress is not going to turn its back on the Clark Hill development. To do so would be an admission that overnight the Power Trust has grown so powerful that it can force Congress to eat out of its hand and march up the hill and down again.

No; the word is not going to be sent from Washington to those constructing the dam at Clark Hill to "cease hauling dirt, move out your equipment, and abandon what you have done because the Commonwealth & Southern has made Congress reverse itself."

No; the word is not going to be sent to the hundreds of people now working on this project to "pick up your shovels and return home," because a utility holding company in New York was able to influence Congress to cut off appropriations and let this great development die on the vine.

Indeed not. When the Government of the United States starts something, it finishes it. The Government has started Clark Hill and it is going to finish it, just as it finished Muscle Shoals and TVA, just as it finished Bonneville Dam, just as it finished Hoover Dam and the other great power projects which every day are pouring out the better things of life to the people of these United States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am extremely interested in the subject matter of the Senator's discussion, not only with respect to Clark Hill, but with respect to the general philosophy of the public development of the natural resources which belong to all the people of the United States. I am sure the Senator from South Carolina realizes that if Congress were to adopt a policy of inagurating a project of this nature and then abandoning it because some public utility combination had changed its mind and had decided that it wished to take over the project, after having advocated its development by the Government, no persons living within the range of the benefits of any such project would ever know where they stood. The Government would be passing laws and making appropriations to start such projects, and then the utility companies could go all over the United States and cull out those which they wished to have the Government abandon, and perhaps would change the whole form of the enterprise to one that was solely related to power, without regard to all the other collateral benefits to the people residing in that section of the country. I cannot believe that any Congress would be so subservient to the utility interests of the Nation as completely to reverse itself, as it would be compelled to do if the Clark Hill project were abandoned at this stage of the proceedings. It would certainly be a death blow to a section of the country which offers great natural resources, which has never experienced any development through the expenditure of Federal funds.

The Senator from South Carolina and I jointly introduced a bill for the creation of a Savannah Valley Authority. The report of the engineers pointed out 11 dams which should be built on the Savannah River and its tributaries, and if we were to be so foolish as to cut the heart out of this project and surrender the Clark Hill Dam to the private-utility interests, it would sound the death knell to any further development of the project or any other sites approved by the Army engineers.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the distinguished Senator from Georgia for his valuable contribution.

I might say that the reason why we have not further pressed our bill for the 11 dams was that we thought that if the Clark Hill Dam were built first, it would further help the projects along and be of benefit to the people. But if this one dam is ever taken by private power interests, there is no other place on the Savannah River that could be properly developed without paying the stream flow or other excessive charges to the power companies.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is the key project.

Mr. MAYBANK. Yes; it is the key project.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I join with approval in the comments made by the Senator from Georgia. I think the tactics of the private utilities he has just described are not limited to his section of the country, however. It is a national pattern they are trying to get by with.

Let me point out to the Senators another part of the pattern. There has been a great deal of public development of power lines in this country. It has been necessary for the Government to build transmission lines into the sparsely populated areas to which the Senator from South Carolina has referred. These have been the areas which the private utilities would not serve when they were building their transmission lines. But now that the Government has developed power services to the sparsely populated areas, what are the private utilities trying to do? We find them active in the House, where the cuts were made in the appropriation bill for the development of western and southern power, trying to get provisions that substations cannot be built and transmission lines cannot be developed by the Government. They want the people of this country to pay for the development of the great power dams, and then the private utilities want to come in and take the power at the dam site and transmit the power for their own profit and advantage. They want to block the development of sound, self-liquidating public power projects.

I happen to be one who shares the view that we need public power projects as a check upon private power. I am not going to cast my vote in the Senate for any measure that will give to the private utility monopolies of this country an opportunity to come in and take at dam site all power and transmit it, as the Senator from South Carolina has indicated, to the populous areas of our States at rates which enable the private utilities to make big profits.

I think we should make clear at this session that we are going to develop the great hydroelectric plants of this country for all the people, and not for the profit of a few shareholders of a few private utilities. Our people are entitled to cheap power, and the best way to guarantee it to them is to make it possible for the Government to transmit it to them over its own transmission lines when the people want that form of transmission.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am sure we have all noted the revival of interest on the part of the private utilities. It is very marked in the case of the Rural Electrification Administration, one of the greatest agencies to serve the underprivileged people of this country that has ever been enacted into law by the Congress.

At the time the Rural Electrification Administration was proposed, the power companies took the position that it would be uneconomical for the Government to undertake to serve remote farm homes, and predictions were made on this floor when the bill was pending that the Government would suffer a great financial loss by virtue of its attempting to bring electric current to farm homes. All these predictions have failed. Practically all of the cooperatives are financially sound.

Today, however, we see that the private power interests are combating the rural electric cooperatives all over the United States, undertaking to go into areas and skim off the cream, thereby making it impossible for those living in the more sparsely settled areas to get current on their farms.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to say, in that connection, that I was fortunate enough to be Governor of South Carolina at the time the real start was made in rural electrification. We made no strides in rural electrification until we formed cooperatives in South Carolina, and the only way to get them formed was for me to threaten to veto the whole appropriation bill, and I did have to veto some sections because of the fight, day and night, by private power companies in South Carolina.

I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD a statement by Mr. Preston S. Arkwright, president of the Savannah River Electric Co., at a public hearing in Augusta, Ga., October 2, 1935.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Gentlemen, I didn't come here for the purpose of hurting this enterprise. I came here with the view of helping wherever possible. I do not want to volunteer anything except with the approval of the committee in charge of it. We did not initiate the petition for the development of Clark Hill. We are not in objection or antagonism toward it. We wish to cooperate with it to the full extent of our ability. I would like to say that we are here for the purpose of its support. Probably it might seem unusual to you that the electric power company in the immediate territory to be affected by the development of a hydroelectric plant by the Federal Government should not be in opposition or an antagonist but should come to support it. For my own part, I know of no other instance where that is so.

The Georgia Power Co. is the main distributor of electric service in the State of Georgia. It covers about 75 percent of the area of the State of Georgia, with its interconnected system including perhaps 80 percent of the population of the State of Georgia within the area served by this company. There are in Georgia two other electric power companies, one serving the city of Savannah and immediate neighborhood with which our lines are not connected, and we have no other connection with it. There is another company known as the Georgia Power & Light Co., whose name is similar to our company, but it is an absolutely distinct and separate company which serves a fringe of municipalities in the southwestern part of the State, and with which our transmission system is physically interconnected. Other than those two companies and certain municipally owned operations, the Georgia Power Co. furnishes electric power to the remainder of the State. So we are vitally concerned in the development of additional electric supply in this territory.

We have another interest in the proposed development. The Savannah River Electric Co. is an affiliate of the Georgia Power Co.; the common stock of both of them being owned by the Commonwealth & Southern Corp. The Savannah River Electric Co. was formed about the year 1926, and in that year it acquired the dam site where we proposed to locate a dam at Clark Hill, and it made certain surveys and acquired land for flood rights and got a license from the Federal Power Commission. The company went along until about 1929 with the intention of building and developing the Clark Hill Dam. When the bottom dropped out of the financial market and our business fell off we had to give up the plan—certainly temporarily—and I don't know when we could resume it. The Savannah River Electric Co. owns approximately 40,000 acres which we acquired in connection with the proposed Clark Hill development. Not all of this will be flooded. Of course, in acquiring the necessary land we had to acquire land in the uplands that would not be flooded. I would say that probably we own something over 50 percent of the land which you will need in proceeding with the Clark Hill development.

Now some statement has been made that the Georgia Power Co. has not sufficient capacity for the services of the territory, but that happens not to be the fact, at the present time, at least. We estimate that when the year 1935 is completed that we will have used about 1,400,000,000 kilowatt-hours with a maximum demand of approximately 300,000 kilowatts. This company has 24 hydroelectric plants, all of which are in the State of Georgia, and 32 steam plants. The installed capacity of our hydroelectric plants is 311,360 kilowatts, and for the steam plants 110,500 kilowatts, which gives a total of 421,860 kilowatts. We do have that installed capacity as an independent organization, but in a dry year that generating capacity of our own would be good for approximately 300,000 kilowatts. We have interconnections of our lines with other companies in other States. We have 4 interconnections with the Alabama Power Co. in Alabama. We have 1 interconnection with the Tennessee Power Co.; we have a connection with the Duke Power Co. at Tallulah Falls; we have interconnection with the South Carolina Power Co. at Augusta; and we have interconnection with the Georgia Power & Light Co. So we have 8 interconnecting lines with 5 companies in other States who, themselves, have a certain capacity of generating plants and equipment. The capacity of those interconnecting lines is 206,500 kilowatts. Of course, we can't use all of this at the same time we are using our total owned generating capacity, as our system could not take it. So, we figure we can use 110,000 kilowatts, which gives us a total capacity with interconnecting lines of 410,000 kilowatts.

I assume that in an investigation of this kind you want to know what the market is and what facilities there are now to supply it, and whether the market is being reasonably well supplied, and on that I want to say that any information that the Georgia Power Co. has is at your disposal. We will be glad to furnish you any information that you consider pertinent, by your own examination of our records or any statements you wish us to make of any information possessed by our personnel. In addition to those sources of supply now developed, we started some years ago the development of a water power near Milledgeville, Ga., with an installed capacity of 45,000 kilowatts, and from which we could get some 20,000 kilowatts at 50 percent load factor. (This is known as Furman Shoals on the Oconee River.) That is partially completed. We deferred the completion of that on account of the changed economic conditions, but it stands there with quite a large sum spent on it. The clearing is all made, the dam started and the machinery ordered. It would cost us about $4,000,000 to complete it, and it would yield about 162,000,000 kilowatt-hours per annum. Likewise, we completed about 1930 or 1931 a large steam generating plant with 1 unit having a rated capacity of 60,000 kilowatts, with provision made for the later installation of 3 additional units of like capacity each. It is apparent that by completion of the Furman Shoals hydro plant and the installation from time to time of the additional units in the steam plant any further supply which may be needed for some time could be provided very economically, considering that we have already spent a lot of money toward that end.

Now that would mean as far as the Georgia Power Co. is concerned, that it could not take any electric current from any source today, but its business is not going to stop today, I hope, and we have made an estimate of what our growth would be in Georgia territory basing it upon a past growth and basing it upon the business we have already, and also basing it upon the small growth in the past few years, from this we figure by the year 1945, we could, in addition to our present source of supply without adding to the steam plant and without completing the Furman Shoals development, use about 505,000,000 kilowatt-hours per annum which I understand is approximately the firm and secondary which you figure for Clarks Hill, so that by 1945 we feel we could absorb, if you wish us to absorb it, the output of the Clarks Hill development.

I don't know what you want to do to dispose of the power; I don't know what the policy of the Government would be, but if an arrangement could be made with this company for the absorption of that power, or such part as you allocate to Georgia, which you fix to go into the territory of our company, and on somewhat the plan of the Boulder Dam arrangement, I think we could work out, if you wished it, a satisfactory arrangement whereby that part could be absorbed. As I understand the report of the Army engineers, they base the feasibility or practicability of this development upon whether the power can be absorbed so as to yield sufficient money to at least pay the carrying charges of the development. I think it can be done if it is desired to do it that way. I am not saying that we take it all. I assume that some of the load would be allocated to South Carolina and perhaps some to Savannah, but whatever remains or if you can't get it absorbed in South Carolina or Savannah, I believe the Georgia Power Co. could in time absorb it all. Not all at once. There was a load-building time allowed at Boulder Dam and it would be reasonable to allow a load-building period here. Now that means that until that was absorbed, if you wished us to absorb it, it would be turning over to the support of the development all the future growth in the electric-power market in the main part of Georgia for at least until 1945.

Let me say, if you will allow me to say it, there has been no statement by anyone here as to high charges by the Georgia Power Co. The gentleman who spoke of 12 cents per kilowatt-hour was from South Carolina, but those are not the charges of the Georgia Power Co. The Georgia Power Co.'s average retail rate is 3.57 cents per kilowatt-hour to residents. That is the lowest average residential, retail State-wide rate east of the Rocky Mountains.

Question from the floor. Is that lower than the rates in Canada?

Mr. ARKWRIGHT. I don't know. My assertion doesn't say in all the world, and I don't say it is low enough, but so far as a reasonable comparison gives, it certainly indicates there is no extortion in the rate, and I seriously question whether anybody else could at the present time make so low a rate.

Our rates provide for automatic reductions so that we estimate that without any further changes in the rate schedules our average rate for residence uses will be 2.60 cents in the year 1945 on the estimated use for that year.

It is not a city rate. It is a State-wide rate. Our rates are the same, identically, everywhere, in the large city and the little town, on the farm, at the foot of the power house and miles away. Everywhere you go we have a uniform State-wide rate and the average is 3.57 cents on a State-wide basis everywhere. I would like to mention, likewise, that we serve 392 cities and towns in the State of Georgia directly and we serve 47 municipalities for resale. All of the municipalities on our lines owning and operating their own distribution, purchase their current from us, with negligible exceptions and those in territory newly taken over by us. No factory has been built in Georgia since we have been in this business within reach of our lines that doesn't take their power from us.

Many of them already in existence had steam plants in operation but have shut down their steam plants and taken our current. There are only a very limited number of isolated plants in commercial establishments in cities served by us, there being only two in Atlanta, for instance. This is further proof that the rates are not extortionate, but that they are reasonable.

Of the 392 cities and towns we serve, 7 of them have a population of 10,000 and over, 7 more have a population of from 5,000 to 10,000, each; 14 have a population of from 2,500 to 5,000. Now, out of the whole 392 towns there are only 28 that are over 2,500 in population. All the rest, namely, 364, range down from something under 2,500, say 2,499, down to 30. It is a rural company. It is a rural State. It is substantially a rural supply company. Many of our localities, the small settlements and small villages, in other States are classed as rural customers. Yet we have no special rate classification for rural customers now, so that if they are classified as rural they get the same rate the city man does. They get the same service and everything else. We made a survey recently to see if we should build additional so-called rural lines in every portion of our territory where we could get a minimum of 3 customers per mile of line, how many miles we would have to build, and how many additional customers could be served. Nobody will say anywhere that anyone can support rural customers at less than three customers a mile, not even the rural administrator. And we think three customers per mile is about as low as you can expect to go, and such a line even will not be self-supporting. This survey in our territory, to see to what extent we could get three customers per mile, showed that it would mean building only 730 miles and only 4,600 possible customers that could be served. So there isn't any neglect of rural electric service in this territory. Certainly there is no disposition to neglect rural service. We realize that it is very desirable to bring electric service to rural communities, and will stretch the point even in cases where they won't support themselves.

We have 128,300 residential customers. For the 12 months ending August 31, 1935, they used an average of 990 kilowatt-hours per annum, in the residences of this section. The national average is 652 kilowatt-hours per annum. Ours is a State-wide system. We have the largest residential consumption per customer east of the Rocky Mountains and, I think, the fifth largest in the United States. This average is of our customers all over the State. This extraordinarily large use evidences the enterprise and aggressiveness of this service company, carrying the benefits of electric service to the greatest number of people and it evidences the suitability and reasonableness of the rates; otherwise, it couldn't be done. We have a rapidly breaking reducing rate beginning at 6.5 cents per kilowatt-hour, and going as low as 1 cent per kilowatt-hour, with an off-peak water heating rate of 8 mills.

I want to say, in presenting the service to the people, this company sold the largest number of refrigerators of any company in the United States, regardless of size; the second largest number of ranges; we sold the largest number of water heaters of any company in the United States, regardless of size. And taking all appliances of every kind in dollar volume, we sold the second largest amount of any company during the year 1934.

It would not be proper to turn over for distribution the electric current developed at this project or to any other distributor who charges excessive rates or who gives inadequate or poor service or who was unresponsive to popular need. Now, if, however, it can be used at reasonable rates widespread over the State by a responsible distributor who will give adequate and decent service, then there can be no objection. We could immediately take a large part of this power and we could rapidly take the rest of the power, and that power would be distributed over the widest area—wider than it could be in any other way, and it could absorb the secondary power. I seriously question if it could be absorbed in any other way without duplicating our facilities and system, and I question if it could be absorbed even then in any other way besides this way.

The company controls 40,000 acres of land necessary for this development. If a reasonable arrangement could be made somewhat similar to the Boulder Dam arrangement, we would, of course, be perfectly willing and ready to put into the pot the land at a reasonable price, based upon its cost.

Now, as I get this situation, they want improvement for navigation, which would be of inestimable benefit to shippers of the section. They want additional protection from floods, which would be extremely beneficial. They want prevention of soil erosion; nothing could be more desirable. They want adequacy of electric supply. They want reasonable rates, which is perfectly proper. But, they want the work done now. And if the Government wants the work done now, and the people care to get it done now, this company is willing to aid by cooperation and the use of the power. I do not demand that we distribute it. I merely say we have the facilities and the market and are willing to do it if you wish. Of course, if it were to be used in destruction of our business and property nobody could expect us voluntarily to surrender the property or promote our own destruction. But if it is to be done in coordination, we would put the property in the pot and immediately begin to assist. In no other possible way could it be brought about as speedily or effectively as by this method. I would like to say also that our plan of absorbing the power is based upon the continued control of the market. We lie outside the Tennessee Valley, but if the TVA or the Santee-Cooper is coming in here we would have one Government project competing with another Government project, and naturally we couldn't absorb the power of all of them or even of Clark Hill if one or both of the others are to take over all or any substantial portion of the business. If municipalities here and there take away the congested business of the city, they lessen our ability to absorb from any source. In that connection, our business is a State-wide business with a uniform price everywhere, and we arrive at that cost by an average. Everybody knows that in the center of a congested city, the customer costs are less than in the sparsely settled country district. We use the business of the city to arrive at an average price and give that average to outside territory. That is the plan here, and that is the plan President Roosevelt is commending in highest terms. A little more that the city might have to pay makes it possible to carry the service into the rural sections at low rates too. The only way this can be done is by averaging the cost. And this is to the interest of the city as well as of the country. Take the city of Augusta, for illustration. It cannot live upon itself. It is dependent upon its trade territory around about. If the city of Augusta is to prosper, its trade territory must prosper also. It is concerned that the smaller places and the country districts shall have their well-being, their comfort, and their prosperity fostered and built up. If the electric service shall be supplied to this territory at a reasonable price as they are that it should be supplied to the city of Augusta itself at a reasonable price. If, on the contrary, the city of Augusta withdraws its business in the hope that it might get a little less rate for its own citizens, but to that extent it places a handicap on the territory from which it draws its trade, and whatever it might gain in this way, if anything, would be at the expense of the trade territory on which it is dependent for its own prosperity.

I state again that company information, records, men, and engineers are at your service. Any information we have will be available to you. If you examine our records, which I hope you will, and if you find that the best way to bring this about and to assure the economics of the project is by the distribution of the power through existing agencies, you will find us most cooperative in forwarding the project. But, regardless of what plan you may finally recommend, we stand ready to cooperate to the fullest extent in making available to you any information we may have which you may think pertinent to your investigation.

I would like to say, furthermore, that our rates are regulated by the Georgia Public Service Commission. If they do not set the rates low enough the Governor kicks them out and puts in another commission. In addition to this, we have recently come under the Wheeler-Rayburn bill and the Federal Power Commission sort of looks after us a little, and there is not much chance of our running away with high rates and improper costs in the future, even if we should want to. This being the situation with our rates and service, what more can anybody do—Government, municipalities, or private companies? What more could anybody else, in honesty, do? And that is what they will get from this distributor of electricity. The only other objective would be to injure the existing company, and I am sure you don't want that. I am sure the Government does not want it. I do not think you, or the United States Congress, or the Federal administration, just for the sake of injuring or destroying someone else or his property, believes in injuring anybody or destroying anybody. Certainly, in this case I do not think this company deserves to be injured or destroyed, nor do I think it necessary in the public interest.

I hope you will act favorably on the project.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a statement prepared by Wingfield and Henkel, engineers, in connection with a report on the business and properties of the Greenwood County Electric Power Commission, of Greenwood, S. C., commonly known as the Buzzards Roost development; also a financial statement showing a summary of annual gross electric revenues, operating expenses, net operating revenues, and total utility operating income available for debt service expense. This statement shows the huge income which has come to the people of Greenwood County and the adjacent counties.

I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement relative to the South Carolina Public Service Authority, also known as the Santee-Cooper development, showing that at this time there is $2,858,204 unincumbered in the contingency fund and the interest fund, over and above current interest requirements.

These public-power developments in the Carolinas, which we were able to obtain through the Congress of the United States under the old PWA, have more than earned their way. There are huge sums of money on hand in addition to the interest requirements. Further, electric rates were greatly reduced through these two State agencies which were built with the aid of Congress by means of the agency of PWA.

In closing, I again wish to remind the people of the Carolinas that despite the statements that there would be no sale for the electricity and despite the statement that the Government was throwing away its money, the Government has been paid every dime of interest on every bond that has been issued, and today we have huge reserves because of the public power program espoused by the great beloved President Roosevelt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 25, 1946.

STRANAHAN, HARRIS & CO., INC., AND ASSOCIATES,
New York City, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: In accordance with your instructions, we have investigated and prepared the accompanying report on the business, properties, and operations of the Greenwood County Electric Power Commission, of Greenwood, S. C., for the period 1942 through 1945, and on the proposed additions to the present properties and business after completion of such additions on or about December 31, 1947.

The report includes a narrative of the development of the properties and character of the business done, an analysis of the historical and present operations and earning power of the properties, a general description of the properties, a value of electric plant in service, and a digest of the rates and wholesale power contracts. It contains a study with estimates of future fixed capital requirements and estimates of the probable future growth of the business and earnings after the proposed steam electric-generating capacity has been installed.

In order to relieve the existing overloaded conditions on the system generating plants and provide for the immediate future growth of the business, the commission proposes to increase its present 6,000 kilowatts of steam electric-generating capacity by installing a 10,000-kilowatt steam turbo-generator unit, together with a 130,000-pound-per-hour steam boiler, coal-handling equipment, and all necessary steam and electric auxiliary equipment. The equipment will be housed in building extensions to the present turbine and boiler rooms. The plans provide for additions to the present main substation and certain additions and improvements in transmission and distribution substations. It is estimated that the cost of these additions and improvements may require an expenditure of $1,500,000. This estimate includes $250,000 as an over-all contingency in event the escalator provisions of the purchase contracts become effective.

The undepreciated fixed capital of the plant in service after giving effect to the estimated total cost of additions and improvements would be as follows:

Electric plant in service as per books Dec. 31, 1945	$5,139,315
Estimated additional fixed capital requirements	1,500,000
Total estimated fixed capital starting Jan. 1, 1948	6,639,315

Our analyses of the annual gross electric revenues, operating expenses, net operating revenues, and other income for the 4-year period, 1942–45, and for the future operations starting with the year 1948, after completion of proposed additions and improvements, developed the following total utility operating income available for annual debt service expense:

Item	Average of 4 years, 1942–45	Year, 1945	Starting year, 1948
Gross electric revenues	$498,983	$524,925	$682,275
Operating and maintenance expenses	209,938	251,927	347,700
Net operating revenues	289,045	272,998	334,578
Other income (rents)	406	418	418
Total utility operating income	289,451	273,416	334,933

The estimated increase in electric revenues of $157,350, after installation of the additional generating capacity, is based upon an increased customers' demand of approximately 5,000 kilowatts, with an annual consumption of 24,000,000 kilowatt-hours. These increases are confined to the commission's present customers. However, the operating superintendent estimates that there is a potential market in addition to these customers, such as the Newberry Cotton Mills, city of Clinton, and the Kendall Mills, whose aggregate demands and consumption would be equivalent to estimated increases for the existing customers. Such potential market furnishes a margin of safety in the event the market projected for the present customers is not fully realized.

The estimated increase in operating expenses of $95,773 is affected by the increase in the amount of steam generation required to serve the projected markets, higher pay rolls and administrative and general expenses, and increased maintenance expenses for production, transmission, and distribution plant. While the present properties are comparatively new and are in a good state of repair, it is our judgment that the future operation of the properties will require higher maintenance expenditures.

In our opinion, the estimated total utility operating income of $334,933 available for annual debt service expense should be attainable by reason of the potential market, the high quality of service rendered, and the fact that the commission's wholesale municipal and industrial rates compare favorably with published utility wholesale rates in the area.

Respectfully submitted.

WINGFIELD & HEINKEL, INC.,
K. S. WINGFIELD, President.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CARRIERS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 110) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, the most convincing argument in favor of the pending bill is the support it has received. During weeks of hearings in the last Congress and in this one, on both the House and Senate sides, not a single shipper, who pays the freight, appeared to oppose the bill. I know of no transportation bill within my experience that has been considered by Congress that has had such unanimous support by those affected. Witnesses from shipper organizations, representing literally millions of individual shippers from every section of the country, testified for the bill, including organizations of farmers and businessmen alike. The only real opposition offered to the bill was the joint resistance of the former Governor of Georgia, who brought an original action in the Supreme Court against eastern and southern rail carriers, and the Department of Justice, which has a suit pending against certain western carriers at Lincoln, Nebr. Their opposition was supplemented to some extent by Henry Wallace, then Secretary of Commerce, and one or two other witnesses representing almost negligible minorities.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma mean to infer that the then Secretary of Commerce, Henry Wallace, has a negligible following?

Mr. MOORE. No; I did not so intend.

Mr. BRICKER. The Senator applied that statement only to the other witnesses?

Mr. MOORE. That is all. I do not hold that he has a negligible following. There are some who fear that he has too much of a following.

There is a very practical business reason why the bill has had this unprecedented shipper support. The rail transportation system of this country is one of the most complex business enterprises of the Nation. Without an opportunity for carriers to set up procedures by which connecting carriers may work out nondiscriminatory and reasonable rates between points of origin and destination, and to work out procedures for the performance of service and coordinating schedules, it is obvious to the most casual observer that chaos will follow.

It should be thoroughly understood that the proposed legislation would authorize only those agreements between carriers which are clearly proper and are not in any way contrary to the purposes and objectives of the antitrust laws. It would permit only such agreements as are expressly found by the Commission to be appropriate for the proper performance of service to the public and which meet the standards set up in the bill, namely, first, that they do not unduly restrain competition and, second, are consistent with the public interest as declared by the Congress in the national transportation policy.

It should be remembered that the agreements provided for in the bill are essentially agreements on procedure by which rates may not be raised or lowered without notice to competing carriers, or that services, or types of equipment, or schedules may not be altered, changed, or discontinued until proper notice has been accorded to the competing and connecting carriers. In effect, the bill creates a medium by which information as to the operational practices of competing carriers may be disseminated, thus making it possible for all carriers affected to accommodate their practices to changing procedures.

For more than 50 years rate conferences have been in use by the railroads in order that our complex system of rates may be coordinated, that time schedules may be worked out, and that services may be unified. They have proved satisfactory to the shipping public, to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and to the State regulating authorities. The efficiency of the rail transportation system in America is a tribute to and a recommendation of this long-standing procedure. It was not until the railroads of the country were being called upon to perform almost superhuman tasks during the early days of the war that the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice undertook a campaign of harassment and interference against the railroads and motor carriers. It has been the considered judgment of many competent lawyers, since the enactment of the Transportation Act and the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that the provisions of the antitrust laws should not be applicable to this highly regulated industry. Two reasons dictated this conclusion—first, the railroads are public utilities, operating wholly within the supervision and direction of the Government under and through the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and, second, the Transportation Act, by its very terms, precludes operations and excludes agreements and conspiracies that are, in fact, made illegal under the antitrust laws.

However, during the critical days of the war the Department of Justice took steps to test out in court its new conception of the antitrust laws, notwithstanding the hazards of placing the war effort in jeopardy. The Army, the Navy, and the Office of Defense Transportation, realizing that the ill-timed efforts of the Department would seriously affect the war effort, intervened and prevailed upon the Antitrust Division to cease and desist. At the instance of the Army, the Navy, and the ODT, the Chairman of the War Production Board, acting under provisions of existing law, issued certificate No. 44 declaring rate bureaus and similar carrier organizations to be requisite to the prosecution of the war and making it improper to commence civil or criminal action with reference to any such bureau. Thereafter, in the spring of 1943, Senator Wheeler introduced Senate bill 942 and hearings were had in May and June of 1943. However, those hearing were never completed. It was assumed that the provisions of Certificate No. 44 would obtain until after the war and the legislative problems could be solved at that time. Shortly after those hearings were discontinued, the Department brought on for trial, in the Federal court at Denver, an indictment against various truck lines for having participated in the operation of so-called rate bureaus prior to the time Certificate No. 44 was issued. The case was tried before a jury and resulted in acquittal of all those charged. During 1944, two civil suits were begun, involving the same question. The Department of Justice brought an action in the United States district court at Lincoln, Nebr., against the western railroads, and the State of Georgia filed an original suit in the United States Supreme Court against eastern and southern railroads. How these suits could have been brought, in the face of the plain terms of Certificate No. 44 and the law under which the certificate was issued, is something that I am unable to understand.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. In a second, please.

If they are not with reference to such bureaus, then, of course, these suits will not be affected by the adoption of the pending legislation, as has been argued by the Senator from Georgia.

I am now glad to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not clearly understand the contention of the Senator from Oklahoma. Does he contend that certificate 44 would be binding on the State of Georgia to prevent bringing any kind of an action to protect the rates charged its citizens? It would be rather unusual if action of this kind could deny the right of a sovereign State to protect its citizens. It might have some effect on the Lincoln, Nebr., case, but certainly, to my mind, it could not bar a State from seeking redress in the courts of the land.

Mr. MOORE. Let us assume that the State of Georgia did have the sovereign right to protect its interest—and I am not saying that it does not have that right—but Certificate No. 44 was agreed upon by all the departments interested in the prosecution of the war. It might seem untimely for the State of Georgia to undertake to bring suit; I am not saying it was; but certainly the point I want particularly to stress in connection with the argument made by the Senator from Georgia is that the suit filed by the State of Georgia in which the Supreme Court has original jurisdiction could not possibly be affected except as to rate bureaus. As I have understood the argument all the way through, the opponents of this measure do not object to the establishment of bureaus, but they do object to the bureaus, as established and when established, doing things that run counter to the antitrust laws of the United States. No one is defending that. No one is saying that they ought to be exempt from violation of the antitrust laws. Our contention is that what the bureaus have been doing for the past 50 years as these conferences have grown up has never been regarded as being in violation of any antitrust law, because none of the agreements with respect to rates can become legal and binding on any railroads or shippers unless approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is a Government body.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the whole purpose of the bill, and I think it was generally conceded, is to immunize the railroads and their freight bureaus from prosecution or civil actions under the antitrust laws. If they have not violated the antitrust laws, there is certainly no reason for introducing the bill.

Mr. MOORE. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that there is not any intention through this bill to immunize railroads from prosecution for violation of the antitrust laws, but it does immunize them from suits brought by the Department of Justice for doing things which it has been contended, and successfully in the past few years, have not been in violation of the antitrust laws. As the situation stands today, the railroads and the conferences which operate in connection with the making of rates are afraid of prosecution. I think it is perfectly plain that the Department of Justice has proceeded from a political angle and brought suits to harass the railroads, as has so often been done throughout the whole program of the New Deal administration. That is not in my prepared statement, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not intend to debate with the Senator the merits or demerits of any portion of the New Deal. I am primarily concerned with the case brought by the State of Georgia. I am also interested in the Lincoln, Nebr., case, because I favor the prompt equalization of freight rates throughout the entire country.

Mr. MOORE. If the Senator will permit me, I think he will recognize the fact that I am in accord with him regarding the determination and curing of such inequalities as soon as possible, if there is such a thing as discrimination in freight rates. I think the Senator from Georgia and other Senators from the West and South have made considerable study of this subject. I am in favor of providing a remedy for discriminations. I am certainly not in favor of discrimination by one section as against another.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad to hear the Senator say that, and I am sure it is true. I do not have the figures before me, but I think there has been considerable discrimination in the rate structure of the Nation and against the State of Oklahoma. However, the Senator and I differ on the necessity for this bill.

Under the present state of facts two lawsuits are pending. They are not criminal prosecutions, but civil actions. These suits might determine exactly how far the railroads might go without violating the Antitrust Act; but before determination is made in those two cases, the action of Congress is now asked to throw a cloak around the railroads in anticipation of some imaginary prosecutions which have not been filed.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. I want to make just one suggestion to the Senator from Georgia. I listened very carefully to what he said, and I think he made a very able presentation of his opposition.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MOORE. I have had the opportunity, I will say to the Senator from Georgia, of listening to testimony from various interests which would be affected by this proposed legislation. As I stated at the opening of my remarks, I have never seen any legislation that had such uniform support as this legislation seems to have had, in my judgment, from all parties that seemed to be affected by it.

I yield tc the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. Let me point out to the distinguished Senator from Georgia that the situation of the railroads, as far as this whole picture goes, will not be prejudiced or changed one iota if they should now withdraw this attempt, which is ill-conceived in my judgment, and let the courts speak on the matter. The Department of Justice is content to let the matter abide with the courts until a decree is rendered.

On the point of the Senator from Oklahoma that he is impressed by the uniformity of the expressed opinion, I do not think he was privileged to be here—I say "privileged," because he might have learned something—when I was speaking about the process by which this uniformity has been achieved—through chambers of commerce, women's clubs, school children, shipping bureaus, and trade associations. There is the answer; there is the modus operandi. The result is the degree of uniformity which is purchased through the machinations of the Association of American Railroads, taken from their own records, as to how they operate. Before God, it smells to Heaven.

Mr. MOORE. I am very glad to have that contribution from the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. I am glad the Senator is glad to have it.

Mr. MOORE. I listened to what the Senator from Georgia had to say yesterday with reference to the verity that ought to be attributed to what he called propaganda. I am sorry to see the Senator from New Hampshire leaving the Chamber, because I want to say that if there was any propaganda submitted to the members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I was not aware of it.

The Senator from Kansas introduced statements which were made by various organizations, and the Senator from Georgia made considerable light of them because of the ease with which such statements can be procured. I agree with him, and I would not enter into a controversy with the Senator from Georgia in regard to how easy it is to get a chamber of commerce or a Rotary club to make such statements.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me say to him that my comment on that matter was mild indeed compared to the strictures of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] today, who, quoting by line and verse, showed how that propaganda was organized. The comment I made yesterday was for the purpose of showing generally how such activities are organized.

Mr. MOORE. I am sorry I did not have an opportunity to listen to the strictures of the Senator from New Hampshire on that score.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I should like to say that if it is not asking too much of him, I make the specific request that he take time to read them tomorrow morning, and then I shall take time to answer on these points.

Mr. MOORE. Certainly. Perhaps I shall do so this evening.

Mr. TOBEY. I thank the Senator, although I do not believe they will be available this evening. But he will be able to read them tomorrow morning.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, the questions raised by the pending suits have a far greater significance than the successful prosecution of the carriers involved or the political ambitions of anyone who seeks to gain prominence by prosecuting them. These suits have served to call to the attention of the shippers and the public the serious nature of the contention being made by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice as to a new judicial construction which it believes should be placed upon the antitrust laws, and have aroused the public to a realization of the serious consequences which would result. In effect the responsibiilty for the railroads and the operation of our transportation system, the procedures involved, and the effects to be accomplished, would rest in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice because of its right to bring prosecutions under the antitrust laws, if its theories of the application of the antitrust laws to this regulated industry were sustained. Conversely, the powers and authorities vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission by the direct action of the Congress would be weakened and destroyed, because the Commission would know that its actions regarding the operation of the railroads, the administration procedures of the carriers, and the effects to be accomplished under the orders, rules, and regulations of the Commission could be superseded by the mere conclusion of the Department of Justice that some such operation, procedure, or result violated the antitrust laws.

To refuse to pass this proposed legislation could very well result in seriously impairing the long-standing traditional authority and administrative power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, because our refusal to act would be a tacit approval of the theory of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice that its interpretation of the antitrust laws was superior to the administrative decisions of the Commission.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from Oklahoma has made the declamando statement that the refusal to enact this law would seriously hamper the functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, let me point out, if he will yield to me, that there is a higher tribunal than that, namely, the judicial branch of our constitutional Government, the judicial system headed by the Federal Supreme Court. If it is true that a refusal to enact this measure would handicap the Interstate Commerce Commission, I say that in greater measure the enactment of this measure would hamper and hamstring the Supreme Court of the United States and the Department of Justice in determining what is in violation of the antitrust laws, which they are pledged to back up and enforce, and have been for 60 years. That would be the greater evil, in my judgment.

Mr. MOORE. The Senator from New Hampshire knows quite well that if the Department of Justice has information that the antitrust laws are being violated, the Department is not precluded from determining the situation in that respect. The Attorney General, representing the Department of Justice, can investigate the orders which have been issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and if they are found to be in violation of the antitrust laws, there is no reason why the Attorney General should not proceed to challenge them.

Mr. President, I am quite certain that no Member of the Senate believes there should be a limitation on or revolution of the procedures in regard to the railroads, through the transportation policy which has been announced by Congress, unless the Congress itself announces such a change of policy. In connection with my contention that the Congress is the policy-making body of the Government with respect to the railroads and other industries as well, let me say that if we were to divide the responsibility for supervising the operation of the railroads between the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Department of Justice, charging the Department of Justice with responsibility in that connection only in so far as the railroads violate the laws affecting them, the result would be the creation of a chaotic condition in the transportation system of the United States. I know that no one wishes to have that occur.

The remedy for the great confusion in transportation that has resulted in the action of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice is found in this bill.

It is important for us to bear in mind that the effect of this proposed legislation is not to bring about some violent change in transportation, but merely to make certain that practices and procedures which have been developed by the carriers and the shippers through 50 years of experience are valid, and to place those practices under the regulation and complete supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission. If we fail to act, such failure will, in effect, sanction by default a revolutionary construction of the antitrust laws. Our failure to act on this bill may well invite legislation by judicial decree, which the shippers of the country have unanimously said would result in public calamity and utter chaos.

The enactment of this proposed legislation will not in any manner result in a weakening of the regulations evercised by the Government with respect to the railroads. In the elaborate scheme of regulation provided by the Interstate Commerce Act, protection of the public against the evils of monopoly is accomplished by exercise of the regulatory powers the Congress has placed in the Commission. Rates cannot be rigged by conspiracy or monopoly action, because the Congress has given the Commission full power to regulate rates by standards that have been clearly defined by the courts.

In a regulated industry, competition is a factor which must be considered in a light somewhat different from that in which it is considered in business in general. Competition between carriers, short of destructive competition, is encouraged and is implicit in the operation of the Interstate Commerce Act. To permit freight-rate competition between shippers is obviously destructive discrimination. Every common carrier must, of necessity, serve the public on a basis of complete equality. Every shipper, large or small, pays the same freight rate; and every shipper knows exactly what his competitor pays for common-carrier transportation services. This fundamental concept of public service must be maintained, and it can only be done by preserving the full rights and powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It cannot be done by leaving the way open for the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice to substitute its judgment and authority for that of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has functioned as a responsible and efficient agency of the Congress for more than half a century in directing and regulating this all-important segment of our national economy.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, notified the Senate that Mr. MONRONEY had been appointed a manager on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3203) entitled "An act relative to maximum rents on housing accommodations; to repeal certain provisions of Public Law 388, Seventy-ninth Congress, and for other purposes," vice Mr. PATMAN, excused.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CARRIERS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 110) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, I was a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce during the last Congress, and it was my privilege to hear the testimony in connection with the pending bill. We took testimony for a number of weeks, and the testimony was given by persons familiar with the subject in all walks of life.

I associate myself very fully with all the Senators who have voiced their opposition to monopoly. I have no sort of trouble about convincing myself that I am in line with those who definitely oppose monopoly.

I think there is a very great misconception about the pending bill and about what it provides. The bill does not remove the railroads from under the antitrust law. It does not take away any substantial right of the Government or anybody else to have the antitrust laws enforced. It merely provides that the railroads may continue to do what they have been doing for 50 years, that is, maintain rate bureaus by which they may hold conferences in fixing rates on specific articles to specific places. Without that, I do not see how it would be possible to operate a system by which the people might be given the opportunity to have freight rates established.

What are the facts about the situation, and what are the circumstances depending upon them? A shipper located on a railroad who wants to get a rate for shipping any specific article, to any place or to many places files an application with the railroad on which his business is located, and the first railroad takes it up with the other railroads. Suppose there were not a rate bureau. He himself would have to take the matter up with half a dozen different railroads in order to procure a rate to be fixed by the railroads on the product which he wishes to ship. Instead of all that trouble, he lets the railroad on which he is located file the application, and that railroad becomes his representative. It wants to get for him the best rate possible, and it takes the matter up with the rate bureau, and every railroad over whose lines the shipment would go is consulted. The railroads discuss the matter, and finally they agree upon a rate. Then, when the rate is agreed upon, everyone is notified, and those who are engaged in shipping similar goods from other points also have notice of it. Then the rate is certified to the Interstate Commerce Commission; they examine it; hold it open for 30 days, and if anyone has any objection, he can still file objections to the rate. If the Interstate Commerce Commission think it is a fair rate, at the expiration of 30 days they put it into effect and advertise it, and then the individual can ship the commodity in which he is interested and he has the benefit of the rate.

Suppose we abolish this procedure. What will be supplied to take its place?

How will shippers be able to get a rate fixed? That is one reason why, among all the shippers who appeared before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, there was not one who came there to oppose this bill, because they realized there would be utter chaos if we did away with this method, the only method by which shippers can obtain rates.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOEY. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. If we do not pass the pending bill, will the practice of making these through rates be abolished?

Mr. HOEY. If the practice should continue on the same basis on which it has proceeded for 50 years, the shippers would be liable to action under the antitrust laws. I am coming to that in a few moments.

Mr. TAYLOR. They have been liable before, have they not?

Mr. HOEY. I do not think they should be, and that is what I am going to discuss in a few moments.

Far from the bill taking them out from under the operation of the antitrust law, it does no such thing. It specifically provides that the mere fact that the rate bureaus and representatives of the railroads confer together in order that they may arrive at some just rate shall not be held to be a violation of the antitrust law, provided the Interstate Commerce Commission shall finally approve the rate upon which they agree.

I wish at this time to read a section of the bill for the benefit of those who seem to think the bill opens the door wide for violation of the antitrust laws. This provision of the bill covers that very matter:

> Nothing in this section and no approval of any agreement by the Commission under this section shall be so construed as in any manner to remove from the purview of the antitrust laws any restraint upon the right of independent action by means of boycott, duress, or intimidation.

The practices in which it is alleged the railroads would indulge and the means they could employ in order to fix certain rates are denounced in the bill, and the railroads are made subject to prosecution under the antitrust laws if they engage in that sort of practice. Under the bill the mere assembling of persons to hold a conference and discuss a rate shall not be held to be a violation of the antitrust law, but if there is any duress, any intimidation, if there is any concerted action by which an unlawful measure is undertaken to be put into effect, the antitrust law is still available.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. HOEY. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. Referring to a comment of the distinguished Senator about the application of the law to rate making, and so forth, let me present this thought.

The Reed-Bulwinkle bill is substantially the Bulwinkle bill considered in the last session of Congress. In the majority report of the committee, under the heading "Need for the proposed legislation," there were set forth the existing rate bureau and rate conference activities which have grown up during the years and which the committee finds to be essential. The exact language is "The nature of these organizations, and the need for their continued existence and operation," and so forth, would constitute such a directive to the Commission that the entire rate-making machinery, including the Association of American Railroads would, if the Commission carried out the intent of Congress as reflected in these reports, be legalized.

When it is borne in mind that the chief points of attack of the Department of Justice and the State of Georgia is on the over-all rate-fixing activities of the Association of American Railroads, it must be clear that the passage of this bill would render those cases moot.

Does the Senator concur?

Mr. HOEY. No; I do not, for the reason that the action in the State of Georgia is not founded solely on the assembling and the agreement on rates. It is predicated on the existence of coercion or intimidation, which the pending bill denounces.

The difference the Senator has in mind arises from the fact that the original Bulwinkle bill did not contain, as this bill does, the provision which I read a few moments ago. Before the committee last year, when we were discussing the matter, this provision was suggested as being highly desirable so as to make sure that no privilege granted to the railroads could be used to violate the right of shippers by intimidation, coercion, or otherwise, so as to inflict on them unlawful rates. In my opinion, the pending bill does not affect in the slightest the case in Georgia, nor does it affect in the slightest the case in Nebraska.

Mr. TOBEY. Does not the Senator appreciate that the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the proposed legislation, would sanction rate conferences or rate conventions, but that the specific rates which came out of them would not be under their control? Does he not also realize that the most important rates are the rates that never see the light of day, because by suasion and other means these things never see the light of day, never get to the Interstate Commerce Commission? That is where the power of the great railroad corporations comes in, and they apply it.

Mr. HOEY. Let me say to the Senator from New Hampshire that there can be no rate promulgated until the Interstate Commerce Commission approves it. What he is saying could not possibly happen, because the bill goes far beyond the present law in that it gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to regulate and to control and to prescribe regulations for rate bureaus. It can make the rate bureau responsive to whatever it says shall be done; that is the provision of the bill.

Under the present law, they cannot do that. Under the present law, the Interstate Commerce Commission has no control over the rate bureau except that it passes upon whether or not it will put into effect the rates prescribed or fixed and approved by the rate bureau. The pending bill goes to the extent of giving the right to say what regulations shall be adopted, what plans shall be followed, what courses shall be pursued, and they can revise the whole matter.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator realizes that millions on millions of rates never come to the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. HOEY. They cannot become effective until they do.

Mr. TOBEY. They do not come to them until there is some complaint about them. Did not the Senator hear the statement I read this morning?

Mr. HOEY. Yes, sir; I did.

Mr. TOBEY. Did he not hear the indictment, out of the mouths of the Association of American Railroads, of their nefarious modus operandi, whereby they try to influence people?

Mr. HOEY. I heard what the Senator read.

Mr. TOBEY. Does the Senator take my word for it that that came from the hearings conducted by former Senators Wheeler and Truman, and was based upon the testimony of the Association of American Railroads and their files? I give the Senator my word for it.

Mr. HOEY. I do not question the Senator's word at all.

Mr. TOBEY. If that be true, then the Senator certainly cannot, knowing it as I do, feel much in common with a crowd that plays the game on that lower level; and that is the crowd that is behind the pending legislation, seeking to put it across on the American people.

Mr. HOEY. I may say to the Senator that I am not in sympathy with any group that undertakes to do anything dishonest, any more than is the Senator from New Hampshire; but, because somebody, at sometime, has undertaken the task of putting over a rate, does not begin to discount the management and the integrity and the high purpose of the people who control the railroads in this country.

Mr. TOBEY. Let me tell the Senator an incident that happened downstairs just now. Mr. President, will the Chair bear with me if I say something out of order, but which nevertheless is true? I was dining downstairs with a daughter of mine when a Department of Justice man, a friend of mine, came to me and said, "Sir, I appreciate the factual statement you made about the operations of the Association of American Railroads, in connection with their corrupt practices. May I tell you that, sitting behind you, are three railroad lobbyists, one of whom called you a — — — —, and another of whom said you ought to go to hell. They consigned you to hell, and they attacked you all the way through." I asked him, "Where are they?" He pointed them out to me. I got up and walked to their table, and said, "My compliments to you, gentlemen." I said, "I understand you called me a — — — —, and consigned me to hell, and made other statements about me." I said, "This is a free country—you have a right to make any statement you want, but let me say to you that what I read this morning, which you did not like, was your own statement of your own factual wrongdoing, out of your own records, under the Wheeler and Truman leadership, and," I said, "you are crooked, sirs, from top to bottom, and you played the game that way. Now, I subside, because I still want to be a gentleman and hold my temper." I walked away. I wanted the Senator to know that, and I want the RECORD to show it.

Mr. HOEY. I am very glad to have the Senator make this statement. I said a few minutes ago, I do not undertake to defend anybody who resorts to such unfair or dishonest practices. I think the Senator will find some people in the railroad business who engage in practices of that sort, but I want to say that I know the railroad people in my State. They are as honorable and as high-toned men as are to be found engaged in any other kind of business. While one may find certain people who resort to the kind of practices mentioned by the Senator, I do not believe that is common practice among the railroad people of this country. I know, in my State, those who constitute the railroad people, both those who work for the railroads and those who operate the railroads. As a general proposition, they are men of high character and of ability and integrity, and they would no more resort to dishonest practices than would people engaged in other avocations or other callings.

Mr. TOBEY. Does the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad operate in the Senator's State?

Mr. HOEY. It does not.

Mr. TOBEY. I now hand the Senator certain figures. Here is the greatest empire that ever existed in the United States of America. This is the railroad empire, a member of the Association of American Railroads. Ponder it well. Look through it. Find in all history another empire of such scope. Read in connection with that the statement made this morning, out of their own minutes. Note the committee of directors, sitting at 40 Wall Street. That group of directors have supreme power. There is no recourse from their decisions, there is no hearing, no appeal. The edict goes out. There are several other instances where they have supported with strong argument—and what a strong argument—the impeding of progress and the crippling of little business in this country. In order to be courteous, I pass it to the Senator, and he may look it over. It is a huge empire. Few people have any conception of its ramifications. It is too much power to have in free America, and no agency like that, with its far-flung empire, can function in the interest of little men, in my judgment. The very fact that it exists denotes power—and what power, and what intrigues, and what methods.

Mr. HOEY. Since the Senator from New Hampshire has delivered himself of that statement; I want to ask how the Senator would remedy that situation? The Senator is talking about something that is not involved in the pending bill, and that has no connection with it.

Mr. TOBEY. No; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. HOEY. The pending bill has no relationship to the evils of which the Senator complains. There is not anything in the pending bill that will change in any sort of manner the financiers, when they get together to confer. There is not a single thing in the bill that refers to the matter of which the Senator from New Hampshire is talking. The remedy is a different matter entirely. I join with the Senator in asserting the right against the people who control the railroads and the rates of this country. I have been identified with a movement in North Carolina and in the South, undertaking to obtain just and fair freight rates for my section, as well as for the western section. I join the Senator is assailing all improper practices, and I have assailed them; but the pending bill does not deal with that. It has no relation to it. The discussion in which the Senator is engaging is far afield from a consideration of the pending measure.

If I may point out just a few things further, I should like to discuss the matter, and I do not intend to talk too long. I want to relate briefly my experience with the freight-rate situation. I was Governor of North Carolina when the southern Governors first considered the matter of instituting two suits in order to try to obtain fair and just freight rates. We instituted one suit known as the commodity rate case. We instituted another suit known as the class rate case. The southern Governors joined in employing Vance Norman, of Louisville, Ky., one of the great railroad experts of the country. We employed a competent staff of traffic men, and we engineered each suit to a successful conclusion. We won the commodity rate case before the Interstate Commerce Commission, receiving a great deal of relief for shippers all through the South. Again, the class rate case was decided. It had required long hearings, and the case was pending over a period of years. Finally, last year, we won that case before the Interstate Commerce Commission. The case was decided by granting to the South a 10 percent decrease in freight rates, and by adding to those in the official territory. That means the territory to the north and east of the Ohio River.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from New Hampshire is fully cognizant of that.

Mr. HOEY. The rates in official territory were increased 10 percent. That made a differential of 20 percent. Our contention had been, and I think justly so, that there was a 39 percent adverse differential in freight rates as against the South. The decision went a long way toward correcting that. I was a member of the freight rate committee of the southern Governors' conference, both when these suits were instituted and when they were tried, as long as I was Governor. The suits have been won, to that extent. We have obtained that relief. We obtained it through the Interstate Commerce Commission. Now, may I say to the Senator that in all the years in which the people of the South have been trying to secure just and fair freight rates, they could resort only to the Freight Rate Bureau, acting with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. We have applied to the Freight Rate Bureau, that the Senator and I have been talking about destroying. We have been able to get consideration, through which we have obtained reasonably fair freight rates. It is the only tribunal, the only forum to which the shipper could go, the only place he could obtain relief. If that is destroyed, as it would be destroyed, if the prayer of the petitions were granted to abolish it and disband it, and to nullify it, we would have nowhere to go to get freight rates. Now, the only other place we can go is to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission may be imperfect in many respects. I think it has been slow about many things, and yet that is the only tribunal that has been able to give us any relief. It is the only one that can give relief to any shipper in America. All that the Senator is saying about this great group of financiers controlling the railroads has nothing in the world to do with the pending legislation.

Mr. TOBEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOEY. It comes down to the adjusting of rates, the determining of facts, and to having some sort of means of reaching an agreement. The Interstate Commerce Commission is the court of last and final resort. No rate can be fixed by the Bureau unless it is approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that is the place we must go to have it approved. It is the only place Congress has provided that we can go. That is the only forum. It is the only agency. It is the only part of Government that has any authority to fix freight rates. Now, let us come to another thing.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator would not want to yield right at that point, would he?

Mr. HOEY. I will yield, if the Senator requests it.

Mr. TOBEY. Would it be more agreeable to the Senator if, by way of colloquy, we take it up seriatim?

Mr. HOEY. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. Answering the Senator's specific complaint, let me point out, in a general way, this empire, which I so elucidated and which will be apparent to every Senator, has a very definite part in this case. In fact there is no place where that line, with that long arm, does not reach, either to the West or to the East.

Mr. HOEY. I will say to the Senator, if he gets ready to break up the empire, I will join him, but I did not want the Congress to break up the one agency from which we could obtain fair freight rates.

Mr. TOBEY. And we who oppose this bill have no objection at all to the sovereignties sitting down and making rates. That is the necessary part of the thing. But what we do insist is that this bill should not come in and strike down the Supreme Court and the Department of Justice, nor any other authority, in the operations and mechanizations of making these rates, and so forth, that transgress the antitrust laws. Then the Department of Justice shall proceed against them. That is what I want.

Mr. HOEY. In reply to that statement let me say that the Senator from New Hampshire knows that the mere meeting together on the part of representatives of railroads to agree upon anything can be brought as an action under the antitrust laws.

Mr. TOBEY. I do not believe the Senator can mention any such action which has been brought.

Mr. HOEY. Such action was brought by the Government. The Government lost the case, the jury acquitting the defendants. The Government, however, brought such a case.

Mr. TOBEY. That is not the function of this bill at all, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HOEY. The bill would take away every single thing in the nature of vice, and would merely leave the right to the representatives of the railroads and the rate bureaus to meet and confer together with reference to fixing rates.

Mr. TOBEY. That is correct.

Mr. HOEY. And then a rate does not become effective unless approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Let me add, that every person, regardless of who he is, has a right to be heard. The bill provides specifically that the Attorney General shall have the right to be heard both concerning any rate which the Interstate Commerce Commission has already fixed, or any rate which it may fix, and before such rate becomes effective there shall be a period of 30 days within which anyone can come forward and point out any objection to the rate. What can be fairer than that? What is there of vice in merely permitting the railroads to get together to see if they can agree on a rate to be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission? That is all the bill would do.

Mr. TOBEY. Yesterday on the floor of the Senate—and I was not privileged to be present because of illness in my family—a Senator, I think it was the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], asked the question:

Is section 5 relating to mergers, consolidations, and acquisitions of carriers precedent for this bill?

This bears specifically upon the second paragraph. My answer to that question is:

The origin of section 5 was to permit consolidations of railroads into systems to save the weak carriers by combining them with strong carriers. This was provided in the Transportation Act of 1920. These transactions were comparatively few in number and every detail could be considered and reviewed by the Commission. This section was extended to the motor carriers in 1935 and water carriers in 1940.

The Reed-Bulwinkle bill is of an entirely different nature. Its anounced purpose is to provide the means of extending immunity from antitrust laws to every activity of every form of land and water transportation.

Then this paragraph, answering the Senator from North Carolina:

The wide sweep of the bill can be noted by reading section 2 thereof. The Senate will note that agreements relating not only to rates can be exempted from the antitrust laws, but agreements regarding the arrival and departure of trains, the routes, the interchange of physical facilities, the settlement of claims, the promotion of safety and then finally, a catch-all phrase, which includes everything, "the promotion of adequacies, economy or efficiency of operation and service."

So all those matters come within the purview of the bill. Not only rates, but safety devices and trains and services—all come under the purview of the bill.

Mr. HOEY. It specifies exactly what is included. It leaves nothing in doubt. Now what is the objection to letting the railroads confer about safety devices? What is the objection to letting them discuss matters of schedule?

Mr. TOBEY. There is no objection, unless when they get together the big fellows say, "You cannot have that and the other in the interest of all the railroads," and put a stopper on it. Then that is a combination in restraint of trade. That is a breach of the antitrust laws.

Mr. HOEY. Yes, and actions to stop such proceedings are open to the Government.

Mr. TOBEY. But why take away from the Department of Justice the right directly to prosecute as the Department does now?

Mr. HOEY. It does not take that right away from the Department.

Mr. TOBEY. Then what is the Senator's objection to the Department taking such action?

Mr. HOEY. My objection does not go to taking away such a right from the Department.

Mr. TOBEY. But the bill would take it away from the Department.

Mr. HOEY. No.

Mr. TOBEY. I cannot agree with the Senator. We have different interpretations of the bill.

Mr. HOEY. The bill is just about as plain as it can be made. It provides:

Nothing in this section and no approval of any agreement by the Commission under this section shall be so construed as in any manner to remove from the purview of the antitrust laws any restraint—

That is what the Senator from New Hampshire is talking about—

upon the right of independent action by means of boycott, duress, or intimidation.

The very language of the Senator is applied to the pending bill to contradict the position the Senator has taken.

Mr. TOBEY. I think the Senator will find that language in another part of the bill. I still stand on my contention that the announced purpose and intention of the bill is to provide the means of extending immunity from antitrust laws to every activity of every form of land and water transportation, and, if the Lord is willing, when I speak again tomorrow or the next day, I will give six or seven instances which I think will edify the Senator from North Carolina, and I hope will impress on him that my point was not taken without good foundation.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, I always listen to the Senator from New Hampshire with interest, if not with agreement.

As I said a few moments ago, there is nothing in the bill which is adverse to the shipper and to the public. Let us analyze it a little and see if that is not true. I know that yesterday in the discussion which took place on the floor of the Senate a good deal was said about all those who endorsed this measure, and I think the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] made a very strong point in saying that we all understand how easy it is to induce service clubs and organizations of one kind or another to adopt resolutions. Someone appears before an organization and makes a speech and says, "This is a good bill; we believe it will be of benefit to everyone, and we want you to adopt a resolution favoring the bill," and the organization adopts such a resolution without giving a great deal of consideration to it. I can understand why such criticism would apply to the endorsements made by a great many firms and sometimes by chambers of commerce, but may I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in every State of the Union an organization set up to represent the shippers, and the organization is a State organization. In my State we call it the North Carolina Utilities Commission. Other States call such an organization a corporation commission. Others call such an organization the railroad commission. But in all the States of the Nation such agencies have been established. They are interested primarily in the shippers. Their business is to look after the shippers' interests. In my own State we have a most excellent utility commission. Three high-grade men, capable, competent, experienced, are in charge of it. They strongly recommend this bill. Not only do they do so, but practically every corporation commission or utility commission that looks after rates in the United States has likewise endorsed the bill. Practically all the State organizations have endorsed it. It is their business to examine into rates. They are not swept off their feet by someone who comes and makes a speech. They are not induced by some representative of a chamber of commerce to endorse it. They go into the matter day in and day out. Of the 10 States in the South 7 have heartily endorsed the bill. None have opposed it.

Let us consider another thing as a very practical matter. Nearly all the large shippers, or those who are able to afford it, have what they call a traffic department in which experienced rate men are employed. Every single shipper who employs a rate man or who knows anything about the bill supports the bill. Why is that? Because they know that the bill provides the only practical means by which they can secure a fair rate edifice and proper determination by the railroads.

Moreover, nearly all the large city chambers of commerce have traffic departments which make a special study of freight rates and constantly deal with them. All the representatives of such organizations throughout the United States are in favor of the bill.

In my own section of the country, which is the South, I was interested in knowing the situation that would develop if we did not have a rate bureau. I desire to read a brief extract from the testimony of one of the best businessmen of the South, a man who does not come from my State but from the State of Georgia. I refer to Mr. William D. Anderson, president, Bibb Manufacturing Co., of Macon, Ga. That company has 10 plants located in the State of Georgia. Mr. Anderson has had wide experience. He appeared before the committee and said that, of course, coming up through the various channels he had been in charge of the business and knew all about it from beginning to end. He testified to this effect:

I will say that we are very much in favor of the passage of the Bulwinkle bill because of our vital interest in a proper fabric of freight rates from our various mills to all these cities, towns, and hamlets in the United States to which we ship goods. Freight rates are a tremendously important item in the service we have to perform.

These rates must be competitve as between us and other people making goods similar to ours or exactly the same as ours. Our interest is very important and yet at the same time competitive conditions must be maintained. Rates from our place to all these localities must be competitive with rates from the locations of manufacturers who make the same goods, and I cannot imagine how it would be possible for us to successfully do business unless we had a maintenance of the system of making freight rates safeguarded as it is. In other words, without this method of doing it, without these organizations, these freight associations, these committees of railroads that make these rates, work them out and file their tariffs with the Interstate Commerce Commission, I think we would face chaos.

Certainly if this practice should be discontinued by the courts something would have to be substituted therefor, and of course we are quite naturally interested in what possible substitute might take its place. If it were left to us and we made a new line of goods, as we frequently do, or we entered a market we had not been serving and we wanted a rate established from one of our mills in Georgia, say to San Francisco, or to Seattle, or to Boston, or to Portland, and we had not this method open to us for establishing that rate, we would be I think in a bad predicament.

Let us say, for example, that such a shipment had to move over five railroads from our mill to destination. If the traffic men representing these railroads could not confer and work out a well-balanced rate we would be put to it to sit down and correspond with the traffic official of every railroad over which that shipment moved, and we would have to tell him our conditions, have to describe the competition we are facing, would have to try and agree with him on the division of rates, and then get a participation in that rate by every railroad over which the shipment moved.

Such a course would involve as I see it interminable delay. In the meantime the business might disappear and go somewhere else. I do not see how we could function if we had to follow any such course.

So it seems to me, the business being so complex, the making of freight rates being really a profession, and precedents having been built up over the years, in the building and establishing of rates, that if all that were done away with we would face, as I said a moment ago, chaos.

Every single shipper who has dealt with this subject and knows anything about it tells us the same thing. Who is better prepared to know about how to handle the situation than the practical people who deal with it? Are they not better prepared to handle it than someone who goes off on a theory about antitrust law violations, monopoly, or something else? Who knows more about the best interests of the people who ship goods than those who deal with that subject day in and day out, who work with this sort of a problem and must solve it in order to carry on their business? Do they not know more about it than those who argue about antitrust law violations, monopoly, and so forth, and who say, "Here is something that is going to disturb the whole business tranquillity of the country"?

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOEY. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does the Senator believe that once this bill is passed the railroads will actually cease and desist from making through rates? They are obtaining the endorsements of shippers by telling them, "If we do not get this bill we are going to quit making through rates." Does the Senator believe that they will do so?

Mr. HOEY. No; I do not believe that they tell people that. I have never heard of them telling shippers that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have.

Mr. HOEY. They point out the difficulties which would ensue if the system of rate making by rate bureaus were broken up.

Let us consider a practical situation. A shipper wants a rate. He cannot make it himself. One railroad cannot make it. It must confer with some other railroad or railroads. Is it right to say that because one railroad confers with another it is thereby guilty of a violation of the antitrust laws? All the bill does is to provide that under such circumstances the railroad shall not be held to have been guilty of a violation of the antitrust laws.

Mr. TAYLOR. As a matter of fact, has the Department of Justice haled any railroads into court for making legitimate rates?

Mr. HOEY. They have been haled into court, and it has been alleged that their getting together constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws.

All in the world the bill does is to make it clear that such action is not a violation of the antitrust laws. It does not take away the right from the Department of Justice or any other agency to enforce the law against anyone who engages in intimidation, unfair practices, or coercion in connection with fixing rates; but it does give a measure of protection to legitimate conferences among rate makers for the purpose of determining what is a fair and reasonable rate to be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOEY. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I understand the bill, it does not in any manner change the present method of rate making.

Mr. HOEY. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. In fact, that system has been adhered to by the railroads for the past 30 or 40 years.

Mr. HOEY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. What the bill does is to give legal sanction to what has been done in the past.

Mr. HOEY. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. Is it also true that, irrespective of how the rates are fixed, whatever rates are fixed, no matter how they are fixed through these agreements, they must be passed upon by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. HOEY. That is correct; and they cannot become effective until that is done.

Mr. ELLENDER. Exactly. It strikes me that the opponents of this measure have little if any confidence in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. HOEY. That is correct. Congress has established the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it has lodged in that body ultimate authority for fixing rates. I do not contend that it is perfect, but it is the only body provided by the Congress to deal with the subject. It is the only body that has ever been able to give shippers any relief. All the relief shippers have had has come from the rate-making body, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and by direct appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In this connection, I should like to insert in the RECORD a list of organizations in the South whose representatives appeared before the committee in support of the bill. I have included not only members of clubs, but people who know something about freight rates.

The list begins with the Alabama Cotton Manufacturers' Association. I shall not take the time to read the list, but I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Alabama Cotton Manufacturers' Association; Arkansas Public Service Commission; Florida Railroad Commission; Florida State Senate; Kentucky Railroad Commission; Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Immigration; Louisiana Public Service Commission; Mississippi Public Service Commission; North Carolina Public Utilities Commission; South Carolina Public Service Commission; Virginia State Corporation Commission; Florida Freight Traffic Bureau; Florida Rate Conference; Fort Worth (Tex.) Freight Bureau; Georgia-Alabama Textile Traffic Association; Greater Miami Traffic Association; Memphis Freight Bureau; Nashville Freight Bureau; New Orleans Traffic and Transportation Bureau; San Antonio Traffic Club; Southeast Shippers Advisory Board; Southeastern Shippers Conference; Southern Paper Manufacturers Conference; Southern Traffic League; Southwestern Industrial Traffic League; Tampa Traffic Association; West Texas Chamber of Commerce; East Texas Chamber of Commerce; Texas Industrial Traffic League; Arkansas Beef Cattlemen's Association; Florida Citrus Canners Association; Florida Citrus Commission; Florida Growers and Shippers League; Florida Vegetable Committee; New Orleans Cotton Exchange; New Orleans Green Coffee Association; South Texas Cooperative Marketing Association; Texas Pecan Growers Association; Galveston Cotton Exchange and Board of Trade; Georgia Cotton Manufacturers Association; Harlan County (Ky.) Coal Operators Association; Henderson (Ky.) Board of Trade; Louisville Board of Trade; New Orleans Board of Trade; New Orleans Rice Millers and Grain Merchants; New Orleans Sugar Refiners; New Orleans Warehousemen; North Carolina Cotton Manufacturers Association; San Antonio Manufacturers Association; South Carolina Cotton Manufacturers Association; Southern Appalachian Coal Operators Association; Southern Brick and Tile Manufacturers Association; Southern Pine Association; Southern States Industrial Council; Tennessee Manufacturers Association; Texas Cotton Industries.

Mr. HOEY. In addition to these southern trade associations, State commissions, and the like, the chambers of commerce of more than 50 southern cities endorsed the bill by resolution, and of course many of the national organizations which supported the bill represented the South as well as other parts of the country. For example, the National Association of State Railroad and Public Utilities Commissioners speaks for the entire United States, including the Southern States. Likewise, the National Association of Commissioners, Secretaries and Directors of Agriculture speaks for the directors of agriculture of every State in the Union, including the Southern States. The American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, and the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, all of which support the bill, have important membership throughout the South.

The farm organizations have committees which make a study of the freight rate situation. They have all endorsed this measure. It seems to me that all the way through there is a clear-cut line of demarcation represented by the law as it now is and by the practices which have been followed throughout all the years. All the bill does is to safeguard the rights of those who, acting in good faith, undertake to adjust and agree upon rates and announce those rates and submit them to the Interstate Commerce Commission to be placed in effect.

I cannot see how anything could be fairer than this bill. I do not agree at all with the idea that it would exempt railroads from any of their proper responsibilities. I think it is a practical measure which deals with our existence in the business world, and affords the sort of relief and consideration which must be given if business is to be carried on.

If we do away with this system, we shall have chaos. Whenever I think about chaos, I recall what a certain individual said the other day. He said, "You might get a coordinator if you cannot get a rate bureau." Another man gave a definition of a coordinator which I think it might be well to remember. He stated that a coordinator was a man who came along to establish regimented chaos to take the place of unorganized confusion. In this instance I believe that if we should change the method by which we undertake to fix rates and adopt some other method, we would have regimented chaos, and we would likewise have unorganized confusion.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me before he takes his seat?

Mr. HOEY. I yield.

Mr REED. The Senator from North Carolina has made such a lucid statement that I wish to ask him a question or two.

The Senator from North Carolina remembers that back in the old days before any regulation of railroads or railroad rates, it was the large shipper who got the rebates and the favors, and not the small shipper.

Mr. HOEY. In that connection I should like to remark that that is the difficulty which confronts us if we do away with this system of rate-making.

Mr. REED. Precisely.

Mr. HOEY. The large concern can maintain traffic departments and hire rate experts. It can devise some rate, and persuade the railroad to adopt it. The small shipper has no facilities for doing so. If we take away the rate-making power he will have nowhere to go to have a rate fixed for him.

Mr. REED. Not only can the large shipper hire expert talent and advice, but the railroads and the large concerns, being operated by human beings, favor the shipper who has the most business if they favor anyone. When Senator Wheeler was chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and a bill similar to this was under consideration—perhaps it was this bill last year—some traffic men from the northwestern railroads came here and we went into the private office of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Comerce. We discussed with those traffic men the question as to why they built a warehouse and leased it at a nominal rate to one of the large merchandising concerns. The answer of the traffic men was, "Who can say no to that concern?"

I am sure that the Senator from North Carolina and I would agree that so far as the small shipper is concerned, his salvation is in regulation; and this is an honest-regulation bill.

Mr. HOEY. The taking away or destroying of the functions or activities of the rate bureau would be the hardest blow that could come to the small businessman and the small shipper.

Mr. REED. I am glad to be in full agreement with the Senator from North Carolina on that question.

Mr. McFARLAND obtained the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. TAYLOR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Flanders	McKellar
Baldwin	George	McMahon
Ball	Green	Magnuson
Barkley	Gurney	Malone
Brewster	Hatch	Martin
Bricker	Hayden	Maybank
Bridges	Hill	Millikin
Buck	Hoey	Moore

Stewart	Umstead	Wiley
Taft	Vandenberg	Wilson
Taylor	Watkins	Young
Thomas, Okla.	Wherry
Tobey	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Senator from Arizona has the floor.

NOMINATIONS OF JUNIOR OFFICERS IN THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. This morning the Committee on Armed Services approved numerous nominations. I have discussed this matter with the President pro tempore, and I wish to say that if the nominations are placed on the Executive Calendar, the printing of the nominations, for there are a great many of them, will require a number of pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Moreover, if the nominations are not confirmed at the time when I report them to the Senate, it will be necessary to have the nominations printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a second time, when they are confirmed. They will also have to be printed on the Executive Calendar each day between the time when they are reported and the time when they are confirmed. The nominations are those of junior officers, and they constitute a part of the list of 25,000 officers authorized as an addition to the Regular Army, as officers in the Regular Army. In other words, originally there was an authorization for 25,000 officers in the Regular Army, and the Congress increased that authorization to 50,000. Let me say that there are 9,000 names on the list which I hold in my hand, representing nominations which have been approved by the committee. The confirmation of these nominations will bring the officer strength up to approximately 44,000.

So, Mr. President, it is my intention, with the permission of the Senator from Arizona, to ask consent to report the nominations today, along with some other nominations of junior officers in the Army and the Navy, and to ask unanimous consent for their confirmation at this time.

With that brief explanation, I ask unanimous consent to report from the committee this list of 9,000 officer nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield for that purpose?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], I feel that I should not yield for that purpose, because I believe that if he were present he would object.

COMMITTEE MEETING DURING THE SESSION OF THE SENATE

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me, to permit me to make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent that a subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands be authorized to sit this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, does the Senator know to which subcommittee of the Public Lands Committee the unanimous-consent request applies?

Mr. WHITE. No. The memorandum which I have before me does not identify the subcommittee which is affected by the request. It is simply designated as a subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—I shall not object, but I wish to make some observations—let me say that we are confronted with the absence of a quorum. There was a quorum present, if we count those Senators who marched through the Chamber and then went back to their offices. I count now on the floor of the Senate six Members of the Senate. Probably one of the reasons why we are unable to obtain quorums is the fact that we permit so many committees to meet during the sessions of the Senate. I have never before seen in the Senate a situation quite so bad in respect to the ability to maintain a quorum as that which has prevailed during this entire session. I do not know whether the reorganization bill has anything to do with that situation. I voted against the reorganization bill and I submitted a few remarks, which no doubt, contrariwise, insured its passage.

But, Mr. President, this is the Senate of the United States, and a quorum should be present. It is not very pleasant to try to attend the sessions of the Senate and not have a little company in this Chamber. I do not know what the answer is, but something should be done about the situation. I commend a study of it to the attention of the majority leader and his group, and I hope they will see what can be done about it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I should like first to have action taken on the request I made; and then I shall submit an observation, if I may do so.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was interrupting the Senator, and I was reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall not object, Mr. President.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should like to know what the request is. I come now on the floor of the Senate from attendance upon a meeting of the Appropriations Subcommittee on the Interior Department appropriation bill. I have wanted to be on the floor of the Senate to listen to the discussion of the unfinished business, but I could not be here and also attend the meeting of the committee.

Now a request is made for unanimous consent, and that will be an order of the Senate, which means—although I do not think it is generally recognized to be such—that it will be a commitment of 96 Senators or at present 95. However, there are less than 15 Senators on the floor of the Senate at the moment. Obviously, it seems to me, a unanimous-consent request should not be agreed to without having a quorum actually present in the Chamber and in their seats in the Chamber.

It has been the practice, as I am sure the majority leader will agree, that whenever a unanimous-consent agreement has been propounded, a quorum call has been had, in order that Senators then absent might enter the Chamber and be advised of the request which was made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the information of the Senator from Wyoming, the Chair advises the Senator that the unanimous-consent request made by the Senator from Maine was that a subcommittee of the Public Lands Committee be given consent by the Senate to meet during the session of the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. WHITE. The request applied simply to this afternoon. Of course, much of the afternoon already has gone.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And I assume that the subcommittee has been in session.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I dislike to trespass on the time of the Senator from Arizona; but the question of how we are to solve the problem, which we all recognize as confronting the Senate and confronting the individual Members of the Senate, is a difficult one, indeed. If any Member of the Senate can suggest a solution of it, I shall welcome it; and I am sure the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is equally concerned. I am sure all of us are concerned about the situation which confronts us, but I do not know the answer. I have thought that possibly if we returned to the original plan, which was used at the beginning of this session, namely, to have alternate days for Senate sessions and committee meetings, that might be an improvement. I am not sure that it would not be even better to have the first 3 days of each week reserved for Senate Chamber sessions, during which days the committees would not be authorized to sit, except during the mornings, and to have the remainder of each week—Thursdays, Fridays, and Saturdays—reserved for committee meetings during the afternoons. I do not know whether such an arrangement would be a solution of the problem.

I do know there is a difficulty in this connection, and I do know the situation is most unfortunate, and I do know that I shall join any Senator, including the Senator from Texas, the Senator from Kentucky, and the other Senators who now are on the floor, in any effort to bring about a happier allocation of the time which is available to us each day.

That is all I can say about the matter. When I go beyond that, I am simply talking without knowing what I am talking about.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine is never in that position, let me say.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arizona will yield to me, I should like to inquire, first, whether the unanimous-consent request which the Senator from Maine has made has been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I have no objection to the request. I, also, wish to make an observation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I think consent should not be granted until all these observations have been made, because I wish to make an observation regarding this matter myself.

The Senator from Maine has asked for suggestions in respect to how this problem may be handled, and I think I have one.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I merely wished to call the attention of Senators who were not present just before the Senator from Maine made his unanimous-consent request to the fact that immediately prior thereto the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] made a unanimous-consent request involving action by the Senate on the nominations of more than 9,000 officers of the Army. He had asked unanimous consent to have the nominations reported and considered at this time. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] has declined to yield for that purpose.

I was on my feet at that time, preparing to object to the request, for the simple reason that there were then present even fewer Senators than are now present. Notwithstanding the fact that a quorum had just been announced as present, there were not more than half a dozen Senators on the floor, as I believe the Senator from Texas counted the number then present. It occurred to me that before a request such as the one the Senator was making should be acted upon, certainly an actual quorum of the Senate should be present.

I make no criticism of the Senator or his request, but it does emphasize the situation with which we are confronted. I have no solution for it except that I think the very requests being made for committees to meet during the session of the Senate contribute largely to the absenteeism in this body. It was one of the things the Reorganization Act sought to prevent. It absolutely prohibits the meeting of committees during the sessions of the Senate unless unanimous consent is had. We know how that has worked out. Daily these requests are made and consent is given, and the Reorganization Act in that respect is not having any effect whatever.

Mr. President, while I realize that the appropriation bills must be acted on, and it is necessary that the Committee on Appropriations complete its work, there seems to be a determined effort to conclude all other business of the Senate by a certain date in July and to speed the work of the Senate unduly. Committees are in continuous session so that we may adjourn at sometime in July and go home.

I wish to protest against that practice. I think the Congress of the United States is important enough, I think the legislation before this body now, the very bill we are now considering, is important enough to have the presence of Senators on the floor listening to the debate and to the discussions, and any system which prevents that is bad for the whole process of government.

I think we should forget about the adjournment. We should take whatever time is necessary to complete the business of the Senate, and we certainly should not have committee meetings during the sessions of the Senate except for those committees, like the Committee on Appropriations, considering measures involving time limits making it necessary for them to get their work done soon.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, like the Senator from Maine, I have no panacea for this situation. Conditions respecting attendance and the maintenance of a quorum have the lowest ebb since I have been a Member of the Senate. Look around at the vacant seats in the Senate. They are supposed to be occupied by Senators, but Senators are not present, and when they come into the Chamber they enter by one door and go out the other. Something must be done to obtain and keep a quorum here in the consideration of important business such as that we now have before us. We have heard two important requests made, one by the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, the other by the majority leader; yet, when consent is given, no one except a handful of us here will know anything about it.

I do not know whether the fault lies with the Reorganization Act or not. In my judgment the Reorganization Act was full of errors, and I think that when it passed the Senate surrendered to a statute control of its own affairs and its own committees, which I believe was wrong. I think the Reorganization Act was harmful in that it did away with many small committees and piled the work onto a few great committees, which cannot transact all the business that comes before them. That is one reason why Senators are not present. They are in attendance upon some committee, undertaking to solve the problems before the committee, but if we had had the small committees, which could have worked in the mornings under the chairmanship of Senators who wanted their committees to amount to something, business could have been transacted more speedily and more efficiently than is being done under the new system of "streamlining Congress." The Constitution fixes our powers and our limitations, and I think that is sufficient guide. We handed over to a statute complete control of our own affairs in the Senate, under the plea that we are "streamlining Congress," which action was largely responsible for many of our difficulties.

I shall not object to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to add one or two observations to what has been said by the Senator from Texas and the Senator from New Mexico perhaps repeating something I have said before on the floor of the Senate with respect to this subject.

As one looks around the Senate Chamber now one finds that the galleries are partially filled by citizens of the United States, who have come here from various parts of this great country to the Capitol to see the Senate of the United States in action, to see it in the process of deliberating upon legislation. There is not a single person now in the galleries who will not go forth from this session remarking to himself that as he looked down upon this floor there were less than a score of Senators present, while a great bill, dealing with the railroads of the United States, was under consideration.

Mr. President, I say that if that condition is permitted to continue, it will undermine the confidence of the people of the United States in the congressional form of government. I hold the majority responsible, completely responsible, for what is going on here now, because, as the Senator from New Mexico has said, the majority of the Senate has made up its mind to bring this session of the Congress of the United States to a termination sometime in July, although we all know that the problems of the world are waiting for solution in the Congress. Members of the Senate are not only not in attendance here this afternoon, but they are pursuing a policy the object of which is to bring this session of Congress to a close before we can possibly determine the tremendously important questions dealing with the very fate of civilization.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator has information as to the purposes of the majority which have not been made known to me. I cannot find fault with the Senator if he is stating what he knows; but how he knows it is beyond me.

Let me say one other word about the situation, so that we can conclude the discussion and pass on to the business of the Senate. I have said over and over again that I am as much distressed by the situation which has arisen, and which now exists, as is the Senator from Wyoming or any other Senator. I do not believe, however, that while we are in the middle of a session—I call it the middle of a session, I do not know how near the middle of the session it is, but that is as good a description as any—while we are in the middle of a session I do not think we are in the mood, nor do we have the time, to sit down and laboriously work out a modification of the rules of the Senate or a modification of the Reorganization Act. I do entertain the hope that when this session shall have been concluded, with whatever infirmities of action there may have been in connection with the session, during the recess of the Congress something may be done in an effort to find an answer to the problem the Senator has been discussing. I submit that we are not going to find the solution here on the floor of the Senate, sparring back and forth, and telling what we know or do not know about purposes.

I earnestly hope that the pending request of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] may be acquiesced in. It means not only confirmation of officers of the services, but it means the saving of several hundred and perhaps thousands of dollars, and there is no one in the Senate, whether he is now present on the floor or elsewhere, who will go over the lists of names and have any knowledge as to the particular qualifications of any particular man on the list, unless it happens to be someone from his own State.

I merely make this appeal, that we continue with the business of the Senate this afternoon, with the understanding that whenever there comes a recess, or whenever there comes a stoppage in the burden of the work which is upon Senators, we can give serious and ordered consideration to this problem, and I entain some hope that we may find a solution for it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for me to make a suggestion, to amend his unanimous-consent request?

Mr. WHITE. I shall sit down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Wyoming for that purpose?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator from Arizona. Would the Senator from Maine entertain the following amendment to his unanimous-consent request?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I state it? That during the further consideration of the bill now before the Senate, no other unanimous-consent agreement for the meeting of any committee, during the sessions of the Senate, except the Committee on Appropriations and its subcommittees, shall be granted.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, this is not a request which originated with me. It came to me from a committee, or from a member of the committee that wants to sit this afternoon. I personally am in no position to accept amendments. If the Senator offers it and it carries, that disposes of the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I say that even though the request for unanimous consent were amended as suggested, it could be undone tomorrow, by unanimous consent, could it not? A unanimous-consent agreement can be disposed of by unanimous consent again. So, what would that accomplish?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, of course, that is true; but we have operated in the Senate for a long time under unanimous-consent agreements, by which votes were to be taken at a particular time, and they have been religiously adhered to. I feel that if this additional amendment were agreed to now it would, at least for the consideration of the pending bill, insure the attendance of an actual quorum during consideration of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection, it might have some moral effect in deterring Senators from asking unanimous consent that committees meet while the Senate is in session, but if a Senator should come in with a plausible reason why his particular committee should sit in the afternoon, and ask unanimous consent that they might sit, I doubt whether the previous unanimous consent now referred to by the Senator would avail to prevent another unanimous consent that they meet. While I am on my feet, if the Senator from Arizona will permit——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I say to the Senator that all he is saying is that any rule of the Senate may be set aside by unanimous consent; and that, of course, is true?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. Mr. President, I deplore as much as any other Senator the absence of Senators from the floor. I have labored with that problem for years. There is nothing new about it, except I think it has been worse this session than before. I do not think the Legislative Reorganization Act is responsible for it. I do not know what is responsible. I cannot project my vision into the bosom of any Senator and find out why he does not attend. He may have work in his office. He may have other things to look after. I doubt now, if a census were to be taken of all the committees that are in session this afternoon, if there are any which have obtained consent to sit during the sitting of the Senate, there would be found a sufficient number of Members there to make up the deficiency between the number of Senators present and the number necessary to make a quorum. I doubt very much if the meeting of these committees in the afternoon has had much to do with absenteeism. I recall that a certain committee before which I was to appear a few days ago obtained consent to meet during a session of the Senate, and I appeared before the committee to testify. The chairman of the committee was the only one who was there. I made my statement and left. Certainly the consent of the Senate that that committee hold a meeting in the afternoon did not result in the absence of a quorum on the floor of the Senate. I do not know what the remedy is.

Now, about adjournment. We all know that the Legislative Reorganization Act fixes the date upon which the Senate shall automatically adjourn, unless we are at war, or unless the President has in the meantime called an emergency. Of course, Congress, under the Constitution, can fix the time that it adjourns, and it can amend that act. I am personally hoping that we shall complete the work of the present session in time to adjourn by the 31st day of July. I think if legislation which remains to be brought before the Senate is no more useful than the bill now under consideration, and the one that is scheduled to follow it, we might adjourn the 1st of July, or the middle of July, or any other date. That is a matter of opinion; but that is what I think about it. I believe that if we are not going to do anything except fiddle around with chicken-feed stuff from now until the 31st of July, and we can get the appropriation bills through by the 1st of July, which we are supposed to do, the country cannot complain very vociferously if we adjourn in July. That is the way I feel about it.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Kentucky will yield, now——

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. I am sure the Senator realizes that I have very great respect for his opinions.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's respect for my opinions, and, if I may use the language of the Senator from Michigan, it is "totally mutual" between the Senator and me. But we encountered this problem, time and time again, when I was trying to deal with it, in the majority leadership. I wrestled with it all the time. I complained about absenteeism. I called our side into conference. I lectured them. I did all I could to induce Senators voluntarily to be present during the sessions of the Senate. I am satisfied the same efforts have been made on the other side. But what is to be done about it? It is impossible to lasso Senators and bring them into the Chamber; and if that were possible, we could not keep them in the Chamber. I do not know what the remedy is, unless we make our speeches more interesting or——

Mr. REED. Shorter?

Mr. BARKLEY. Or shorter, or unless we devise some method by which men may keep their minds flexible, so that they will not be made up until the vote comes, and Senators, therefore, will have some interest in obtaining information in the Senate that might affect their vote.

With respect to the pending legislation, I assume that every Senator has his mind very well made up as to how he is going to vote. It is generally understood the vote will not be reached for 2 or 3 days. Senators, therefore, take advantage of the situation to attend to other matters, something that is either more emergent in their opinion or that is more desirable. I do not know what Senators are going to do about it. I doubt very much that the Legislative Reorganization Act has contributed much to the present situation.

Mr. McFARLAND. I am indeed grateful to my colleagues who have taken part in this colloquy, because it has brought more Members of the Senate to the floor than I have seen in the Chamber for a long while. But, now that the Senators are present, I should be very grateful if I might proceed with my remarks. I desire to finish this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and the request is granted.

Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I did not yield to the Senator from South Dakota for that purpose. I do not want to go back over that matter at this time, because the Senator from New Mexico said he would object, and the Senator from Georgia has consistently objected to requests of that sort. I should like to proceed with my remarks.

Mr. GURNEY. I wonder if the Senator would yield for a brief statement by way of explanation?

Mr. McFARLAND. I have yielded now about 30 minutes. I feel that I should like to proceed with my statement.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, much of the colloquy arose over the request made by the majority leader with reference to the committee of which I am chairman, the Committee on Public Lands. I want to report that two Members of the Senate are holding a meeting of the Committee on Public Lands. Secretary Clayton and three or four other officials almost as prominent in public departments are present before the committee testifying. If the two Senators were present in the Chamber, it would add only that many to the number present.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CARRIERS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 110) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I wish to take only a few moments of the Senate's time in discussing the pending bill, S. 110. Freely granting that this legislation is of much importance, the phase thereof which I now desire to take up is of such substance and consequence as to preclude passage of the measure, at least at this time.

In the last 6 years the essence of the bill has been thoroughly discussed in both Houses of Congress, both in committees and on the floors. As a member of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce during the last 6½ years I have heard the arguments both for and against its adoption. Last year our committee held hearings which lasted over a period of some 3 months, the record of which comprises 2,416 printed pages. This year there were again additional hearings covering 200 printed pages. There was also a voluminous record made in the House. The subject is by no means novel, and its many aspects have been freely ventilated.

It is not my present purpose, however, to discuss the various arguments for and against the legislation. I wish to concentrate my remarks upon, and to invite the specific attention of the Senate to, one fundamental aspect of the matter, so vital as of itself to constitute a serious objection to present consideration of the bill.

I am a strong believer in our Constitution; I am a strong believer in the system established by it for the three separate but coordinate branches of our Government. History has demonstrated what now seems to have been the divinely inspired wisdom of the framers of our Constitution when they laid as the cornerstone of government the system of checks and balances which has made it the bulwark of the greatest Nation on earth.

In this very Chamber, as elsewhere throughout the land, criticism has been forcefully voiced when it has appeared that the courts have read into the statutes things which are not intended by the Congress, and thereby as a sort of judicial legislation they have encroached upon the legislative power. The executive branch has not been free of verbal chastisement when it was thought that that branch had usurped powers properly reposing in the Congress or in the judiciary. But we in Congress certainly have no right to criticize either the executive or the judicial departments of our Government if we ourselves encroach upon the duties of either of the other departments.

The maintenance inviolate of the three separate branches is just as indispensable today as ever it was before in our national life—yes, even more so; the division of powers is as important today as when it was written into the Constitution by our forefathers. And, if I may be permitted to say so, the occasional clamor that arises over the allegedly apostate delegation by us of our prized but sometimes onerous power to legislate is now increasingly augmented by charges that we neglect our proper function, to toy with that of the courts—a sort of exodus from the forum to the bench, as it were.

Mr. President, the prototype of the so-called Bulwinkle bill was first introduced in the Seventy-eighth Congress in 1943. Basically it differed little from the present version of the bill before us. This bill among other things has the effect of exempting from the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act certain practices by railroads, dealing with rate bureaus, conferences, and associations. As to whether as a matter of abstract principle there should be such exemptions, I do not now want to comment in detail; nor do I wish presently to discuss whether in fact the record thus far made is probative of concerted action to increase rates. It may be significant, however, to remember that the problem of railroads acting in concert to change rates—perhaps, more accurately, to raise rates—is not a new one for Congress. As far back as 1895, when the Interstate Commerce Commission was relatively fresh on the job, an illustrious predecessor of the present senior Senator from New Hampshire, the Honorable William E. Chandler, who like his successor was a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, castigated the ICC for doing nothing while the eastern and western trunk lines formed an association to maintain rates. And then, as now, the Interstate Commerce Commission held that it had no authority over violations of the antitrust statutes; then, as now, the Commission approved of pooling arrangements for the fixing of rates.

That, incidentally, recalls to my mind the statement made by a wise statesman. He was Richard B. Olney, a famous railroad lawyer before Grover Cleveland made him Attorney General of the United States in 1892. He was, in fact, Attorney General at the very time Senator Chandler, of New Hampshire, was complaining bitterly of the brazen defiance of antitrust laws by the railroads. But before that Mr. Olney had been general counsel of the Burlington Railroad, and his chief, Mr. Perkins, president of the Burlington, was very much disturbed about what the Interstate Commerce Commission might do to the railroads. Said Mr. Olney to Mr. Perkins:

> The Interstate Commerce Commission, as its functions have now been limited by the courts, is, or can be made, of great use to the railroads. It satisfies the popular clamor for a Government supervision of the railroads, at the same time that supervision is almost entirely nominal. Further, the older such a commission gets to be, the more inclined it will be found to take the business and railroad view of things. It thus becomes a sort of barrier between the railroad corporations and the people and a sort of protection against hasty and crude legislation hostile to the railroad interests. The part of wisdom is not to destroy the Commission but to use it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. It seems then that my statement of yesterday insofar as it may have seemed somewhat critical of the Commission, was nothing novel since there had been criticism of the Commission, and plans for eminent railroad counsel to use the Commission before the Senator from Georgia was even born.

Mr. McFARLAND. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. If the Senator criticized the Commission, of course, it was not the first time that was done, nor will it be the last time.

The wisdom and pertinence of Mr. Olney's observation of more than half a century ago, are a matter on which individuals may differ in opinion, but the fact remains that because of the present cumbersome method of handling rates and the inequitable results thereof, the South and the West have been forced unceasingly, and as yet unsuccessfully, to try to see to it that their farmers, stock growers, and raw-material producers obtain the same fair treatment in the fixing of rates that is afforded the large industrial manufacturers in the so-called official territory. However, these are issues which, as I said a moment ago, I do not want to develop in detail at this time for the reason that there is another decisive factor which should prohibit us from taking present favorable action on the bill.

That factor is the increasing tendency toward breaking down the three independent and separate departments of our Government. Viewing S. 110 in this light brings us squarely to the question: Does this legislation tend to usurp or nullify the functions of the Judiciary?

The question is of such solemnity as to warrant serious contemplation. As it happens, earlier events afford us a background for perspective.

Five years ago the Department of Justice filed an action against insurance companies, the so-called Southeastern Underwriters Case. Generally stated, the question in that case was whether the antitrust laws applied to the insurance companies. That would appear to be a proper inquiry for the courts; but what happened? A hasty effort was made to get legislation through the Congress exempting the insurance companies from the provisions of the antitrust laws. That legislation had hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I was a member. I had no strong views as to whether insurance companies were in commerce, but I was convinced that it was bad Government for Congress to legislate in anticipation of a court decision. There was an attempt, plainly enough, to beat the courts to the draw; there was an attempt to have Congress by its own edict make noneffective whatever decision the Supreme Court might hand down. Fortunately, some of us succeeded in delaying action on the bill until the Supreme Court had spoken. The major credit for this goes to the senior Senator from Wyoming, Mr. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY. The Government won the Southeastern Underwriters case in the courts; and with the resultant clarification of the issues for its assistance, the Congress was then able to work out and pass legislation in line with the principles enunciated in the Supreme Court decision, which permitted State regulation where desired, and provided for the so-called moratorium law which gives the insurance companies until January 1, 1948 either to work out their own problems with the State legislatures, or, failing that, to come under the anti-trust statutes. That the result was a proper and statesmanlike one, in keeping with the spirit of the interplay of coordinate powers, seems beyond cavil.

Another example was the tidelands oil situation. Ownership of the tidelands is, after all, no novelty; it is founded upon long-established principles of law and therefore is basically, and I believe properly, a judicial one, certainly so in the first instance. But in anticipation of judicial determination, the Congress last year passed a measure declaring State sovereignty over those lands. The President vetoed it. The question is now before the Supreme Court. Let the Supreme Court render its opinion. The final fact of ownership of property is peculiarly a matter of law. A judicial decision of the point will not bar congressional action, or a declaration of congressional policy, within the true sphere of the legislative authority. Possibly the tidelands are State property; possibly they should be under the sovereignty of the Federal Government. But in either case the Congress has not only the right, but the duty, to consider the interpretation of the law by the highest tribunal in the land before it legislates on the question. That is the path conducive to enlightened dispatch of public affairs; in a sense, it is merely demonstrative of the ancient maxim to the effect that two heads are better than one.

In the present bill we are asked to exempt the railroads from the impact of certain phases of the antitrust laws; and for what reason? Let us look briefly at the pertinent facts. In 1942 the Government, through the Department of Justice, began the assembling of data which it believed was the basis of an antitrust case against railroads and truckers in Chicago and Denver. In January of 1943, the Department began presenting those data to a grand jury in Chicago. None of this was a secret, and particularly not to the railroads. In the meantime we became involved in the war. The railroads were important factors in the war effort; and, whether it was proper or not, Congress passed legislation which in substance permitted the War Production Board to exempt from antitrust prosecution any activity or industry essential to the war effort. In less than 2 months the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Office of Defense Transportation all informed the War Production Board that the railroads were essential industry in the prosecution of the war and that no antitrust action should be prosecuted against them. The War Production Board promptly issued certificate 44 on March 20, 1943, which for present purpose and intent immunized the railroads from antitrust prosecution. That certificate was presented before the Chicago grand jury, and it dropped the case. No purpose of substance is served in bruiting this particular interference by one division of the Government with another, because the adamantine fact is that many things must be done in time of war which cannot be countenanced in peacetime.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Arizona is thoroughly familiar with all the details of this matter, and particularly with respect to certificate 44. I have not examined that document closely, but I was of the opinion that it related to criminal prosecutions. Was it sufficiently broad to affect a civil action?

Mr. McFARLAND. The particular actions to which I refer were, as I understand, criminal proceedings before a grand jury in Chicago.

Mr. RUSSELL. It was my opinion that certificate 44 merely referred to criminal prosecutions, and was a "red herring" so far as concerns the two civil actions which are pending against the carriers.

Mr. McFARLAND. I note these developments merely because I am relating the history of these antitrust cases.

But even before the institution of the Chicago and Denver cases, there was a growing movement in the States against the effect of private rate agreements between carriers. The charge that the railroads had conspired together in violation of the antitrust laws did not originate with the Department of Justice. An Interstate Commerce Commission report, cited in the hearings on the predecessor of the pending bill in the Seventy-ninth Congress—pages 1344–1345—showed that as early as 1937 the Southern States accused the railroads of violations of law in connection with rate fixing.

In the early summer of 1944, about a year after the Chicago proceeding was dropped, the State of Georgia filed its case against the railroads. In August of that same year the Department of Justice brought another action in Lincoln, Nebr.—United States against Association of American Railroads et al. It should be noted that in the Lincoln case, which was filed while the War Production Board's certificate of immunization was still in force, the Government alleged that its charge was founded upon matters that had occurred prior to the immunization, and upon matters that were not immunized. Although the court has held that the immunization certificate was not a bar to filing the Lincoln case, the defense of the railroads in that case is that certificate 44 barred such antitrust proceedings and that the action is concerned solely with violations of law with respect to rate bureaus. The State of Georgia, of course, was not bound by the immunization certificate and brought its case under the broad charge of a conspiracy to violate the antitrust statutes.

Early in 1945 the first so-called Bulwinkle bill was introduced in the House, and hearings were held on it. It passed the House on December 10, 1945, and in March of the following year hearings were commenced before the Senate committee. The bill was subsequently reported late in 1946, amended in some degree, and failed to pass the Senate when it was caught in the legislative tangle that generally accompanies the closing days of a session of Congress.

Meanwhile, let us see what has happened in the judicial field. The Supreme Court accepted jurisdiction of the Georgia case, and extensive testimony has been taken by a master appointed by the Court, the Honorable Lloyd K. Garrison. The case has been set for final argument. It is a big case; the evidence is tremendously voluminous; and it has been estimated that the master's findings are not likely to be completed before late this summer or early fall—all of which indicates that the Supreme Court decision on the Georgia case can quite confidentially be expected in the next term of Court, next year.

Trial of the Government's case at Lincoln, Nebr., began on or about April 23. Here again it is likely that a final Supreme Court decision is possible in the next term of that Court some time next year.

What does all this mean? It appears quite certain that two cases, broadly involving many of the precise problems embraced in the present bill, will be examined and interpreted in the light of existing law by the Nation's highest judicial tribunal within the space of a year, if not sooner. The issues in the cases are in every sense justiciable. I have already briefly adverted to specific instances wherein the separate exercise of the judicial power has been useful in the study and promulgation of legislation.

Let me add here that, as a lawyer, I am not always impressed with the cogency of the legal reasoning of some members of the Court, nor with some of the opinions that have been expressed by some of those members. One of the ancient and cherished prerogatives of the bar is to disagree with the bench. By no stretch of imagination am I now suggesting that the Congress is to be bound by whatever opinions and decisions may be made by the courts upon this important and highly controversial question. But I am urging, as forcefully as I can, that it is the constitutional duty of Congress to refrain from interference with the judicial process; it is the moral duty of Congress to await a decision by the Court; it is in the public interest and in the interest of orderly procedure and good common sense for Congress to see what the Court says before it legislates on a question that is of such great importance to this Nation.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. Does the Senator not think that it is up to the Congress to determine the policy and for the Supreme Court to interpret the law, rather than to determine what our policy should be?

Mr. McFARLAND. It is without question the duty of the Congress to determine the policy; but I say it is not the duty of the Congress in effect to try cases before decisions are rendered and thus endeavor to do away with the Supreme Court in that manner. That is exactly what is threatening to take place with respect to these cases.

Mr. McMAHON. It seems to me that the Senator begs the question. It is up to the Supreme Court to decide the issues presented in cases, under the laws of the United States. Congress had a right to determine what the transportation policy of this country should be. As the Senator knows and as I pointed out yesterday, in the case of airplane companies and also in the case of steamship companies which are governed by the Water Carriers Act, Congress did for them exactly what the pending bill would do for the railroads. To say that the Congress does not have a right, no matter what the state of affairs is at this time, to determine that it shall do for the railroads what it has done in the case of the airplane and in the case of the steamship, seems to me to be rather a non sequitur.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Connecticut states that the Senator from Arizona begs the question. I say that the question begging is being done by those who are advocating this bill. Before there has been any determination by the courts of the country that the sponsors or promoters of the bill have violated the Antitrust Act they rush into Congress and seek the enactment of a law which would give them immunity from that act in perpetuity. Congress has fixed the policy. It was fixed when we enacted the transportation laws and when we enacted the antitrust laws. It is a matter of seeking to avoid a judgment of the court changing the policy while the question is pending in the Supreme Court. It is a clear invasion, or an attempt to invade, the proper prerogatives of the judicial branch of the Government by the legislative branch of the Government at the behest of those who would seek to escape a judgment which would define how far they may go under the Transportation Act without violating the antitrust laws.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. My observation would be along the line of that of the Senator from Georgia. Regardless of what the Congress may have done with reference to air lines and steamship lines, Congress long ago laid down the policy with respect to railroads, which it had a right to do. Railroads were the first interstate agencies ever regulated by Congress. The Interstate Commerce Act has been amended from time to time. Congress passed the Transportation Act of 1920 following the return of the railroads to their owners after World War I, and Congress declared a policy in that act. In 1940, 20 years later, we wrote a new Transportation Act and declared a policy therein. So that Congress has exercised its right and power to fix a policy with respect to railroads long before it did so with respect to air lines and other agencies of transportation. Having laid down that policy, Congress is now asked to change it in the midst of litigation in which the Supreme Court will interpret that policy, and we are asked to do that because parties on one side of that litigation are afraid the interpretation of the Supreme Court may not be in their favor or to their satisfaction; and we are asked to cut the ground out from under the Supreme Court in interpreting a policy which we long ago laid down, just as 2 or 3 years ago we were asked to do the same thing with respect to insurance companies when there was a lawsuit pending in the courts in regard to them.

The business of insurance companies had previously been decided not to be interstate commerce, but the Supreme Court later decided that it was interstate commerce. In spite of the original opinion of the Supreme Court, it always was interstate commerce, just as much as a certificate of stock in a corporation issued in New York and sent through the mails or otherwise across State lines was interstate commerce and was so regarded. So that what we are asked to do here is the same thing we were asked to do while an insurance law was pending in the Supreme Court. By the very able and alert action of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], exerted largely by himself but in cooperation with some others, a satisfactory piece of legislation was passed.

I think the Senator from Arizona is eminently correct in his statement that we are seeking, in effect, to cut the ground from under the Supreme Court in interpreting a policy which long ago Congress enacted.

Mr. McFARLAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that, again, the analogy which is sought to be drawn will not hold up, I think. In the case of insurance, the Federal Government never sought to bring it under regulation. On the other hand, the Federal Government has sought to bring the railroads under regulation.

The Senator has said that we are trying to cut the ground out from under the Supreme Court. Of course, the matter can be stated in that way, if Senators wish to do so. On the other hand, can it not be said that we are proposing, as it is within our right to do, that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be, in full force and effect, the regulatory body to regulate the railroads of the United States? The rate bureaus, which I think all of us agree must be maintained if we are to have a unified transportation system in the United States, were not attacked by the Department of Justice or by anyone else for a period of 40 years. But suddenly that system is attacked.

I think it is within the purview and the right of the Congress to say now that as between having criminal juries and district court judges or the Interstate Commerce Commission decide upon the reasonableness of rates throughout the country, we shall see to it that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall do exactly that, and that in doing so the Commission must not approve any agreement that is in violation of the public interest.

I do not wish to intrude further upon the time of the Senator; but if he will indulge me for one moment more, I should like to quote from a case to be found in the Three Hundred and Ninth United States Reports at page 470, the case of Federal Communications Commission against Sanders Brothers Radio Station. In its opinion, the Supreme Court said:

Thus the act—

Speaking of the Federal Communications Act—

recognizes that the field of broadcasting is one of free competition. The sections dealing with broadcasting demonstrate that Congress has not, in its regulatory scheme, abandoned the principle of free competition, as it has done in the case of railroads, in respect of which regulation involves the suppression of wasteful practices due to competition, the regulation of rates and charges, and other measures which are unnecessary if free competition is to be permitted.

In that case the Solicitor General made a very interesting observation in the Government's brief, as follows:

There is an essential difference between the present statute—

That is, the Federal Communications Act, which was being tested out—and legislation such as the Interstate Commerce Act which regulates the manner in which a public utility shall be operated. In the regulation of railroads Congress has taken over control of the rates and charges which may be collected and has otherwise assumed authority to prescribe the manner in which the business shall be conducted. The Transportation Act of 1920 was designed to effectuate that control for the primary purpose of assuring the public an adequate and efficient transportation system.

Let me say a further word, if the Senator will permit: This measure simply affords a chance for the Congress to decide whether it wishes to have regulation of the railroads by district court judges and by juries impaneled in various courts in the United States or whether it wishes to have regulation of the railroads by the body which the Congress of the United States has said should do the regulating.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the distinguished Senator to this point: He says the railroads have been using these booking agencies for 40 years. However, let me point out that we do not know whether any violation of the antitrust laws has been occurring in that connection for 40 years. This is the first time the question has been brought into the courts, and now the courts will determine whether there has been a violation of the antitrust laws. We now have the opportunity of obtaining the benefit of a judicial determination of just what the railroads can do without violating the anti-trust laws. However, we are asked to establish a new policy at a time when we do not have the benefit of the Supreme Court's decision.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think the very cogent comment which has just been made by the Senator from Arizona absolutely demolishes the argument of the Senator from Connecticut.

I should also like to point out that during all the period of years to which the Senator from Connecticut has referred, and during which he has said these freight bureaus or rate bureaus were operating, the monopoly was not then complete. It was only after the Association of American Railroads was organized and after it set up its headquarters here in the city of Washington—a supergovernment of the railroads, which was not responsible to the people of the United States—and after it went so far as to determine what matters could be taken before the Interstate Commerce Commission, that this rate-bureau arrangement was challenged by anyone. So long as competitive forces were allowed to operate to any extent, no one challenged the action of these rate bureaus and no one questioned whether they operated in violation of the antitrust laws. But when this railroad hierarchy was set up in Washington, as an organization of the owners of the large railroads of the United States, with the power of life and death over the other railroad lines, and when that organization arrogated to itself the power of determining what could be brought before the Interstate Commerce Commission and what could not be brought before the Interstate Commerce Commission, this question was raised. No wonder there was raised in the minds of the attorneys of the Department of Justice, as well as in the minds of the attorneys for the State of Georgia, the question of whether the antitrust laws had been violated. That organization had supreme power to deny, even to the Federal Government, complete jurisdiction over rate controversies.

So the reference of the Senator from Connecticut to all the years during which the question was not raised is absolutely meaningless, because not until the last few years, when the Association of American Railroads established its headquarters here in the city of Washington and began establishing the freight pattern of the United States without regard to the Interstate Commerce Commission, did anyone ever claim that there had been any violation of the antitrust laws?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Georgia for that observation and contribution.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McFARLAND. I shall yield to the Senator from Alabama in a moment.

First, Mr. President, I wish to say that I wonder whether the railroads would admit that they have violated the antitrust laws for forty-odd years.

Now I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, let me say that if the Senators will examine the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate on House bill 2536, at page 470—the hearings were most extensive, but no doubt the Senator from Arizona recalls this matter, as a member of the committee—there will be found at that point a letter from Mr. Eysmans, who was assistant to General Atterbury. The letter was addressed to Mr. J. J. Pelley, another railroad executive, I believe. They were discussing the proposal to develop the Association of American Railroads into the organization that it is today. That discussion occurred in 1935. At that time there was no such set-up of bureaus as there is today under the Association of American Railroads, and in that letter they were discussing the matter of bringing into being the set-up which exists today, and which now is being attacked in the Supreme Court. At that time the Interstate Commerce Commission was in existence, of course. Let me read what Mr. Eysmans said in his letter to Mr. Pelley, in speaking about how they would set up the organization, whether they would take this tack or that tack, or would work in this way or in that way:

Judge Fletcher—

Who, as we know, is and has been the counsel for the American Association of Railroads; he is the representative of the railroads in the city of Washington——

Mr. McFARLAND. And a splendid and honorable gentleman.

Mr. HILL. Yes; he is a splendid and an honorable man. He is my neighbor, I say to my friend the Senator from Arizona; he lives near my home, and he is a fine gentleman.

As I said, he is the lawyer for the Association of American Railroads. Mr. Eysmans, in commenting in 1935 on the suggested plan for the set-up, said:

Judge Fletcher believed it would avoid the danger of having the whole plan attacked as being a violation of the antitrust laws. We have got to watch that, because if we are not careful the whole plan we formulated will be attacked as a violation of the antitrust laws.

Mr. BARKLEY. And they are still watching it, are they not?

Mr. HILL. They are still watching it. They worked out this plan, and I am glad to see that there is somebody else watching it. Both the Department of Justice and the State of Georgia are diligent in this matter, and they are watching it. The fact that they have watched it, and that they have taken this plan to the Supreme Court of the United States, is the reason why this bill is before the Senate today. It is not a question of the Interstate Commerce Commission fixing the rates. It goes to a bigger question than that; it goes to the question of the set-up, the machinery and the procedure for fixing the rates, and as to whether or not that set-up and that machinery, under the Association of American Railroads, is such a conspiracy as to violate the antitrust law.

As we know, the provisions of the antitrust law do not go to the question whether rates are reasonable or unreasonable, whether a contract is reasonable or unreasonable. It is a question whether or not there is a conspiracy which prevents competition, because competition, as we know, is the heart of the American free enterprise system, and in battling this bill here today, I will say to the Senator from Arizona, he is making a fight to save the American free enterprise system.

Once we pass the bill, we have taken the first step toward socialization of the railroads, toward nationalization of American industry. The bill might well be titled, "A bill to destroy the American free enterprise system," or "A bill to nationalize and socialize American industry."

Mr. McFARLAND. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Last night, Mr. President, I offered for printing several amendments to the pending bill. They are all more or less interrelated. They deal, first, with the fundamental issue in the bill, namely, whether or not the Congress of the United States should now for the first time give legislative sanction to the type of organization which the railroads have privately formed to administer rates, to fix rates in the first instance, and to carry on the railroad business of the country as a national transportation system.

These amendments also deal with the question as to whether or not the standards in the bill as it has come from the committee are sufficiently clear to protect the public interest when agreements are made between carriers of one class with carriers of another class, for example, agreements between railroads and pipe lines, or railroads and motor carriers.

They deal also with the question as to whether or not these agreements are clearly intended not to be discriminatory among shippers or among geographical areas.

I think these amendments go to the very heart of the measure which is under consideration, and in order that they may be clearly understood. I think it would be very advisable if they could be printed in their proper places in the bill. I therefore ask unanimous consent that 125 copies of S. 110 be printed for the use of the Senate showing certain amendments intended to be proposed by me and that the bill as proposed to be amended be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

S. 110

A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers

Be it enacted, etc., That the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, is amended by adding after section 5 thereof a new section as follows:

SEC. 5a. (1) For purposes of this section—

"(A) The term 'carrier' means any common carrier subject to part I, II, or III, and shall include any freight forwarder subject to part IV, of this act; and

"(B) The term 'antitrust laws' has the meaning assigned to such term in section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914.

"(2) Any carrier, party to an agreement between or among two or more carriers concerning, or providing rules or regulations pertaining to or procedures for the consideration, initiation, or establishment, of rates, fares, charges (including charges as between carriers), classifications, divisions, allowances, time schedules, routes, the interchange of facilities, the settlement of claims, the promotion of safety, or the promotion of adequacy, economy, or efficiency of operation or service, may, under such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe, apply to the Commission for approval of the agreement, and the Commission shall by order approve any such agreement (if approval thereof is not prohibited by paragraph (4), (5), or (6)) if it finds AFTER PUBLIC NOTICE IN THE FEDERAL REGISTER AND PUBLIC HEARING NOT LESS THAN 10 DAYS THEREAFTER that the object of the agreement is appropriate for the proper performance by the carriers of service to the public, that the agreement IS NOT DISCRIMINATORY AMONG SHIPPERS OR GEOGRAPHICAL AREAS, will not unduly restrain competition, and that it is consistent with the public interest as declared by Congress in the national transportation policy set forth in this act; otherwise the application shall be denied. The COMMISSION SHALL PRESCRIBE AND MAY FROM TIME TO TIME MODIFY THE RULES AND REGULATIONS UNDER WHICH SUCH AGREEMENTS MAY BE MADE (WHICH SHALL INCLUDE PROVISION FOR THE REPRESENTATION OF SHIPPERS AND INTERESTED STATE REGULATORY COMMISSIONS OR OTHER AUTHORITIES IN HEARINGS THEREON), AND THE approval of the Commission shall be granted only upon such terms and conditions as the Commission may prescribe as necessary to insure compliance with the standards above set forth in this paragraph. NO SUCH AGREEMENT FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF ANY ASSOCIATION OR ORGANIZATION COMPOSED OF TWO OR MORE CARRIERS, OR PRESCRIBING RULES, REGULATIONS, OR PROCEDURES FOR ITS CONSIDERATION OF ANY OF THE SUBJECTS HEREINBEFORE SPECIFIED, SHALL BE APPROVED BY THE COMMISSION UNLESS SUCH AGREEMENT SHALL FIRST HAVE BEEN SUBMITTED TO AND APPROVED BY THE CONGRESS BY JOINT RESOLUTION.

"(3) Each conference, bureau, committee, or other organization established or continued pursuant to any agreement approved by the Commission under the provisions of this section shall maintain such accounts, records, files, and memoranda and shall submit TO THE COMMISSION such reports as may be prescribed by the Commission, and all such accounts, records, files, and memoranda shall be subject to inspection by the Commission or its duly authorized representatives. NO BANKER, BANK, OR OTHER FINANCIAL INSTITUTION SHALL BE A MEMBER OF ANY SUCH CONFERENCE, BUREAU, COMMITTEE, OR OTHER ORGANIZATION, OR PARTICIPATE DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY IN ITS CONSIDERATION OF ANY OF THE SUBJECTS SPECIFIED IN PARAGRAPH (2) OF THIS SECTION.

"(4) The Commission shall not approve under this section any agreement between or among carriers of different classes unless it finds that such agreement is limited to [matters relating to] freight classifications or to [transportation under] joint rates or [over] through routes; and for purposes of this paragraph carriers by railroad, express companies, and sleeping-car companies are carriers of one class; pipe-line companies are carriers of one class; carriers by motor vehicle are carriers of one class; carriers by water are carriers of one class; and freight forwarders are of another class.

"(5) The Commission shall not approve under this section any agreement which it finds is an agreement for a pooling, division, consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, acquisition, or other transaction, to which section 5 of this act is applicable.

"(6) The Commission shall not approve under this section any agreement which establishes a procedure for the determination of any matter through joint consideration unless it finds or by condition requires that under the agreement there is or shall be accorded to each party the free and unrestrained right to act contrary to and independently of the initial determination or report, or any subsequent determination or report, arrived at through such procedure, and unless it finds or by condition requires that all carriers of the same class (as defined in paragraph (4) of this section) within the territorial and organizational scope of such agreement shall be eligible to become and remain parties to the agreement upon application and payment of charges applicable to other parties of the same class. Nothing in this section and no approval of any agreement by the Commission under this section shall be so construed as in any manner to remove from the purview of the antitrust laws any restraint upon the right of independent action by means of boycott, duress, ECONOMIC PRESSURE, or intimidation.

"(7) The Commission is authorized, upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, to investigate and determine whether any agreement previously approved by it under this section, or terms and conditions upon which such approval was granted, is not or are not in conformity with the standards set forth in paragraph (2), or whether any such terms and conditions are not necessary for purposes of conformity with such standards, and, after such investigation, the Commission shall by order terminate or modify its approval of such agreement if it finds such action necessary to insure conformity with such standards, and shall modify the terms and conditions upon which such approval was granted and may impose additional terms and conditions to the extent it finds necessary to insure conformity with such standards or to the extent to which it finds such terms and conditions not necessary to insure such conformity. Any person, including the Attorney General of the United States, may make complaint to the Commission of any action taken under or pursuant to an agreement theretofore approved by the Commission, and the Commission, upon such complaint or upon its own initiative, shall after hearing determine whether any such action is in conformity with such agreement and with the terms of the approval thereof by the Commission and is consistent with the standards above set forth and whether its approval of the agreement should be modified or terminated or additional terms or conditions be prescribed with respect to the particular action complained of. The effective date of any order terminating or modifying approval, or modifying terms and conditions, or prescribing terms or conditions, shall be postponed for such period as the Commission determines to be reasonably necessary to avoid undue hardship.

"(8) No order shall be entered under this section except after interested parties (including in all cases the Attorney General of the United States) have been afforded reasonable opportunity for hearing.

"(9) No agreement approved by the Commission under this section, and no conference or joint or concerted action pursuant to and in conformity with such agreement as the same may be conditioned by the Commission, shall be deemed to be a contract, combination, conspiracy, or monopoly in restraint of trade or commerce within the meaning of the antitrust laws: [Provided, however, That this paragraph shall not apply to agreements, or parts thereof, dealing with matters over which the Commission has no jurisdiction] Provided, That the approval by the Commission of any agreement concerning, or providing rules or regulations pertaining to or procedures for the consideration, initiation, or establishment of, time schedules, the interchange of facilities, the settlement of claims, the promotion of safety, or the promotion of adequacy, economy, or efficiency of operation or service shall not be deemed to be approval of any subsequent modification or amendment thereof or of any supplemental or other agreement made pursuant to any provision contained in the original approved agreement: And provided further, That the approval by the Commission of any agreement providing procedures for the consideration, initiation, or establishment of time schedules, the interchange of facilities, the settlement of claims, the promotion of safety, or the promotion of adequacy, economy, or efficiency of operation or service shall not be deemed to be approval of any joint or concerted action taken pursuant to any provision of such agreements.

"(10) Any action of the Commission under this section in approving an agreement, or in denying an application for such approval, or in terminating or modifying its approval of an agreement, or in prescribing the terms and conditions upon which its approval is to be granted, or in modifying such terms and conditions, shall be construed as having effect solely with reference to the applicability of the provisions of paragraph (9)."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arizona a question?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Following the comment of the Senator from Alabama with respect to the operation of the organization, and the machinery to which he referred, it is not my understanding that the Department of Justice, or that the Government in any way intends to take away from the Interstate Commerce Commission its right to regulate rates. The lawsuits now pending do not involve any diminution of the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate rates in cases which reach the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I understand one of the objections to the present process is that the machinery to which the Senator from Alabama referred is a method outside the Commission to determine what sort of proceedings will ever arise before the Commission, and it is that machinery, which is ex cathedra, in a sense, outside the jurisdiction of rate making before the Interstate Commerce Commission, by which the Interstate Commerce Commission is approached by a process which channels into it or out of it proceedings which determine what rates shall be and what they shall pass upon. Am I correct about that?

Mr. McFARLAND. I think the Senator has correctly stated the position of the Department of Justice.

Mr. BARKLEY. So, the absence of this legislation will in no way take away from the Interstate Commerce Commission its right to determine rates, their reasonableness, their fairness, and certain practices which are delineated, either by the permission or by disapproval, in the Transportation Act itself. So that what is attempted in the litigation upon which the Supreme Court is supposed to pass is to determine whether, in part, at least, in the preliminary steps leading up to a case before the Interstate Commerce Commission there has been a conspiracy on the part of those engaged in the action which is a violation of the antitrust law.

Mr. McFARLAND. I thank the Senator. Certainly Congress should want the benefit of the interpretation of the Supreme Court as to what those rights are, and what the railroads can lawfully do under the antitrust laws.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, what has been expressed as a legitimate area of collaboration. Is not that correct?

Mr. McFARLAND. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. Speaking about the Interstate Commerce Commission fixing rates, does not the evidence show very clearly that of all the rates fixed, not more than 1 percent are every really acted upon by the Interstate Commerce Commission? Is not that true?

Mr. McFARLAND. That is true.

Mr. HILL. In other words, it is a physical impossibility for the Commission to pass on all detailed rates. They are filed there, and if nothing is done in 30 days, they automatically become effective.

Mr. McFARLAND. What does a farmer in Alabama, for example, know, or what can he know about a rate that is filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. HILL. That is all the more reason why he should be protected, and the railroads should be required to live up to the antitrust laws. Is not that true?

Mr. McFARLAND. That is correct.

Moreover, Mr. President, in all sincerity I ask, what harm can come from waiting for the Supreme Court decision? Are the people likely to be harmed by awaiting the action of the Court? With the law-making, the law-enforcing, and the law-evaluating agencies of the Government all concentrated upon them and their activities in this field, the carriers are hardly going to take further harmful action to the prejudice of the public, and hence of themselves, pending the decision of the Court and possible later action by Congress. Are the railroads being prejudiced by such delay? Nothing has happened or is going to happen that will adversely affect the railroads pending the Supreme Court decision. When the immunization certificate expired last fall, the Department of Justice wrote Mr. John Steelman, Director of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion, a formal letter assuring him that the Department did not plan any additional actions pending the settlement of the issues in the Georgia and Lincoln cases. That letter was distributed by the American Association of Railroads to its members, and it has been generally recognized as an announcement in good faith that nothing would be done by the Government pending judicial decision. In short, insofar as Federal action is concerned, the railroads are operating just as if the immunization certificate 44 were in full force and effect. There will be no change in the status quo until there are decisions by the Court. The States might take additional action against the carriers, but it is scarcely to be supposed that they will do so under the present circumstances.

There can be little doubt as to the effect this bill would have upon pending litigation, and less as to why there is such present pressure in some quarters for its adoption. It was charged by the Government witnesses before our Committee that the apparent purpose of pressing for early enactment of this bill is to attempt to deprive the courts of jurisdiction in the two pending antitrust suits; that was the exact testimony of Mr. Wendell Berge, Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. President, it has been suggested on the floor, during the debate, that the two decisions would not be affected by the pending bill. The Department of Justice, which is charged with responsibility of prosecution in the Lincoln case, thinks the decision in that case would be affected by the passage of the bill. Governor Arnall testified the bill would affect the Georgia case, and he placed in the record, a letter from the attorney general of the State of Georgia to that effect. Whose opinion is to be accepted—the opinions of the defendants in those cases, or the opinions of people charged with responsibility for the prosecutions on behalf of the public?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator was a member of the committee. He heard a great part of the evidence. He is a very able lawyer, a former distinguished judge. Does he have any doubt in his mind that the passage of the pending bill would affect the two cases in court?

Mr. McFARLAND. There is no doubt in my mind, I may say to the distinguished Senator from Alabama. But I say that, regardless of what we may think, individually, we should take the word of the lawyers who are prosecuting the cases. We should not try the cases here on the floor of the Senate and say that in our opinion the prosecution will not be affected, when the Department of Justice says that both cases will be affected, when the former Governor of Georgia says they will be affected, and when the attorney general of that State, charged with responsibility for prosecution of the Georgia case, says the pending legislation would do away with that case. Are we to substitute our opinion on the floor of the Senate for the opinions of persons who have carefully studied the cases? Let us face the pending bill on its true merits. Let us not go far afield and try to push the cases aside and say that they would not be affected, when the people charged with responsibility say they would be affected.

Surely it is not the desire of Congress to try lawsuits. We are not equipped properly to try cases, nor do we have the time. But more important than that is the fact that it is an encroachment upon the field of duty of the judiciary as outlined in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator recalls, no doubt, a letter that was put in the record, at page 1348 of the hearings on H. R. 2536, before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce. It was a letter written on November 26, 1935, by Judge R. V. Fletcher, who has been identified as the lawyer for the Association of American Railroads, to Mr. Stacy B. Lloyd. He was talking about the very thing that is under discussion today—the machinery, the set-up that was brought into being about 1935 by the Association of American Railroads. Among other things, Judge Fletcher had this to say:

> In the fifth place, in my opinion, the railroads should be exempted entirely from the operation of the antitrust laws and existing statutes should be amended so as to eliminate standards of competition and the so-called existing channels of trade and commerce. As I see it, no regulated industry—

I ask Senators to listen to this—> no regulated industry should be subjected to the sanctions of antimonopoly statutes. Neither does it seem to me that railroads should be forced to compete—> in an era when their rates and, to a large extent, their service are under the control of regulating bodies.

"Should not be forced to compete," Judge Fletcher says—

Mr. B. O. Young would strongly dissent on the matter of their services being under the control of regulating bodies. When the time comes for me to speak, I think I shall have something to say about that, too. We know there is a broad field, a very great field in which there is no regulation, as the Senator from Arizona knows. Then, Judge Fletcher goes on to conclude the paragraph by saying:

> In my opinion the importance and value of competition in transportation have been tremendously overestimated in the public mind.

So Judge Fletcher said very frankly in the letter that what he was seeking to do was to remove the railroads from the operation of the antitrust laws. He does not believe there should be any competition among the railroads.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, in further answer to the question by the Senator from Alabama as to the effect that this bill would have upon the two cases, I wish to state, that there is no question in my mind that, should the legislation be enacted, the railroads will promptly file motions for dismissal in both the State of Georgia and the Lincoln, Nebraska, cases, alleging that this bill legalized most if not all of the practices that are attacked in these actions at law. A more effective disposition by Congress of legal actions pending in court could scarcely be devised, short of a direct dismissal by fiat. Granted that this is the purpose of present pressure—or even one of the purposes—should the Senate accede and in effect dispose of the issues pending in the courts?

I do not and cannot approve of the Congress taking any such action. I do not and cannot approve of the Congress legislating to deprive a sovereign State of its legal and judicial remedies. I do not believe that the Constitution contemplated any such action by the Federal Government, particularly where the judicial process is invoked to test rights or obligations created by earlier acts of Congress, as is the present case. I most emphatically do not approve of a policy which is sought to be established here, under pressure, of the Congress settling legal actions by legislation. That was tried in the insurance case and in the tidelands case, and I believed it was wrong. I believe it is wrong in this case.

To avoid an imputation either of ingenuousness or sophistry, I say frankly that in my opinion there can be no question about the inherent rights, the Constitutional rights, of Congress to overrule the principle established by judicial decision when that decision is expository of law other than the meaning or effect of the Constitution.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. While the Senator is speaking of the Constitution and the rights of the States let me suggest that, as he so well knows, the framers of the Constitution thought so much of the rights of the States that they provided that a State in a matter of this kind would not have to go before a district judge or a circuit court, or before any lower court whatever, that the State could go directly into the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. McFARLAND. I thank the Senator.

Apart from the constitutional field, there can be no question that Congress has the power to change the result of a court decision if the popular will, reflected in the Congress, decrees such a change. But that is a vastly different thing than is here contemplated.

We are faced here with a powerful pressure movement to get Congress, by legislative action, to preempt the courts and anticipate a court decision. Ostensibly, this pressure emanates from the railroads or from kindred interests. The pressure is indicative of a fear of the judicial result; but how myopic is such a view! Why, it is entirely possible that after the Court decisions in these cases, the railroads themselves will not need and will not want any legislation. But regardless of what the outcome of these cases may be, the Supreme Court will definitely give its interpretation of the law, and Congress will then be in a position to pass whatever legislation is needed, if any.

Many years have elapsed without this legislation, during which our transportation has continued. If the railroads have done nothing wrong, they have nothing to fear. But even if our laws need to be changed, is it to be supposed that Congress will enact laws less in the public interest if the Supreme Court has heretofore placed its construction upon present law? Why, then, should Congress take action which will hinder or in any way jeopardize existing lawsuits? Why should Congress assume a superior, exclusive wisdom? The answer, clearly, is that we should not impinge upon the judicial branch. Our position is certain and secure; our place in the tripartite scheme is so great as hardly to invite effort to expand it; our role is to preserve our own function untrammeled and to exercise it wisely in coordination with the other branches.

I do not want to be misunderstood. I am not unmindful of the fact that the railroads in the United States have performed a superb service for the people, particularly during the last war. No single thing has caused our Nation to progress and to go forward more than have our great transportation systems. I do not for one moment want Congress to fail to take any needed action in their behalf.

But the Nation is entitled to the tempered, conjoined services of all its branches of government. In this instance, the dual opportunity exists for combining the wisdom of the courts with that of the Congress, and by this favorable action again to demonstrate the dynamic values of our democratic institutions—a concern as precious to the railroads themselves as to the American people.

I am entirely willing to sit down and carefully consider this question when the Supreme Court has passed upon the two cases and pointed out what the rights of the interested parties are under existing laws.

But, Mr. President, if ever there was a time when Congress should move cautiously; should carefully preserve and demonstrate anew the firm, vital, and enduring principles of our Constitution and the form of government by it created; should unequivocally act to convince the Nation and the world that it, as the peoples' representative, adheres to that Constitution and that form of government—it is now. I therefore urge the Senate to reject this bill.

ISSUANCE OF GERMAN MARK NOTES IN GERMANY BY ALLIED OCCUPATION FORCES

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, on November 18, 1946, Gen. Lucius Clay appeared before the Senate committee to investigate the national defense program, and testified. During the course of the testimony some questions were raised as to the issuance of allied military marks in large denominations in the occupied territory. On January 17 at the time a resolution was under debate in the Senate I mentioned on the floor and read into the RECORD, page 412 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, a part of the testimony which had been given before the War Investigating Committee at that time. For the information of the Senate, I wish to ask unanimous consent at this time to have placed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks a letter dated November 29 addressed to Mr. George Meader, chief counsel of the committee, and signed by George F. Schulgen, brigadier general, United States Army, Acting Chief, Civil Affairs Division; a copy of a letter addressed to my secretary by a representative of the War Department; a copy of my letter of May 2, addressed to the Secretary of War asking for additional information; a copy of the letter of acknowledgment of May 6 from the War Department; a copy of a letter dated May 23 from Daniel Noce, major general, GSC, Chief, Civil Affairs Division; and also the letter I received from Robert P. Patterson, Secretary of War, dated May 29.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOVEMBER 29, 1946.

Mr. GEORGE MEADER,
Chief Counsel, Special Committee Investigating National Defense Program, United States Senate.

DEAR MR. MEADER: In accordance with your request to Lt. Gen. Lucius D. Clay, deputy military governor, Office of Military Governmilitary currency and Reichsbank currency lowing documents are furnished for your information:

(a) Finance and Property Control Report, Military Government, United States Zone, dated September 20, 1946, regarding Allied military currency and Reichsbank currency in the United States zone. No information on this matter is available for the Russian zone (enclosure No. 1).

(b) Passenger-car and truck capacity for Germany under the Level of Industry Plan. Copy of press release based upon official cable from Berlin enclosed (enclosure No. 2). Distribution of this capacity by zones obtained from cable from Ambassador Murphy, OMGUS, to State Department, April 23, 1946 (enclosure No. 3).

With respect to 1,000-mark notes, the report of the Military Governor for July 1946 shows RM 48,940,000 in 1,000-mark notes in the German banks in the United States zone in Berlin. A tabulation of the 1,000-mark notes printed by the United States showing the number turned over to the British and French is given on Incl. No. 4. The portion of these notes held by the United States is still in unopened boxes. None have been issued.

With respect to 1,000-mark Allied notes which may have been issued by any other ally, the Commanding General, European Theater, on November 22, 1944, issued instructions to all United States Army disbursing officers prohibiting the acceptance of any 1,000-mark allied notes without the approval of a general officer. This was later changed to permit acceptance only upon approval by the office of the Theater Fiscal Director. These instructions appear to have been strictly enforced; and I am informed that less than ten 1,000-mark allied notes have ever been received from Army disbursing officers.

Amendments to the policy directive in JCS No. 1067 are now being assembled and pertinent papers will be forwarded to you as soon as possible.

Sincerely yours,
GEORGE F. SCHULGEN,
Brigadier General, United States Army, Acting Chief, Civil Affairs Division.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WAR DEPARTMENT SPECIAL STAFF,
Washington, D. C., April 30, 1947.

Mr. GEORGE WILSON,
Secretary to Hon. William F. Knowland, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WILSON: Confirming our conversation of this date, the United States occupation authorities in the United States zone of Germany have placed in circulation, over and above marks already in circulation, approximately 200,000,000 allied military marks or reichsmarks as of February 1947. No break-down is available on the portion of each type so placed in circulation as both are interchangeable. Marks in United States zone German banks were reported as of September 1946 at approximately 226,000,000 allied military marks and 5,450,000,000 reichsmarks. There is no known means of determining or estimating which of the marks now in circulation in the United States zone are of other than United States zone origin.

Sincerely yours,
DWIGHT T. HAMERSLEY,
Major, GSC.

MAY 2, 1947.

Hon. ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: On November 18, 1946, Gen. Lucius Clay appeared before the Senate Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program and in a portion of his testimony referred to the amount of military marks that had been issued by the United States Government. During part of the testimony, I asked General Clay how many notes of 500, 1,000, or 10,000 marks are there in the American Zone. General Clay could not give me specific information on this question, but assured me that the information would be made available.

To date this information has not been received and I am desirous of obtaining the answer to my question.

For your information, a part of the testimony appears on Page 436 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 17, 1947.

Sincerely yours,
WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senator.

MAY 6, 1947.

Hon. WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: This is in acknowledgement of your letter of May 3, addressed to the Secretary of War, regarding the present distribution of German mark notes of various denominations within the American Zone of Germany.

Your request is being brought to the attention of those authorities within the War Department primarily concerned, and you will be further advised at the earliest possible time.

Sincerely yours,
DWIGHT T. HAMERSLEY,
Major, GSC.

MAY 23, 1947.

Hon. WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: I am in receipt of a communication from General Clay, in which he advises me that he has received a letter from you inclosing a copy of a letter you addressed to the Secretary of War relative to the number of large denomination mark notes in the United States zone of Germany. General Clay referred to a request made of him for this information when he appeared before the Senate committee last fall. At that time, General Clay asked the Civil Affairs Division to obtain the necessary information since he did not have it in mind and transmit it to the committee.

In compliance with General Clay's request a letter dated November 29, 1946, containing the desired information, was sent to Mr. George Meader, chief counsel for the committee. Apparently the contents of this letter were never brought to your attention.

With reference to your letter of May 3 to the Secretary of War on the same subject, I am advised that a reply from the Secretary is being dispatched to you containing the information requested.

I trust that the forthcoming reply from the Secretary of War in conjunction with my letter will clarify the matter to your satisfaction.

Sincerely yours,
DANIEL NOCE,
Major General, GSC, Chief, Civil Affairs Division.

MAY 29, 1947.

Hon. WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: I have your letter of May 3, 1947, in which you request information as to how many notes of 500-, 1,000-, and 10,000-mark denomination there are in the American zone of Germany.

From information available in the War Department, as provided by the United States Military Government officials in Germany, there are no 500-mark notes or 10,000-mark notes in the United States zone banks in Germany. However, the total number of 1,000 mark allied military notes held by banks in the United States zone aggregated 10,345 in December 1945, 35,940 in June 1946, 46,022 in March 1947. In addition, the Land Bremen had approximately 2,900 of 1,000-mark allied military notes. It may be of interest to you to know that on December 31, 1946, the banks in the United Kingdom zone had 151,000 of these notes in the city of Berlin. It was estimated that the banks in the Soviet zone exclusive of savings banks held in excess of 1,600,000 of these notes on September 30, 1946. There is no indication available as to the quantity of notes in the hands of individual Germans in the zone.

In this connection, your attention is invited to the information provided Mr. George Meader by the War Department by letter dated November 29, 1946, in response to questions by Mr. Meader regarding General Clay's testimony before the Senate Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I merely wish to point out that the testimony showed that so far as the United States Army was concerned it did not issue in the occupied area any German mark notes of a larger denomination than 100 marks. Larger notes had been printed up to a denomination of a thousand marks each. While these had been printed, none were issued by the American Army. I understand that certain of these marks were turned over to the British Army and the information furnished to the committee indicated that no such large denomination marks had been issued by the British Army. I have no information as yet as to whether any were turned over to the French and issued by them. So that leaves only one country that could possibly have issued the large number of 1,000 denomination marks which are now in German banks and, of course, they had to come, by process of elimination, from the Russian zone.

I think it is important that the matter be pursued either by the Military Affairs Committee or by some other committee of the United States Senate, because as these marks were ultimately converted into United States money orders and sent back to the United States, to that extent they were a charge upon the American taxpayer.

No reliable information is yet available as to the amount of money issued by the Russians that finally got into the hands of the American financial authorities and were converted into dollars. But my suspicion is, based on the information which I have put into the RECORD today, that it will amount to a considerable sum of money, and I believe that there is one way that this situation could be checked. No conversions could be made into dollars by American soldiers overseas except through the Army fiscal offices and through the Army post office by the purchase of money orders, and I believe, unless the records have been destroyed, and I have no reason to believe that they have been destroyed, that between the Post Office Department and the military authorities there must be a complete list of the amounts of conversions that were made by men in the United States Army into dollars and sent back to this country. If we get that information—and we will have the information as to the payroll of the American Army in the occupied territory—I think we can obtain a reasonably good idea as to the amount of this paper money which we have been converting into dollars.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS—ARTICLE AND EDITORIAL FROM PM

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have two items from today's issue of PM printed in the body of the Record, because I wish to be associated with the contents thereof.

The first is an article appearing on page 3, entitled "Members of War Labor Board Warn Taft-Hartley Bill Will Bring Chaos"; the second is an editorial appearing on page 2 of the same issue, entitled "Road Signs for a Taft-Hartley Veto."

There being no objection, the article and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From New York PM of June 10, 1947.]

MEMBERS OF WAR LABOR BOARD WARN TAFT-HARTLEY BILL WILL BRING CHAOS

A highly significant fact about the Taft-Hartley bill is that Congress, in passing the measure, did not have the benefit of counsel from any of the former public members of the War Labor Board.

The public members of the WLB held the balance of power, during the war, between the spokesmen of unions and industry. They were the handful of men who, with respect for the desires of each group, hammered out the decisive policies of labor-management relations under which the "Arsenal of Democracy" outproduced the Axis and the world. No comparable group of objective, unprejudiced citizens has had equal experience with the realities of industrial relations in a time of crisis.

It would seem only natural for Congress, in shaping new labor legislation, to seek the advice of these experienced citizens. But Congress did not seek their advice.

Two former WLB public members, belatedly invited to testify before the Senate Labor Committee, were given only two or three days' notice and directed to furnish numerous copies of elaborate written statements in advance—an impractical assignment for such busy men.

Sponsors of the labor bill may have preferred to avoid giving a hearing to the WLB public members. PM thinks that their viewpoints should be available to the people, and statements on the Taft-Hartley bill by five of the WLB's most prominent former public members are printed below.

Frank P. Graham, president, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C.:

"The conference bill should not, in my opinion, be accepted for the following reasons:

"1. It unfairly confronts the President of the United States of America with the necessity of accepting the bad provisions in order to have the good provisions in the bill. Senators MORSE, IVES, and others were wise in seeking to separate the bill into its independent parts for separate and fair appraisal. It would, therefore, be wiser now to reject the omnibus bill and wait a while longer for a sound bill devoted only to the development of fair, responsible, and productive industrial relations.

"2. This bill will, at a critical time, tend to weaken the foundations of free collective bargaining and will impair the growing values of the impartial umpire and of voluntary and binding arbitration.

GREATER BURDEN PLACED ON COURTS

"3. This bill will tend to remove the settlement of many industrial disputes from management and labor and transfer them to lawyers, the Federal board and the courts. Provisions in the bill will require much clarification, numberless rulings by the board, heavy litigation in the courts and long delays in settlements, with consequent confusion, loss of morale and loss of production.

"4. This bill will tend to weaken the disciplinary power of unions and cause as many headaches to management as to wise and responsible labor leadership. Such leadership is increasingly on the rise in America in spite of the irresponsible abuses of power by a few labor dictators. These comparatively few irresponsible leaders can be brought under responsible control without including those provisions in the bill which unnecessarily do damage to sound industrial relations.

"5. Some provisions in this bill will impair the equality of bargaining power, will unnecessarily do damage to the growing values of (a) the free and increasingly responsible labor movement, (b) free and more socially responsible business enterprise, and (c) labor-management cooperation in the American way for maximum production.

"The world now needs the most that America can produce against the hazards of international disintegration, another World War, and the ruin of our civilization. Against the most monstrous threats to human freedom the world has ever known American management and labor cooperated in an unprecedented industrial production which enabled the brave youth of America and the Allied nations to win the final victories over the Fascist axis powers.

"In the present world, threatened now with hunger, misery, and cruel tyrannies, human freedom again needs the cooperation of management, labor and agriculture for this maximum production for the relief of hunger and misery, for the prevention of war, and for the organization of the nations toward human freedom, social justice, and enduring peace in the world."

Edwin E. Witte, professor, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.:

"The labor control bill passed by the Congress is mild only in comparison with the original House bill. It is more restrictive than the Case bill which was vetoed by the President last year. It goes far beyond restoring conditions as they were prior to the enactment of the Wagner act. It places many restrictions upon unions to which they were not subject even in wartime. It is the most drastic measure of the kind ever passed by the National Legislature of any democratic country. No corresponding restrictions are imposed upon or are now applicable to corporations or employers' associations. Its net effect is greatly to increase the extent of Government intervention in labor relations and the powers of administrative agencies of the Federal Government."

GREATER POLITICAL ACTIVITY BY UNIONS FORESEEN

"How this bill will work out will depend very largely upon the reactions it produces within the ranks of labor and management. That it will produce much resentment among organized workers seems certain. But this resentment may find expression in greater activity in politics rather than in an increased number of strikes. There is real danger, however, that the downward trend in strike losses, which has been pronounced since February 1946, may be reversed. This legislation may throw into turmoil industries in which union-management relations have long been satisfactory. It invites both labor and management to resort to legal jujitsu to settle their differences, and this bill leaves management fully as exposed in this respect as is labor.

"Believing as I do that satisfactory labor relations can be developed only between the parties and through the democratic processes of collectives bargaining. I regard the proposed extension of governmental authority in labor relations to be a bad mistake."

Nathan P. Feinsinger, professor, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.:

"The Taft-Hartley bill, supported by a number of Senators and Congressmen whose records belie any antiunion bias, must be appraised as an attempt to protect the public, management and the individual worker against certain 'abuses' of organized labor.

"My criticism of the bill is that it is visionary, impractical, and escapist, tested by 'the realities of industrial life.'

"First, the bill is visionary in that it attempts, by legislative fiat, to regulate the complicated human and economic variables inherent in the delicate relationship between the individual worker and group, between the representatives of workers and the managers of capital, and between our American system of industrial self-government and society as a whole. Such an attempt would be difficult to rationalize in a democratic country at any time. In a political era characterized by protests against 'regimentation,' it passed understanding."

SANCTIONS OUTMODED OR SELF-DEFEATING

"Second, the bill is impractical in that it relies on sanctions either long outmoded in efforts to achieve sound industrial relations—the labor injunction and damages—or self-defeating. Thus, for example, an erring union would be educated to its responsibilities as collective bargaining representative by the disestablishment of collective bargaining at the plant.

"Third, the bill is escapist, in that it concentrates on symptoms of industrial neurosis in isolated cases, ignoring completely certain basic human and economic maladjustments in our industrial democracy with which enlightened leaders of management, as well as of unions, have only recently begun to grapple. The bill, by providing easy though unintended avenues of attack on all unions, good and bad, would divert the energies of union leaders from these problems to the elemental struggle, as they see it, for survival and security. Labor, management, and the public of the courtroom are no substitute for the rigors of the bargaining table.

"Enactment of the bill into law before completion of the 'study and report on basic problems affecting labor relations and productivity,' provided by title IV of the bill, is putting the cart before the horse. It is not too late to revise the procedure if we are to have progress rather than just motion, in seeking to solve the basic industrial-relations problems of our time."

WAYNE L. MORSE, United States Senator, Oregon, Washington, D. C.: "I voted against the Taft-Ives-Hartley bill because in my judgment it is administratively unworkable. It weakens the Norris-LaGuardia Act, and it places in the hands of many anti-labor employers the opportunity to weaken unions by keeping them involved in litigation befor the courts.

"Many of the amendments adopted by the conference committee are cleverly designed to enable employers through final court action to secure injunctions and also to dissipate the treasuries of unions through court action.

"I am afraid, in order to avoid the unjust features of the Taft-Ives-Hartley bill, many unions will decide to boycott the National Labor Relations Board by resorting in the first instance in every labor dispute to direct economic action.

"I predict that whenever labor considers itself strong enough to defeat an employer by striking a labor union will do so rather than subject itself to the unjust provisions of the Taft-Ives-Hartley bill."

Lloyd K. Garrison, attorney:

"The Taft-Hartley bill looks to the past and not to the future. We have learned by experience that the best labor relations are the product of mature collective bargaining and that Government intervention in the bargaining process is the surest way to retard its development. But the Taft-Hartley bill adopts, in the case of major disputes, the discredited Smith-Connolly techniques of compulsory waiting periods and secret ballot votes cast at Government expense under Government auspices, with boards of inquiry and injunctions thrown in to boot. As experience has shown, nothing could be more calculated to hamstring collective bargaining or to get the Government deeper into the business of fixing wages and other terms of employment—the prelude to fixing prices and profits.

"Granted that some strikes can become so serious that the Government must enter the picture in one way or another, wisdom dictates that the Government be left free in each instance to adapt its techniques of settlement to the needs of the particular case. But the Taft-Hartley bill ties the hands of government by laying down a single rigid pattern to be followed in each emergency. This seems to me the height of rashness.

TURNS CLOCK BACK TO NINETEENTH CENTURY

"The bill interferes with the freedom of employers and unions to work out their own arrangements by prohibiting certain types of agreements no matter how much they may be desired by the workers and the management. The bill strikes at some abuses which some unions have engaged in, but it goes beyond this legitimate objective by subjecting to injunctions and damages particular kinds of strikes which have been lawful at least since the Norris-LaGuardia Act (passed in the Hoover Administration), and some other kinds of strikes which have been lawful since the latter part of the nineteenth century. The bill goes beyond labor relations altogether in prohibiting working people from making political contributions through unions, even when they specifically authorize their money to be used that way.

"The bill further turns back the clock of history by its treatment of the Wagner Act. It is not content to add to the act from start to finish, introducing many subtle changes which will weaken some of its main foundations. The bill chops up the National Labor Relations Board into virtually two agencies and makes other burdensome administrative changes, all of them contrary to the principles of the Federal Administrative Procedure Act which Congress passed last year by unanimous action."

BAD FAR OUTWEIGHS THE GOOD

"Collective bargaining still is young in many important industries It needs guidance in its formative stages. This guidance can come effectively only from the leaders of industry and labor acting together. The aim of statesmanship should be to bring those leaders together in an organized group for the successful development of free collective bargaining and of voluntary methods of settlement, and giving them necessary support in the way of staff and other governmental aid. The Taft-Hartley bill makes a gesture in that direction by providing for the establishment of a labor-management advisory committee, but its role is made so secondary and the bill will engender so much strife and bitterness that progress by agreement scarcely can be hoped for."

COAL STRIKE ENCOURAGED

"I believe that the bad in this bill so far outweighs the good that the bill should be rejected and the whole subject reconsidered in a calmer and less hurried atmosphere.

"Some say that the bill must be enacted if only to deal with the coal crisis. These people, I think, are grossly mistaken. If the procedure of the bill is applied to a coal strike this summer and if the miners go along with its injunctions, the effect will simply be to postpone the strike to the fall when the waiting period will run out; and the fall is a better time to strike from the union's point of view. Moreover, the union will have obtained under the bill a Presidential board of inquiry, plus a secret ballot vote under Government auspices on the question of whether or not to accept the employers' last offer. The miners can be expected to vote overwhelmingly the way the union wants them to, as they have always done in the past, and thus, at the moment the waiting period comes to an end and the strike is on in earnest, the union will be fortified by a great showing of rank-and-file sentiment in the governmentally sponsored voting. One could scarcely devise a less effective way of discouraging a coal strike or a more expensive way of ultimately reaching a settlement."

ROAD SIGNS FOR A TAFT-HARTLEY VETO

It is significant that, in all the discussion of the Taft-Hartley labor bill, its defenders have seemed strangely reluctant to analyze its terms and how they would work, and place the defense upon that basis.

The fundamental weakness of the bill is its philosophy—the presumption of its sponsors that, because strikes occurred in the aftermath of a great war, unions must be curbed, restricted, and weakened. Ever since last year, of course, the number of strikes has been falling, and strikes are near an all-time low. But the specific provisions are the expression of the philosophy.

Take a look, for example, at a little-noticed paragraph slipped into the bill by the House-Senate joint conference committee. This paragraph—section 14 (b)—provides that State laws on union security shall supersede Federal law.

We have been told, ad nauseum, that the Taft-Hartley measure does not damage union security; that it merely limits the check-off of dues and outlaws only the closed shop, leaving union-shop and maintenance of membership clauses untrammeled. In truth, however, section 14 (b) turns the whole field of union security over to the mercies of State legislatures, which notoriously are more easily captured by corporation interests than Congress.

A basic premise of the Wagner Act was a declaration that labor relations are a matter of national concern. In State after State attacks on union security have been beaten by Federal court rulings that restrictive local statutes in conflict with national law were void. Yet, now the Taft-Hartley bill repeals these court decisions, validates the State laws, and repeals the sound philosophy of the Wagner Act—that the labor relations of an industrial country cannot be trusted to the States alone.

Take a look at some other little noticed provisions of the bill. Section 308 gives employers a right to sue unions for damages in jurisdictional strikes and secondary boycotts. Yet in another section of the bill such actions are defined as unfair labor practices.

which the National Labor Relations Board must forbid. Nowhere in the bill is a union given power to sue an employer for "unfair labor practices." When the employer is the offender, the union's only remedy is to have the practice forbidden by the NLRB; it cannot also sue the employer for damages.

Or look at the technical changes in procedure, rules of evidence, and rules of proof imposed by the NLRB. These changes were scarcely debated, even on the Senate floor, and their exact meaning would have to be determined in years of litigation. But the apparent effect would be to single out the NLRB, among all Government administrative agencies, and force the Board to follow legalistic rules previously followed only in the formal courts. An NLRB hearing might become not an informal but equitable search for truth by experts, but a cockpit for lawyers. If the rules saddled on the Board by the Taft-Hartley bill are sound for an administrative agency, why weren't they adopted by Congress in the 1946 Administrative Procedure Act?

The Taft-Hartley bill is shot through with such cunningly selected legislative fauna and flora. Yet we are told that it is merely designed to correct "abuses."

What it is actually designed to do has been tacitly admitted by its cosponsors, Representative Fred A. Hartley, Jr. and Senator Robert A. Taft. Mr. Hartley's objective, he gleefully indicated to reporters, was to get the toughest bill that conceivably might go through the Senate. Mr. Taft's objective was revealed in a formal statement last week end, when the Senator complained that President Truman by vetoing the Case bill last year had "resisted the effort to curb the power of the labor union leaders." Not just to cure "abuses," but to "curb the power" of unions in bargaining generally is the function of the Taft-Hartley bill.

No sound observer argues that labor unions could not function under the Taft-Hartley measure. The free democratic trade-union movement is now too powerful to be destroyed in America. But the bill, if it became law, would disrupt unions at least temporarily, give aid and comfort to the minority of bitter-end union-fighting employers, create deep tensions and bitterness in a field of human relations of central importance to our society.

Former public members of the War Labor Board—men who had unparalleled practical experience in the difficult area of wartime industrial relations—disapprove the Taft-Hartley bill. Five of them, in statements given to PM today, term the bill, in effect, unfair, unworkable, exceedingly unwise. Each suggests it is bad legislation, the product of muddled thinking and momentarily inflamed emotions.

Because the Taft-Hartley bill passed Congress by large pluralities, President Truman faces a double obligation in handling it. It is not sufficient for him simply to veto the bill, he must try to frame a message so persuasive that votes will be switched in the Senate and the veto sustained.

The Chief Executive was given the constitutional power of veto for the express purposes of checking bills arising from misinformation, blunder, and passion. A courageous and forceful veto message may prove the factor to help restore sanity in Congress—sufficient balance and discretion, at least, so that a minimum of 32 Senators will uphold the White House and make the veto stick.

WILLARD SHELTON.

NOMINATIONS OF JUNIOR OFFICERS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, earlier in the day I asked unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of nominations in the Regular Army. I had hoped that later in the day I could obtain consideration of the nominations. Since making the first request, which was objected to at that time, I have talked with a number of Senators. It has been suggested that a list containing the names of as large a number as 9,000 officers who are presently in the Army of the United States with temporary commissions, and to whom the War Department is now offering Regular Army commissions, should probably lie over for 1 day.

Therefore I do not wish to report these nominations at this time for the Executive Calendar. There is no necessity of going into executive session for that purpose. However, at the suggestion of certain Senators who have thought they might like to look over the list, I ask that I be allowed to present the list now, and that it lie on the table overnight. Some time tomorrow I shall again present a request that the nominations be confirmed. At this time I wish to give notice that I shall make the request tomorrow. If the nominations are allowed to lie on the table overnight, it will not be necessary to have them printed in the Executive Calendar, but the list will be available to any Senator who wishes to examine it between now and tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the report is not now being made, but as intended to be made, is furnished for the information of Senators.

Mr. GURNEY. The list is being sent to the desk now for the information of any Senator who would like to examine it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the list will lie on the table.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. WHERRY obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. REED. May I inquire of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] if they can give me any idea as to how much more time will be desired by the opponents of the bill which is pending before the Senate? I think we should conclude with 2 hours more on this side.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know how much time will be consumed, because I do not know how many Senators intend to address the Senate on the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I cannot advise the Senator from Kansas as to just how much time will be consumed by the opponents of the bill. I have not canvassed the entire situation. As a matter of fact, I do not know that I ever heard a question of that nature asked of any two Senators at any time since I have been a Member of the Senate. Certainly I have no control over the time which any Seantor may consume.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kansas fully understands that; but the Senator from Kentucky is the minority leader and the Senator from Georgia has taken the lead in opposition to the bill. When I talked with the Senator from Georgia some time ago about an arrangement for the consideration of the bill, we discussed the question, and he thought that we should conclude consideration of the bill in 2 days.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know that I ever used the expression "2 days." Frankly, at one stage of the proceedings I did not think it would require more than 2 days. At one time I felt rather lonesome in my opposition to the bill. I could find only two or three Senators who even proposed to vote against it, much less speak against it. To my great gratification, however, the implications of the bill seem to have dawned on other Senators, and some of them have prepared speeches. For example, I did not know how the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] felt about the measure until yesterday. This afternoon he made a very learned and erudite speech against it, and I thoroughly welcome it.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Arizona spoke to me on the subject some time ago.

The reason for my inquiry is that I contemplate making a request of the majority leader to begin night sessions tomorrow night. I do not want to do that if it can be avoided.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely wish to observe that I do not see anything in the legislative situation which is so urgent as to require night sessions on this bill or on any other bill at this time. I do not know what the legislative program of the majority is. I understand that following this bill there is to be a so-called succession bill. I do not know how long that will take. I do not know what is to follow that bill. It may be an appropriation bill.

It does not seem to me that the situation surrounding this particular measure, or the legislative situation in general, requires night sessions. However, I have no objection to night sessions when they are necessary.

Mr. REED. I hope the minority leader will not forget that I am asking for information, and not advice.

Mr. BARKLEY. Frequently we volunteer advice, whether it is asked for or not.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am a member of the minority party, and have no control whatever over the time of meeting of the Senate. If the Senator from Kansas decides to request night sessions, so far as the Senator from Georgia is concerned, he will be present.

I wish to join the Senator from Kentucky in stating that in my opinion there is nothing whatever so emergent about either the legislative calendar or anything which has transpired in connection with the pending legislation, as to require night sessions. If the Senator from Kansas wishes to keep us here, the Senator from Georgia will be present, and he will endeavor to ascertain that there is a quorum of the Senate present if there are to be night sessions.

I do not believe that there has been any unusual loss of time in connection with the bill. The opponents have spoken at somewhat greater lengths than have the proponents, but I believe that as many supporters of the bill have spoken, as opponents. I shall strongly protest the passage of the bill. I do not know whether I shall speak on it again or not.

I am reminded of the old story about the colored man in my section of the country who went catfishing. He caught a big catfish. He brought the catfish home. He had it in the kitchen and trying to clean it. The catfish was squirming and jumping so that he could hardly hold it in his hands. He said, "Catfish, what on earth are you jumping and squirming for? I ain't getting ready to do nothing to you but gut you." [Laughter.]

The bill of the Senator from Kansas guts a lawsuit filed by the State of Georgia, and I intend to squirm and protest against it as vigorously as I may. I hope I shall be joined by many of my colleagues on this side of the aisle; and I welcome assistance from the other side of the aisle.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. REED. My only purpose is to dispose of the bill as early as we reasonably can. During recent days I have discussed the question with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. We have a crowded calendar of business to be disposed of before the Congress can fairly end this session on July 31, which I hope we shall be able to do.

Mr. RUSSELL. I share that hope.

Mr. REED. My only purpose is to dispose of the bill. If it is not any more consequential than the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] thinks it is—although I believe the Senator from Georgia does not share the view of the Senator from Kentucky——

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not understand that the Senator from Kentucky thought this was an inconsequential bill. I thought he referred to the so-called succession bill as being a bill of no great moment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I stated earlier in the afternoon that if the program of the Senate did not bring out more useful legislation than the measure now under consideration and the one which I understand is to follow it, we might as well adjourn as quickly as possible. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. REED. I merely wished to place the situation before the Senate. I am not the one to determine whether we shall have night sessions or not. The progress we make on the bill tomorrow, with the remaining debate to be considered, will certainly have a great influence upon my request of the Majority Leader with respect to night sessions beginning tomorrow night. I hope we shall be able to avoid night sessions.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yeild?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. If it is decided to have night sessions, the Senator from Georgia will be present and will remain as long as any other Member of the Senate, until the session is concluded.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I listened with deep regret to the comment and the observation of the minority leader relative to legislation which he said, so far as he was concerned, was of such a character that it should not prevent an adjournment even on July 1. He was ready to say that he thought that possibly it was not important. I think that there are other opinions not only with respect to the Bulwinkle bill, but I am satisfied that there are some very earnest opinions regarding the succession bill. I am reminded that on June 19, 1945, the President of the United States felt that a succession bill was so urgent that he sent a special message to the Congress of the United States requesting its immediate enactment. That was not done. Then in January 1946, in his message on the state of the Union, he suggested as "must" matter legislation making provision for succession to the Presidency in the event of the death, incapacity, or disqualification of the President or Vice President, as recommended by him on June 19, 1945. He asked that it have the immediate consideration of the Congress. That was not done at that time. Now we come to his message of February 5, 1947, to the present session of the Congress, in which he admonishes us once again as to the importance of the proposed legislation and calls attention to the fact that it has not been passed. It is one of his proposals which has been urgently impressed upon the Congress, and in a special message we are again asked by the President of the United States to pass a succession measure.

The reason I make this particular observation is that this is not the first time that this proposed legislation has apparently been dealt with somewhat lightly. As one who is interested in carrying out the wishes, desires, and suggestions of the President of the United States, I feel that it is worthy legislation and I propose after the particular pending legislation shall have been concluded to request the Senate to consider the measure on the ground that it is necessary, needed legislation, approved by the majority and asked for by the President of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should be much happier if I had more evidence of the approval of the Senator of the recommendations made by the President of the United States with respect to legislation. I appreciate that what the Senator says regarding the President's recommendations as to the particular bill is true. I have always reserved the right to disagree with any President in office, and I have now and then exercised that right. I did not agree with the President when he sent his original message. I did not then think that any legislation on the subject was necessary. I did not agree with the reasons assigned for recommending the legislation. I have not since changed my mind about it. I do not mean to intimate that I dealt with the subject lightly, but I feel that it is not useful legislation at this time, and I so stated. The President understands how I feel about it, because I have talked to him with reference to it.

A while ago we got into a verbal altercation with reference to whether Congress ought to adjourn in accordance with the "streamlined" Reorganization Act. I am one of those who think it should, unless there is some emergency which will keep us here, which I do not now visualize. If the remainder of the program which will be brought forward is as useless as that which we now have before us we need not worry about an early adjournment of the Senate. I hope that the program of legislation which the Senator from Nebraska is attempting to present will not be limited to the succession bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to suggest that I was so impressed with the contention of the Senator from Nebraska that he is favorable to the program of the President of the United States that I would almost expect the Senator from Kentucky to stick with the Senator from Nebraska if the Senator from Nebraska would stick with him.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not make an open proposition.

Mr. WHERRY. I heard the colloquy earlier in the afternoon and then the statement made by the distinguished minority leader who, I understand, loves me as much as he does any other man with whom he so often disagrees. He has a perfect right to his opinions about what legislation is important and what is unimportant. I am sure he does not mean in any way to treat lightly this very important legislation which has been suggested by the President three times since 1945. For once I think my position should give the minority leader and some of my distinguished friends on the opposite side much encouragement, and certainly it should give them new hope to know that I am in full accord with the suggestion made by the President of the United States with reference to this important legislation. I think it should not be put off any longer, but should be passed by both Houses of Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me again to speak—I do not want to delay the recess which I am sure the Senator is anxious to bring about——

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Inasmuch as we are talking about two bills, which I have characterized, probably in a too frank expression of my opinion of legislation, the one we now have before us, which I feel is useless, and the one which is to follow it, which I feel is also useless, let me say that if the Senator is so anxious to follow the President in regard to the bill which I have just described as useless, he might enlarge his field of cooperation by agreeing with the President in regard to the bill we now have before us which will be voted upon at an early date, or as it may be acted upon by the President when it reaches him, if it does. If the Senator will go along on that bill—

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator will go along with me on the succession bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. I might forgive the Senator for his mistake in regard to the following legislation.

RECESS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if there is nothing more to come before the Senate at this time, I move that the Senate recess until tomorrow at noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 11, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 10, 1947

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of life and hope, before whom the generations of men come and go, unto Thee we look for the fulfillment of worthy aspirations which make life worth while. So order our daily conduct that it shall be in harmony with Thy will. Enfold within Thine arms our families and separated loved ones, and bless them with happiness, peace, and good cheer.

As we labor to shape the life and destiny of our Nation, give unto us pure hearts and open minds, that hard problems may be answered and solved to the amelioration of perplexing questions. O speak unto us in word and deed and with authority, and direct us so that we shall have no regrets of a mistaken life and an undiscovered Saviour. With these treasures of understanding, we pray Thee to lead us on through these busy, burdened days, and in Thy name, O Master, make us better men and women. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. J. Res. 115. Joint resolution authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to continue and establish offices in the territory of the Republic of the Philippines.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GILLIE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a sermon by William J. Lichau, of Rogers City, Mich., in memory of our late colleague, Fred Bradley.

GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 235, Rept. No. 552), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3756) making appropriations for Government corporations and independent executive agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes, all points of order against the bill or any provisions contained therein are hereby waived.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CHURCH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Chicago Tribune on its one hundredth anniversary.

Mr. SMATHERS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Jacksonville Times-Union.

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include an editorial and in the other a newspaper article.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 75]

Andresen, August H.	Gary	Mansfield, Tex.
Barden	Gifford	Marcantonio
Bell	Gore	Martin, Iowa
Bishop	Gorski	Meade, Ky.
Bland	Granger	Meade, Md.
Boykin	Grant, Ind.	Morrison

Fuller	McGarvey	West
Gallagher	McMillan, S. C.	Wood
Gamble	Maloney

The SPEAKER. On this roll call, 333 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds may be permitted to sit during general debate in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

SUBCOMMITTEES OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow all subcommittees of the Committee on the Judiciary may be permitted to sit during general debate in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes today after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WADSWORTH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include copy of a speech broadcast by Dr. Frank N. Buchman from Caux, Switzerland, together with introductory remarks by Rear Adm. Richard E. Byrd.

Mr. LECOMPTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a set of resolutions adopted by the Lions Club of Albion, Iowa.

Mr. MICHENER asked and was given permission to include certain telegrams in remarks he will make later in the day.

Mr. CROW asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address of the Honorable D. Lane Powers in presenting the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR., Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the president of the board of trustees of Pennsylvania Military College, and also the address of the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR., Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. NORBLAD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. SADLAK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a proclamation by the Governor of Connecticut on Flag Day.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. CELLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on two subjects.

Mr. ROONEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances, in each to include newspaper clippings.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper editorial.

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a recent address made by Pope Pius XII.

Mr. FULTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two newspaper articles concerning the gift of $32,000,000 to the city of Pittsburgh by the Andrew W. Mellen Trust.

CHANGE IN CONFEREES

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] may be substituted for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] as a conferee on the bill, H. R. 3203.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will notify the Senate of the change.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to include in connection with my remarks on House Concurrent Resolution 49 a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 2 OF 1947

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 49; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 3 hours, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 49, with Mr. DONDERO in the chair.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress does not favor the Reorganization Plan No. 2 of May 1, 1947, transmitted to Congress by the President on the 1st day of May 1947.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, under the reorganization bill, the President has submitted Plan No. 2, and House Concurrent Resolution 49 disapproves of that plan. Under the reorganization bill, if any one provision of the plan submitted meets with disapproval, and the House is opposed to that plan, the whole plan goes by the board. It is unfortunate that is so, but that is the way that the law was written in 1945.

The matter up today is the one where we are asked to transfer to the Labor Department the administration of the Unemployment Service.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read, because it expresses the views of the committee, from the committee hearings on page 18 a statement submitted in 1939 by President Roosevelt.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

I find it necessary and desirable to group in a Federal Security Agency those agencies of the Government the major purposes of which are to promote social and economic security, educational opportunity, and the health of the citizens of the Nation. * * *

The Social Security Board is placed under the Federal Security Agency, and at the same time the United States Employment Service is transferred from the Department of Labor and consolidated with the unemployment-compensation functions of the Social Security Board in order that their similar and related functions of social and economic security may be placed under a single head and their internal operations simplified and integrated.

The unemployment-compensation functions of the Social Security Board and the employment service of the Department of Labor are concerned with the same problem, that of the employment, or the unemployment, of the individual worker.

Therefore they deal necessarily with the same individual. These particular services to the particular individual also are bound up with the public-assistance activities of the Social Security Board. Not only will these similar functions be more efficiently and economically administered at the Federal level by such grouping and consolidation but this transfer and merger also will be to the advantage of the administration of State social-security programs and result in considerable saving of money in the administrative costs of the governments of the 48 States as well as those of the United States. In addition to this saving of money there will be a considerable saving of time and energy not only on the part of administrative officials concerned with this program in both Federal and State Governments but also on the part of employers and workers, permitting through the simplification of procedures a reduction in the number of reports required and the elimination of unnecessary duplication in contacts with workers and with employers.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, the situation to which the President then referred and the reasons for his action are the same today as they were then. As we all know, the Unemployment Service is concerned with the finding of jobs. The payment of compensation for unemployment to those who are unemployed in the States is administered by practically the same officials.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

The advantage of having this in the Federal Security Agency is that if a man goes to the unemployment-compensation agency and asks for unemployment compensation, the individual in charge of that agency, if he also has charge of the unemployment service, instead of paying the compensation can say, "Here, John, you go over to Jones and get yourself a job. There is one there." These two services are administered by States under practically one head.

The only advantage that was given by any witness or rather the only argument that was advanced by any witness was that by Mr. Webb, and his argument was that if we would transfer this service permanently to the Department of Labor, then the Department of Labor would furnish—and get this, please—would furnish advice and leadership. He conceded that the Federal Government does not pay the compensation for the unemployed. He conceded that the Federal administration does not find any jobs. When a man wants a job, he goes to his State organization. When he wants compensation, he goes to his State organization, and the States have unified those services. So, I trust you will see the advantage of following the recommendation that the President made in 1939 and continue the administration of the two agencies as now carried on by all of the States but one.

Let me repeat, all of the States except one have unified and combined their services under the agency which has to do with the payment of unemployment compensation, which is under Federal Security Administration. That means economy and efficiency. That one State is, I think, Louisiana, and in the hearings 33 of the States asked for the approval of this resolution which the committee has submitted.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the views I am about to express represent my individual views which I submit for the consideration of my colleagues.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has made reference to the recommendation in 1939 of our late President, Franklin D. Roosevelt. The gentleman's reference is correct, but that recommendation was made at a time when unemployment existed to a considerable extent and when there were many demands or applications for the payment of unemployment compensation and under conditions where from a long-range point of view a proper evaluation of the unemployment service on the Federal level could not be given a fair appraisal. In the light of what has happened in the years of experience since that time, it seems to me that the recommendation of President Truman is a correct recommendation and should be adopted by the Congress.

The action of the majority of the committee on the Unemployment Service—and that is the only matter in dispute in Reorganization Plan No. 2—is based on evidence from the representatives of State agencies. Their opposition is based on the fear that if the United States Employment Service is in the Labor Department and the Unemployment Compensation Service is in the Federal Security Agency that it might result in those States that have both under the same State agency being later compelled to have both activities on a State level separated and put into two different State agencies.

This reorganization plan has absolutely nothing to do with the action on a State level. It is confined wholly to a Federal level. Within the limits of a State, a State is supreme in determining and deciding for itself how its employment service and unemployment compensation service shall operate. No matter where the United States Employment Service is located on the Federal level in any Federal agency, under no conditions can a Federal agency, directly or indirectly, influence or order a State to join both of these agencies together on a State level or to separate these activities on a State level. While the argument of the State level will be advanced, as it has been, in our consideration of plan No. 2 recommended by President Truman, to me it does not seem to have any relevancy. There are decided differences in the practical operation of those two activities on the Federal and on the State level.

We must have in mind that the main functions of the Federal Security Agency relate to social welfare, the welfare of our people from a broad social angle. The Federal Security Agency administers Federal help, educational, and social activities. It conducts research in those fields. It administers Federal grants, such as aid to the blind, noncontributory old-age pensions, in copartnership with the State; control in a broad sense of payments of unemployment compensation and contributory pensions, as well as better effectiveness of both, and the more efficient operation of both, as well as other activities which come under the head of social welfare.

The United States Employment Service has no immediate relationship to any of these activities. Mark you, I say "immediate relationship." It has a relationship to unemployment compensation payments, but one that should precede and not succeed the payment of such compensation. The more we put unemployed to work, the less unemployment compensation a State will have to pay. While they have that relationship to each other, they have separate and distinct primary purposes that differ one from the other. I am talking now on the Federal level. One activity should not predominate over the other, and on the State level a proper relationship of one to the other can be maintained with better effectiveness where both are in the same agency than if both are in the same agency on the Federal level.

The United States Employment Service is responsible for serving workers in trying to get them jobs. To try to get jobs in cooperation with the several States is their primary and immediate duty. Widespread unemployment during the economic collapse preceding 1933 led to the Wagner-Peyser Act. It was established by this act as a bureau in the Department of Labor.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But it never amounted to anything until you had the payments for unemployment compensation later on, did it?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; I cannot agree with the gentleman on that. Unemployment compensation was a part of the Social Security Act, which came later. I am unable to agree with the gentleman in what he said, because the Wagner-Peyser Act, you will remember, was passed when there were widespread abuses in the field of private employment agencies. Those of us who were here then know of the events that led up to the Wagner-Peyser Act; the tremendous abuses that were engaged in throughout the country by private employment agencies, and the necessity for something being done from a governmental angle, and that was accentuated by the depression we were in from 1929 to 1933. So those two things the abuses of the private employment agencies and the economic condition of our country, were the two main factors in congressional action which resulted in the passage of the Wagner-Peyser Act. That is the only time that the Congress has ever passed on the question as to where the United States Employment Service should go. The Congress itself said it should be placed in the Department of Labor.

We must bear in mind that the only time the Congress passed on the question was in 1933 when it passed the Wagner-Peyser Act and Congress itself placed the United States Employment Service in the Department of Labor. Furthermore, it is only 2 years ago—now, mark this, Mr. Chairman—only 2 years ago the Congress itself in the passage of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 provided specifically the Federal agency administering the United States Employment Service shall maintain that service as an operating entity.

In 1933 we said the United States Employment Service shall go into the Department of Labor as a bureau.

In 1944 when we were dealing with unemployed veterans, those who came back from the wars and were seeking employment, we provided an agency for them, but we said they shall maintain that service as an operating entity. We therefore provided that Federal efforts to obtain work for veterans could not be linked up with the Unemployment Compensation Service or any other bureau or division. If we do that in relation to the veterans why should we place the United States Employment Service relating to other workers on the Federal level outside of the Labor Department? The basic proposition is to try to get a job for someone who is unemployed whether he be veteran or nonveteran. Why discriminate—and I use the word "discriminate" descriptively. If it is right to separate the agency to obtain jobs for veterans from any Unemployment Compensation Bureau why is it right to place the job placement agency for other workers in the same agency as the Unemployment Compensation Bureau?

Congress has taken one position with reference to getting jobs for unemployed veterans and it takes an opposite position if this resolution is adopted with reference to other workers. I repeat we cannot be right in both. Now, mark you, we are discussing the Federal level. The injection of the State level had no relevancy to the argument today because this reorganization will not affect the State.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do not veterans get jobs through the States?

Mr. McCORMACK. Let me ask the gentleman a question in answer.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But I asked the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, that is so, but the United States Employment Service——

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will say it is so.

Mr. McCORMACK. The United States Employment Service has a very valuable field in which to cooperate with the several States in the over-all labor picture, the research, letting one State know what the labor situation is in any other portion of the country so they can correlate their knowledge and records.

To follow the gentleman's argument would be to wipe out the United States Employment Service.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is right.

Mr. McCORMACK. At last the gentleman has disclosed his mind.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The United States Employment Service does not place an employee in a single job, does not pay a single wage check. The only thing it does is that it is supposed to know where there are jobs, and then it is up to the States to get the jobs for the unemployed.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is the gentleman's opinion. Oh, the gentleman cannot pass that off with a wave of his hand. That is the gentleman's opinion.

The Federal Government is paying 100 percent of all State employment activities in the States. I repeat, the Federal Government is paying 100 percent of every dollar spent by the employment service of any State.

This matter does not affect the State level at all. That is an important thing to keep in mind. The injection of the State level argument is for the purpose of influencing the minds of the Members of this body when we should be considering this question only on the Federal level.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; but first let me ask this question. I repeat, Why do we exempt from putting into the Federal Security Agency here in Washington the division we created only 2 years ago to get jobs for unemployed veterans, yet now we want to put into the Federal Security Agency, an agency concerned with social-welfare activities, the same activity in relation to nonveterans? The basic proposition in either case is that of trying to get some unemployed person a job.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. It might be appropriate to read a little excerpt from the Republican platform of 1944 in which the Republican Party stated the following:

> The Department of Labor has been emasculated by the New Deal. Labor bureaus, agencies, and committees are scattered far and wide, in Washington and throughout the country, and have no semblance of systematic or responsible organization. All governmental labor activities must be placed under the direct authority and responsibility of the Secretary of Labor.

It seems to me that this is an effort to redeem that platform pledge of the Republican Party of 1944. If the Republicans meant what they said in their platform I do not see how they can oppose this bill at the present time.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's contribution is very pertinent. That was one of the planks in the Republican platform. I do not express that from a political angle, but it is evident we are taking this out of the Department of Labor where it belongs.

The Department of Labor was created years ago in recognition of the dignity of labor. Now we have the labor bill that is now before the President that labor feels very much distressed over. I will not discuss that today. You are coming in here now by the rejection of this reorganization plan and you are taking out of the Department of Labor an activity that is directly concerned with labor and you are putting it into the Federal Security Agency, which is mainly and directly concerned with legislation of a social welfare nature.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we are coming and going at the same time. The only two times the Congress itself has passed on this question was in 1933 when the Congress said this bureau shall go to the Department of Labor and 2 years ago we specifically provided in connection with jobs for returning veterans who were seeking positions that that agency shall be a separate entity and by that we provided that they could not put that in the Federal Security Agency.

What is the difference if a man wore a uniform or not if he is out of work? The important thing is he wants a job. We have provided special consideration for veterans to try to give them preference, to which they are entitled, but the main, the basic proposition of a person out of a job is work and the important thing we are interested in is trying to get him a job. We provided 2 years ago that the agency for veterans shall not go into the Unemployment Compensation Commission and if this resolution is adopted today we are providing that the agency for all other workers shall become a part of the Federal Security Agency. This is on a Federal level where there is no conflict such as there might be on a State level.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the resolution reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I may say that the Committee on Expenditures held very interesting hearings on this question. We heard the Director of the Budget, Mr. Webb, who explained Reorganization Plan No. 2 as proposed by the President, and defended it. We also heard from the representatives of a very considerable number of the States. I remember very interesting testimony from the State administrator of the State of Virginia, also interesting testimony from the State administrator of the State of New York, also interesting testimony from a gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. Rector, who represented a large group of State administrators. It became perfectly apparent to the members of the Expenditures Committee that the sentiment among those who actually administer these laws in the States is very much opposed to having the Employment Service stationed permanently in the Department of Labor.

I do not pretend to be a master of all the details of this problem, but here are some of the things that made an impression upon me as I listened to the stories told by the representatives of the States.

As the gentleman from Michigan has stated, practically all of the States have established, each for itself, a unified administration of employment service and unemployment compensation. As a matter of fact, they have followed the advice, it may be said, of the late President Roosevelt, who, as ha been mentioned here this morning, stated 2 or 3 years ago that, in his judgment, it was impossible to divorce the problem of employment service and the problem of unemployment compensation, for the reason that you are dealing with the same man. First you have the job seeker, and if you cannot find him a job then that same man steps over to the next desk—I am speaking figuratively now—in a State organization as they are now set up and applies for compensation. The trouble with the present situation is, from the angle of the States, that two separate budgets have to be prepared in each of these State offices. One budget must be prepared for submission to the Federal Employment Service at Washington, and the other has to be prepared for submission to the Social Security Agency. In preparing those budgets the State administrators find it almost impossible to arrive at an accurate division and an accurate figure demonstrating conclusively just how much time, for example, was spent by the employee in working on the employment side and how much time he had spent working on the unemployment compensation side. They have to keep work sheets, or try to, or guess as to how many hours John Smith spent on the employment side in a given day and how many hours on that same day he spent on the unemployment compensation side.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. Not only do they have to prepare two budgets, but they have to undergo two audits, checking how much was charged to this side and how much was charged to the other side. Naturally each of the two Federal agencies wants to have as much charged to the other as possible and therefore the States are in constant confusion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true. The difficulty does not stop with the preparation of two separate budgets.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The difficulty does not stop with the preparation of two separate budgets, and that is hard enough, but as the gentleman from Minnesota says, each of those budgets, with all of the financial transactions involved in them, are audited.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. As a matter of fact, if this resolution is adopted and the United States Employment Service is put into Federal Security, they would have to have two separate budgets anyway.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But they would come from the same Federal source, and that is the trouble. Today they come from two separate Federal departments.

Mr. McCORMACK. But you have to have two separate budgets anyway in the State, because the expenses for the unemployment compensation come out of taxes, or a certain percentage of them, at least, for that purpose, and the other would have to be an appropriation by Congress, and you would have to have two separate budgets anyway and two separate appropriations. The gentleman recognizes the difference between the State and the Federal level does he not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I certainly do recognize the difference, but I think they are closely associated. Over-all management is under the general supervision of the Federal Government. At the State level the actual work is done. The man is interviewed. A job is found for him. If a job cannot be found for him, then that same man is taken care of under the compensation law.

The trouble is today that these two budgets have to be sent to two separate departments of the Federal Government. Each has its own idea about budgeting and auditing. As the gentleman from Minnesota has indicated, they do not agree. Then the authorities in the State are left puzzled as to how they are going to meet the requirements of the budget and the audit from two separate Federal departments.

If this resolution of ours is passed, automatically the United States Employment Service will return to the Social Security Agency, where it was at the time President Roosevelt wrote that letter. I did not agree with him about everything, some of you may remember, but I think he was right about that, and the State administrators today think he was right and asked us practically unanimously to restore the situation as it existed at the time that letter was written. It makes easier for them the administration of an exceedingly difficult set of laws. After all, the final responsibility for the success of this thing, this whole effort, rests in the States. True, the Federal Government finances the undertaking very largely and establishes general policies, but the man who is being tested is the man who sits at Albany or Richmond or at Springfield, Ill., or Boston, Mass., and meets the people, those seeking jobs and those entitled to compensation. He wants an opportunity to come to the one authority in Washington and get orders, if you please, rather than have to go to two.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the question is whether or not we want to return the United States Employment Service to the Department of Labor, where it was placed by an act of Congress in 1933, or whether we want the Employment Service to revert to the Federal Security Agency, where it was transferred in 1939 by an Executive order of President Roosevelt.

I do not think it makes any difference as far as the effectiveness of the organization is concerned whether the United States Employment Service is in the State Department, the Interior Department, the Labor Department or the Library of Congress. I think that is an unimportant matter. But I do think that we should have all of our independent agencies under a Cabinet head except those agencies that are regulatory bodies and quasi-judicial bodies.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman feel that in any event both of these agencies ought to be under one head, that is, the Employment Service and the Unemployment Compensation?

Mr. MANASCO. I think the States have now reached the state of maturity in the administration of unemployment compensation that the Congress should immediately pass an act turning all of the administration of that part of the program back to the States, and there would not be any words then about any dual budget.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Under the present plan the Federal Security Agency handles the compensation end of it and the Department of Labor handles the Employment Service.

Mr. MANASCO. That is right, but if you are going to have a Department of Labor, why divorce it of all the activities that go along with matters pertaining to labor?

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. I realize that, and I am not disputing as to which department it ought to be in. It seems to me the only point is that they both ought to be in the same agency.

Mr. MANASCO. As a matter of fact, they have to prepare separate budgets now. If it were under the Library of Congress they would still have to prepare separate budgets, under the law passed by Congress, and they would have to say, "We need so much money for the Unemployment Compensation Division of our Department and so much money for the Employment Service," which means that they would still have to submit two different budgets. The only intelligence it requires of a State officer is to have a secretary that would know which place to address the letter. It would have the same effect.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. The State administrators tell me that from the administrative standpoint it is almost impossible to try to administer a program such as this where you have two different agencies under two different departments.

Mr. MANASCO. The gentleman would also find that practically all of these State officers would like to get back on the Federal pay roll where they have a little protection on retirement and so forth. Many people have been putting pressure on Congress about this. I have a copy of a letter which I am going to insert in the RECORD here.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did I not understand you to say that in your opinion the unemployment compensation should be administered by State officials?

Mr. MANASCO. I certainly did.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then why not put their administration back in the Unemployment Bureau because the State certainly furnishes the jobs in the State?

Mr. MANASCO. We are doing that right now. We turned it back last year on a rider to an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why not combine the services so that there would be only one service?

Mr. MANASCO. I am trying to get the Federal Government out entirely from the unemployment-compensation program because the money is collected in the States on the pay rolls. You cannot take money that is collected in Michigan and put it into unemployment compensation in Alabama so I see no reason in the world why the Federal Government should continue in the State unemployment-compensation field. But there is a place in our country for a national employment service because if you have 500,000 people unemployed in the State of Michigan we might be able to absorb 7,000 or 8,000 of them in Alabama or 7,000 or 8,000 of them in Maryland or Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You could do that by writing a mimeographed letter and sending it to the 48 States any time you want.

Mr. MANASCO. Certainly, and it can be done by the Library of Congress or the Bureau of Labor Statistics or any other organization.

But, Mr. Chairman, getting back to the pressure that is brought with reference to this matter, most of these people are paid by Federal funds. I have a copy of a letter which I have already obtained permission to insert in the RECORD. This letter is from Mr. Stanley Rector, president of the State administrators of the employment-security agencies. He appeared before our committee and is a very intelligent gentleman. This is a report from him:

INTERSTATE CONFERENCE OF EMPLOYMENT SECURITY AGENCIES,
June 3, 1947.

To all State administrators.
From Stanley Rector, president.
Re President's Reorganization Plan No. 2.

On May 27 representatives of the conference appeared before the House Committee on Executive Departments and Expenditures in connection with the proposal in the Reorganization Plan No. 2 to permanently sever the administration of unemployment compensation and employment service in the Federal province—this through permanently locating USES in the Department of Labor.

In preparation for the appearance, the executive committee had analyzed the poll of State sentiment conducted by Howard Hausman, legislative chairman. In the light of this poll a statement was prepared, reflecting the prevailing viewpoint of State agencies and the unanimous position of your executive committee. This statement was filed with the committee for the record. A copy is attached hereto.

Those making appearances, in the order named, were: Stanley Rector, Wisconsin; Milton Loysen, New York; Fred Garrett, Idaho; Harry Crozier, Texas; Ben T. Huiet, Georgia; Jim Bryant, California; and Jim Graham, Connecticut. All spoke in opposition to the proposed severance; and most, in response to questioning as to where they considered the Federal administration of unemployment compensation and employment service should be unified, indicated a preference for the Federal Security Agency.

Judging by reactions of committee members, it can be fairly stated that our appearances strengthened the position taken by an overwhelming majority of State agencies—namely, that there should be unification (integration, consolidation, coordination—call it what you will) in the Federal province, and that this unification should be brought about in the Federal Security Agency.

It is reasonable to anticipate a committee report in line with our collective position. It was my understanding, before leaving Washington on Thursday, May 29, that the report would be forthcoming on the first day or two of this week, and that House action would be taken during the latter part of this week.

It is my estimate that the House will reject the Reorganization Plan No. 2, and it is my further estimate, based on sampling, that, unless some very effective work is done on the Senate side within the next 10 days, the Senate will not reject the plan. Since both branches of the Congress must reject a reorganization proposal, a failure on the part of the Senate to reject will mean that the Reorganization Plan No. 2 becomes law on July 1 of this year.

Before leaving Washington, I made arrangements with Senator TAFT, chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, to extend to the States a hearing on the matter. The hearing will probably be afforded us some time next week. Dates have as yet not been definitely established, and, in any event, it will be necessary for us to go in on very short notice. I tentatively plan to leave for Washington this week end to be on the ground.

While I have no doubt that the members of the Senate subcommittee set up to hear the matter will approach the issue openmindedly, my guess is that a majority of the subcommittee group is presently disposed to transfer the USES to the Department of Labor. How we may be able to affect this state of mind, assuming it exists, remains to be seen. An unfavorable Senate subcommittee report is very much in the picture. Our main reliance must be on individual State action. Every State administrator who has not as yet done so should, within the next week or 10 days, communicate his position, together with his reasoning, to each of his Senators. Obviously, there are cases in which certain administrators may well elect to spend their time and energy on other matters. Administrators who have already communicated with their Senators—and I have received copies of some very well written letters—should consider a follow-up.

I need not recite to you the considerations which prompted a great majority of the State administrators to express active opposition to the Presedential Reorganization Plan No. 2. However, in view of the prevailing mood of the Congress, you should certainly stress to your Senators the economy features of consolidation, both in the Federal and State provinces—one regional set-up, one budgeting procedure, no complexities of breaking down expenditures and accounting for them in a dual auditing procedure, etc. Personnel and fiscal regulations, while they have not been bothersome so far, as a consequence of dual authorship, can well become a most irksome problem, if permanent severance occurs.

Without extended comment, I give you this sentence from the Reorganization Plan No. 2 (given as a reason for the transfer): "Policies and operations of the employment service must be determined in relation to over-all labor standards, labor statistics, labor training, and labor law—on all of which the Labor Department is the center of specialized knowledge in the Government." Does this not mean the impression of uniform national labor standards, law, etc., on the administration of USES under the auspices of the Labor Department? You might recall in this connection our concern with such implications in the original Wagner-Peyser plan prepared by the Labor Department and submitted to the State agencies last September.

I think it will be most helpful in clarifying the issue to put primary emphasis on the necessity for the consolidation of the two functions in the Federal province. Where the consolidation should occur, is subordinate and, in fact, not really at issue in the reorganization plan. As you know, the USES will automatically revert back to, and be integrated with unemployment compensation in, the Federal Security Agency 6 months following the expiration of the First War Powers Act. A number of persons on Capitol Hill, with whom I have talked, while favoring consolidation, feel that it should be achieved in the Department of Labor. Well and good. For what seems to me very good reasons, I think that consolidation should occur in the Federal Security Agency. In view of the difference of opinion on this point, what we can properly ask for is a rejection of the present plan, which would permanently sever the two integrally related administrations, and leave the issue as to where consolidation should take place for consideration when the Congress takes up the general revamping of the Social Security Act. The matter of where needs to be fully considered, but such a measure of consideration cannot be given under the present circumstances.

Incidentally, for your information I have before me a letter addressed to the American Federation members of State employment security commissions, by Mr. Ralph Cruikshank, of the Washington A. F. of L. staff, stating that the American Federation of Labor also favors coordination of the two agencies. He feels that coordination should occur in the Department of Labor.

You can make up your mind now to accept this proposition. If USES goes to Labor under the present proposal, the Federal administration of our unemployment-compensation system will follow it there. I personally do not believe that our country's social-insurance system should be administered by a Federal department set up as a protagonist of any particular group interest.

Following is the membership of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

If you have a Senator on this committee, it is more important than ever that you communicate your views immediately:

ROBERT A. TAFT, Ohio.
GEORGE D. AIKEN, Vermont.
JOSEPH H. BALL, Minnesota.
H. ALEXANDER SMITH, New Jersey.
WAYNE MORSE, Oregon.
FORREST C. DONNELL, Missouri.
WILLIAM E. JENNER, Indiana.
IRVING M. IVES, New York.
ELBERT D. THOMAS, Utah.
JAMES E. MURRAY, Montana.
CLAUDE PEPPER Florida.
ALLEN J. ELLENDER, Louisiana.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. Is it not a fact that the author of the letter which the gentleman has just read comes from a State where the employment service is in the Department of Labor?

Mr. MANASCO. That is the information I have.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. The gentleman is not suggesting that Mr. Rector is on the Federal pay roll, is he?

Mr. MANASCO. No, I am not. But practically all of the money to pay his salary comes through these two appropriations.

Mr. JUDD. But it is raised in the State of Wisconsin and sent down here to Washington and then goes back in grants for the payment of unemployment compensation. It is Wisconsin money. Surely the gentleman does not contend that an American citizen of any State does not have a right to use whatever means are at his disposal to develop public opinion in favor of his views. If he were a Federal employee, then I would agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANASCO. Absolutely. But part of the appropriation that pays the salaries of his employees comes from the Employment Service; that is, the major part of it. I understand that USES transfers the money to the States. This same gentleman made the following statement on page 200 of the hearings after I asked him a question as to what the situation would be if we were to place this under the Library of Congress and if they would not still have to submit the same break-down for that budget: "We would still submit the same break-down."

Of course, I realize it is very difficult for Congress to reorganize our executive agencies. We must give the President authority to do that. As a matter of fact, I am not for all reorganization programs. To show you that this is not a partisan matter, I voted this morning to reject the plan on housing, because I think the housing program and the construction agencies should be under one head and the insuring and lending agencies should be under another head. But if we continue to reject all reorganization plans that come up here, I do not see how we can continue to cuss out the executive department for having a sprawling bureaucracy all over the face of the globe.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO] has again expired.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself one additional minute.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Will the gentleman not agree that if the President would not send up so many things in one reorganization plan, it would not be rejected? In each plan that we have rejected it was because of one item. Last year we had seven or eight items in one plan that were rejected because of only one. Unfortunately we can only accept the whole or reject the whole.

Mr. MANASCO. That is correct.

Mr. JUDD. Each plan carried what could be called, not a legislative, but an administrative rider. In order to defeat that rider, we have no choice but to disapprove the plan.

Mr. MANASCO. The Congress itself could reorganize the Government, but you could not afford to take up a whole day on one particular agency employing 30 or 40 men. You have to take several of them together. We could spend the rest of this Congress reorganizing the Federal departments and I do not believe you could get one of them reorganized, because somebody would object to every one that came up.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did not the gentleman himself last year vote against one of these plans because he had put in one particular thing?

Mr. MANASCO. I certainly did, and I did it again this morning.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If the gentleman would just use his influence down there to make it a good plan, it would be all right.

Mr. MANASCO. Well, I have very little influence.

In June 1933 the Congress enacted the law which is now generally referred to as the Wagner-Peyser Act. That law created the United States Employment Service as a bureau in the Department of Labor, with responsibility for the promotion and development of a national system of public employment offices. Under that act the responsibility of the USES was not terminated with the establishment of the national system of public employment offices. After extended hearings by the committees of both Houses and after exhaustive debates on the floor of the House and Senate, the Congress reposed in the United States Employment Service a continuing responsibility for the development of the tools and techniques which are the lifeblood of an effective, full-functioning system of public employment offices. The United States Employment Service, under this bill, was given the responsibility for maintaining a system of interstate clearance of labor, for gathering, analyzing, and disseminating labor market information reflecting Nation-wide job opportunities and employment trends. It is responsible for maintaining a Nation-wide farm placement service and of paramount importance the United States Employment Service was, under the Wagner-Peyser Act, given the responsibility for the maintenance of a placement service for veterans.

Mr. Chairman, it was not by mere accident that the United States Employment Service was created as a bureau in the Department of Labor. It was in that Department which the Congress, after careful consideration, determined that it quite properly belonged. It is not at all difficult to understand how this conclusion was reached. We need only to turn to the organic act creating the Department of Labor and we find that one of its basic responsibilities is to advance the wage earners' opportunities for profitable employment. This is also the fundamental purpose and objective of the United States Employment Service. The United States Employment Service is a bureau created for the express purpose of effectuating one of the basic purposes of the Department, of which it is now a part—the Department of Labor.

Mr. Chairman, I submit to the Members of this House that as of this date, there has not been enacted a single piece of legislation which has changed the basic purpose and responsibilities of the United States Employment Service, nor relieved the Department of Labor of its responsibility for promoting employment opportunities for the wage earner. But notwithstanding the inextricable relationship of the Employment Service program to the basic purposes of the Department of Labor, the United States Employment Service has been shifted from pillar to post. In 1939, it was transferred under the Reorganization Plan of the President to the Federal Security Administration; in 1942 by Executive order of the President to the War Manpower Commission; and in 1945 back to the Department of Labor. Now we have before us the majority report of the Committee on Expenditures of Executive Departments which proposes to uproot again this Bureau and transfer it to an independent public-welfare agency—the Federal Security Administration.

Mr. Chairman, I am deeply concerned by this proposal. This proposal by its very nature deemphasizes the Employment Service program since its purpose is to consolidate the employment-service activities with those of the unemployment-compensation program in the Federal Security Administration. The majority report itself gives recognition to the fact that in the national employment security program the overriding consideration is the finding of jobs for wage earners and not the payment of unemployment compensation. And yet in spite of that fact, it proposes to transfer the United States Employment Service to the Social Security Administration which is concerned primarily with the unemployment-compensation program, a program admittedly merely incidental to the basic objective of obtaining employment security for veterans.

It is not my purpose to belabor the welfare of the veterans in this picture. I am fully cognizant of the fact that the welfare of the veterans is injected all too often into many legislative issues without justification or merit. But I cannot overlook the fact that the Congress itself in 1944 expressed deep concern over the effect of the consolidation of the activities of the Employment Service with those of the unemployment compensation in the Social Security Board under the Reorganization Plan promulgated in 1939.

Mr. Chairman, the consolidation in 1939 is a proven failure. Notwithstanding protestations to the contrary, the Employment Service program was subordinated to unemployment-compensation activities. The Employment Service for veterans became a mere shell; it had no real program calculated to find profitable employment opportunities for veterans. It was wholly ineffectual.

It was for this reason that in 1944 the Congress enacted legislation to strengthen the Veterans' Employment Service. It was for this reason that title IV of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 was enacted. It was for this reason that the Congress in that act, after careful deliberation, provided that the agency administering the United States Employment Service shall maintain that Service as an operating entity. It was the veterans' organizations of America who, in unison, demanded a segregation of the employment service activities from the unemployment compensation program. Let us contrast the concept of a full-functioning Employment Service program as presently carried out by the United States Employment Service in the Department of Labor with the lack of any real program during the period of Federal Security Administration direction.

Today there is conducted by the USES a full-functioning Nation-wide, well-organized campaign for job development. Veterans' employment representatives throughout the country systematically and periodically communicate with employers for the purpose of promoting job opportunities for veterans. The job-counseling program, particularly for veterans, has been tremendously expanded. Placement methods and techniques have reached a high stage of development. The labor market information service, as the keystone of the Employment Service, has attained national recognition for supplying vital information to employers and employees alike. The United States Employment Service in the Department of Labor, through its occupational analysis work and industrial services, have contributed immeasurably to the employer by rendering assistance in connection with problems which involve the recruitment, selection, assignment, transfer, and promotion of workers with a view to promoting stability in employment and the most effective use of workers' skills and abilities. The State and local employment office, under the leadership of the United States Employment Service, has now become a key center in the local community and is now actively participating in local community programs and problems concerned with employment and increasing stabilization of employment. Many of these services were nonexistent and those that did exist did not function with any degree of effectiveness when the United States Employment Service was subordinated to the unemployment compensation activities in the Social Security Board.

Mr. Chairman, with the emphasis placed by the Department of Labor on a full functioning Employment Service, we have obtained results for the veterans. For example, during the calendar year 1946, 5,640,000 job applications were filed with the State and local offices by veterans. That number represents almost 60 percent of all job applications filed in the State and local employment offices throughout the Nation during that year. During the same year, 1,015,000 veterans were given job counseling interviews; that number represents more than 75 percent of all the job counseling interviews given in all of the State and local employment offices throughout the Nation; 4,508,000 job referrals were made for veterans and 2,033,000 job placements were effected for veterans. With the veterans of the Nation utilizing the Employment Service to that extent, they have a vital stake in its effective operation. They are entitled to some assurance that the Employment Service will be retained in the Department whose primary responsibility is to promote for them gainful employment; whose efforts will be directed at developing the tools and techniques and formulating programs to facilitate and to stabilize their employment.

Mr. Chairman, let us not too soon forget our special obligation to the veterans who left the service of their country with scars that cannot be healed and with impaired capacity to engage in gainful employment. Above all, let us not forget the disabled veterans. For them the Employment Service in the Department of Labor has developed selective placement techniques. During the calendar year 1946, 429,000 applications for employment were filled by disabled veterans with the State and local public employment offices. During this same period, 138,000 job placements were effected. This number represents 65 percent of all placements made of handicapped workers. In other words, 65 percent of all placements of handicapped workers were disabled veterans. During the same year 209,000 disabled veterans were given job counseling interviews.

In spite of this grave responsibility to our veterans, in spite of the previous action of the Congress to separate the Employment Service and the Unemployment Compensation programs manifested through the enactment of the provision in title IV of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act to which I previously referred, we have various administrators of the State unemployment compensation commissions urging its transfer to the Federal Security Administration because they are not disposed to prepare separate budgets for two separate programs. This position is, of course, absurd. In the first place even if the Employment Service were transferred to the Federal Security Agency, a separate budget estimate would be required for each of the respective grants. Secondly, Mr. Chairman, I submit that the overriding consideration here is not whether State Administrators must prepare a separate budget for the Employment Service grants. The important consideration here is whether we are to have an effective Employment Service geared to promote job opportunities for veterans. We must not return to the folly of 1939.

I urge the Members of this House to remember our obligations to the veterans and to reject the majority report.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I remember a speech that Charles Taft, who heads up a volunteer aid organization in the State Department, made some years ago in Washington to the General Federation of Women's Clubs. The first line of that speech, which was subsequently extended in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, was: "Nothing will ever be simple again."

I have fussed against that conclusion for a long time, but the more I see of these bewildering agencies and interests and obligations of the Federal agencies, the more I am inclined to take some stock in that statement that nothing will be quite simple again. So there is a real responsibility, if we can, to simplify, and I believe that the action which the committee proposes today is in the interest of simplification, by rejecting the proposal of the President of the United States.

I went through this lesson back in 1946 in connection with an amendment to an appropriation bill, under which the United States Employment Service was finally returned to the States. What a difficult job it was. I want to say to my good friend, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO], that when he speaks of pressure he will never quite know what pressure is like until he gets into a difficulty of that kind. There was pressure on all sides. I remember how intrigued I was with the fact that when we left the Appropriations Committee at 12 o'clock and action had been consummated, I went to my office, which was practically 12:10 Washington time. The telegrams had already arrived from Chicago and elsewhere, notwithstanding the fact it was only 11 o'clock in Chicago. But somehow or other they seemed to know, and promptly they loaded me up with protests about this thing. They did not want the United States Employment Service to go back to the States. Obviously, there was a reason. The employees would have to qualify under new standards, and, manifestly, the States would have something to say about it, and rightly so. But the most interesting pressure, for getting these agencies back into the hands of the States, were the telegrams and letters from 47 governors. If I remember correctly, there was one governor who did not join in, and that was the Governor of Utah. Every governor other than that, Democrat and Republican, was anxious to have this employment service come back where it belonged. I tried to approach it from the standpoint of theory. Unless you do you are going to be baffled by all of this stuff that is on the statute books. You must try to rationalize this.

The social conscience of the country has accepted the thesis that we must find a job for a jobless man. We accepted that way back in 1933 and that is the reason why in June of that year we passed the Wagner-Peyser Act which provided matching funds, matching with the States for the purpose of maintaining these offices. So there was the first part of the theory. There was a whole series of State and local employment offices to find a job for a man if he were jobless. There were certain requirements, of course. You could not make him take any kind of work, and they could require approval, or they did require approval, of what went into the State law. So the word "suitable" crept in; you must find suitable work. So over the years there has been enough interpretations to fill this room as to what constitutes suitable work. But now assuming that you cannot find him a job, then the social conscience dictated that we ought to pay him under a formula for a given period on the basis of his earnings over a given quarter so that he had a chance to look around for a job and still could maintain his family. So there you have the whole theory: First, to find a job for a jobless man; and, secondly, if the Federal Government and the State failed to find him a job then to compensate him with unemployment compensation for a limited period. Out of those two theses came this legislation. First, there was the Wagner Act that matched funds amounting to about $3,000,000 a year; and in 1935 we enacted the Social Security Act. It simply provided, of course, that there would be a tax upon the States and it would be remitted to the extent of 90 percent if they complied with the State law, and therein, of course, were the minimum requirements that were dictated by the Federal Government. So here you have two agencies operating, the United States Employment Service and the Bureau of Employment Security in the Federal Security Agency. It worked all right until finally they transferred the United States Employment Service to the Federal Government. You remember the fuss we had about that. The President wired all the governors to surrender USES, and inside of 11 days—think of it, what a testimony to the expedition with which those things go ahead—in 11 days these agencies had been transferred to the Federal Government and put in the War Manpower Commission. We did not quarrel about it and the governors did not quarrel about it for the very good reason that we had a war to win. But obviously they expected that USES would come back; and so from time to time in the Labor-Federal Security appropriation bill we constantly wrote a proviso that they must be returned to the States when the emergency was over.

But let me illustrate: When the emergency was over the Federal Government, true to form—here was a power that they had suddenly gotten by the sufferance of the States and the voluntary actions of the States—did not want to let go, notwithstanding the fact that 47 governors wanted that power to be returned. That is the reason we have this controversy on the floor today.

We did not accomplish all we wanted to because there was another deliberative body that emasculated some of our work, and we had a compromise and the transfer to the States became effective on the 15th of November 1946. You see that is a good 6 months ago. Everything worked out very well up to that time but you had this very paradoxical situation. Imagine this Chamber in which we are now sitting to be a large room in an office building in Detroit, Chicago, New York, or elsewhere, and just imagine a barricade right down the middle. Over on this side was the United States Employment Service office operated by the Federal Government to get jobs. Over on the other side was the State unemployment-compensation commission. Yet for both the explicit question was whether or not there was suitable work for a person. Over on this side of the barricade the bureau of employment security maintained its offices. So if a man could not find a job after dealing with the Federal Government and they certified him, he went across the aisle to a State agency. You know, some of our friends who were operating under Federal control were not too careful about certifications and sometimes for political and other reasons they would certify anybody. They threw an undue burden upon the States.

Is it any wonder that the States rebelled? Is it any wonder that their administrative officers rebelled? Everybody rebelled, including the governors. So we got that patched up, by taking the Federal Government out of the operating phase of USES.

At the operating level is where you find a job for a man, at State level. You do not find a job for him in Washington. How stupid was the argument that used to come out of the Labor Department and the Federal Security Agency about how necessary it was to maintain job placement at the Federal level. Where are the jobs? On Pennsylvania Avenue, on F Street, on Jackson Place? Why, the jobs are out in Beanville, Podunk, Cleveland, San Francisco. That is where the jobs are. Every reason and every logic dictated that the business of placing people in jobs should be done at the grass-roots level.

There is a little supervisory group now that the President wants to transfer to the Labor Department when the effective date of the War Powers Act is over, under which it would go back to Federal Security. The committee has looked at it and said, "No. We will put it back in the Federal Security Agency where it belongs." After all, you are dealing with just two facets of a security pattern, security in the field of jobs. That is security.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the President's language about reconciling it to the old labor technique and labor standards and all that sort of thing is rather interesting but I do not think there is any force in it and if the President would examine it very closely he would find there was no force in it. The jobs are at home and today, USES is doing its job at the grass roots level. So you take that as a part of a whole security pattern that involves not only giving the man a job but paying him when he is jobless.

The interesting thing is that existing law provides that when a man is jobless, the payments have to be made through the United States Employment Service offices. Just see how closely this thing is integrated. The States have already integrated both of these functions. But now comes a proposal to leave it in the Labor Department so the question of unemployment compensation will be administered by the Bureau of Employment Security and the question of job placement will be supervised by the Labor Department. As has been so well pointed out by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] two separate audits have to be made. There are two allocations of funds to be made. There are two budgets to be maintained. You fly right in the face of duplication if this is placed in the Labor Department.

Mr. Chairman, there is another thing about it. I do not mind confessing my own confidence in the Security Agency as distinguished from the Labor Department, and I will tell you why. It was too manifest when we went through this controversy and struggle last year that the Labor Department under the present Secretary of Labor, and I esteem him as a friend, was reaching out for more and more authority and went so far as to insist that there be a provision in the conference report that if in his judgment this business of placing jobs at State level was not carried out to suit him he could walk right into a State, create, establish, and maintain a completely separate job-placement service. Now, as you know, when a high administrative official will go that far, I begin to develop a little lack of confidence in his appreciation of where State jurisdiction begins and Federal jurisdiction ends. It is not a case of not having faith in his sincerity, but I cannot go along with that sort of thing. It looks like an effort to reach out and get more and more control. If you leave one function in the Federal Security Agency and one in the Labor Department, just give it a little time and there will be new techniques, new ideas, new approaches, new statistical findings that will be used as a foundation for new policy to get this thing in a fog, and finally back into Federal hands.

It will be the beginning of an effort to reach out and haul the United States Employment Service back into Federal control. They have not given up. Why, you should see some of the check-ups that have developed in the field as to the activities of these people in trying to bring about an ultimate restoration of this whole job-placement program to the Federal Government. They will not give up. Once the virus has bitten them, why somehow or other the infection is deep and enduring, and they never give up. So, if we are going to make sure that this is going to be administered at the grass roots level, then let us do the wise and sensible and the simple thing; put them in the Federal Security Agency and administer both of them from that place.

I want to say to my friend from New York that I was deeply intrigued with the testimony of the Commissioner of New York in the hearings when he said that this thing is so big and it is so important and it involves so much money, namely, hundreds of millions of dollars, and it involves the welfare of so many millions of people, that it deserves a much larger place than it is getting in the Federal Government.

Now, the sensible thing then would be to leave all of these functions in the Federal Security Agency and then have Congress, by policy legislation, insist that the dignity of the office that will administer this function will not be something subordinate to the Federal Security Agency, but something that is commensurate with the importance of the matter, the welfare of the number of people involved and the hundreds of millions of dollars involved. This could be a first step. First, to reject this reorganization plan and make sure that both of these functions go to Federal Security, and then have the appropriate committee of Congress carefully examine this whole business and give it the dignity and the station that it truly deserves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman was here in 1933 when the Wagner-Peyser Act was passed. The gentleman is very familiar with it, having served on the Committee on Appropriations throughout these years, and is tremendously interested in this problem. Could he tell the committee how it was that the Congress originally placed the jurisdiction of the Employment Service in the Department of Labor?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, for this very good reason, I think. We were just beginning our researches and our explorations in the whole field, and here was an established agency of government. So, it was only natural, I expect, that in the first instance we should start with the Department of Labor. Congress, and the President, and the Advisory Committee on Federal Security, and everybody, were feeling their way, and the best testimony about that is the fact that there were whole areas of the security pattern that were not covered because they did not have the actuarial data; they did not have the information to submit to Congress, so there was that final effort at that time. That is the answer, I think.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My recollection of the chronology may be inaccurate.

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; it is correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Wagner-Peyser Act was passed before we had any social security.

Mr. DIRKSEN. As a matter of fact, it antidated it by 2 years, but I thought the point of the question was why, specifically, the Labor Department as distinguished from any other agency of government.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, it occurred to me that the Congress determined when the act was initially passed that it should be placed under the supervision of the Department of Labor, and that certain conditions later on brought about the action of the late President Roosevelt, in the administration of it, to transfer certain functions under certain circumstances to the Federal Security Agency.

Then in the course of a war and several years the administration of this service now appears to be placed back in the Department of Labor. It seems that we have been going in circles. I just wondered why the Congress decided first it should be in the Department of Labor and now decides it should be in some other agency.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let us see whether the chronology of it will not clear it up. The Wagner-Peyser Act was approved in June of 1933. The Social Security Act was approved in June or July or thereabouts of 1935. The President of the United States by order transferred this to the Security Agency in 1939. It was then transferred to the War Manpower Commission in 1942, and there was a reason for taking it out of Security, because of the war. We had a manpower job that reached not only into the Army but into the whole economic structure of the country. So there were those shifts for reason. But since there was no Security Agency in 1933 the Labor Department, as distinguished, I think, from any other existing department, was probably the logical place to put it. However, since that time a whole structure of Security has grown up until it is a towering giant that goes into every corner of the country and touches virtually every family that works for a livelihood. So that is the whole story. I am in complete concurrence with the action reported by the committee here to reject the plan, because rejection of the plan and the return of this to the Security Agency is in the interest of simplicity, it is going to avoid some duplication, and then it is going to make the job easier of finally giving it that dignified station in the Federal structure that it well merits.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. The gentleman made the statement that Congress should take some affirmative action to insure that the Employment Service will not become subordinate in the Federal Works Agency. Does he really have such a fear, that if it goes into the Federal Works Agency it will be subordinate?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is not a case of feeling it is subordinate, it is a case of conviction, which is supported by the observations made by the Commissioner of New York, who I thought made a splendid statement to the committee, that it deserves a better station than it has at the present time.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. But the gentleman does feel that Congress should take some affirmative action in that connection?

Mr. DIRKSEN. To enhance its station?

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. To be sure that it will not become subordinate.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not think it will become subordinate to the point where we need to worry about it, but after all there is a dignity that befits a billion-dollar operation by the Federal Government.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, never in my life did I hear a better speech than the one just delivered by the gentleman from Illinois, Hon. EVERETT DIRKSEN, exactly on the other side of the question from the conclusion he reached.

I want you men to let me talk to you just as if I were in your office for a minute. You cannot justify in any way in the world your present advocacy of building up bureaucracy, in the light of your own formerly expressed convictions. You claimed you have been fighting bureaucracy for years. I glorified in your fight, and I am still engaged in that fight while you now take the other side. My good friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], the most plausible, the most eloquent speaker in this House, says that now the Federal security system is a towering giant that goes into every nook and corner of the land—that is the truth, that is the danger, yet he applauds a witness from New York whom he quotes as saying that it must be given a much larger place in our Government than it now holds.

I say "No." Not only do I say "No," but I say it will imperil the foundations of this Government if you do.

I call your attention to the fact that the estimates produced by the committee of our good friend from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] during the hearings, showed, before we began to cut down the contributions, that there would be an accumulation in this social security fund of $70,000,000,000 by 1970. Give any bureau or any bureaucrat that much money power and you shrink into comparative impotence the legislative power of this Government. It will absolutely swamp and swallow the executive, the judicial, and the legislative branches of this Government. Right now, according to the admission of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], it is a towering giant. How I did glory in the fight that he made last year to recapture this power for the States, and, incidentally, I want to remind you that I am still doing business at the same old stand—I do not believe we ought to add one cubit to the stature of this "towering giant" that we have created and nourished. It will destroy our Government unless we curb it. It ought to be the mission, to which we dedicate ourselves religiously, to strike the shackles that are being forged to fetter free government and vest the whole power in the States. That is what ought to be done.

You talk about getting jobs? Less than 5 percent of all the jobs that have been got were secured otherwise than by private contacts at "the grass roots." Less than 5 percent of them came through the Federal service or the State service or both together.

Where does your brother go when he loses his job? He goes to you. And where do you go? You go to somebody you know. And there is the job-producing contact.

President Truman's Reorganization Plan No. 2, of 1947, is sound, just, best under all the circumstances, and in accord with the expressed will of Congress. No one can read it without sensing its sincerity and wisdom. The President is trying to cooperate with us. We should gratefully and gladly approve the plan we are considering, and defeat the pending resolution of disapproval.

Our friend and colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] last year in reporting the Labor-Social Security appropriation bill said to us that it was right and proper to take the power back to the Labor Department from whence it had been taken. He cordially approved. So did we all. There we have a responsible Cabinet member to execute the law we write. We have no such assurance if we commit this trust to a "towering giant" and thereby increase his stature and his muscular development.

I want to read to you what Congress said when we created the Labor Department. I quote:

> The purpose of the Labor Department shall be to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners in the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance workers' opportunities for profitable employment.

That is what we said should be the province of the Department of Labor. You cannot escape the logic of the President in agreeing with us. The Labor Department cannot triumph over Congress. But a bureau with an accumulation of $70,000,000,000 can and will. It will become so powerful that it could subvert and frustrate all other governmental power. We have no right to play fast and loose with powers that were bought with sweat and blood and tears through the years of the infancy of this Republic. We ought not, I submit, to "run out" on the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and his splendid fight that he made last year to restore this power to the people in the grass roots, where it belongs and where only it can be administered unselfishly for the benefit of the rank and file.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am so delighted to yield to my distinguished friend, whose name I have been taking pridefully if in vain.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I feel almost contrite when I say to my good friend from Alabama that I have real difficulty in following his argument. My contention is, put the eggs in one basket for purposes of simplicity and elimination of duplication, and then it is so much easier to take a look at their far-flung activities, and get it all in one package, not only for purposes of legislation but for purposes of appropriation. It seems to me the gentleman from Alabama moves in the direction of not one agency, even though it might be large, but two large agencies. This is taking the sin of lesser degree, when you do have to have some bureaucracy, by confining it to one rather than to two.

Mr. HOBBS. I will be delighted to try in my feeble way to answer that very plausible argument. I am not moving in any direction from our battleground of last year. You—our leader then—are reversing the charge you led. I am still fighting dangerous bureaucracy, in the cause of observance of the law we wrote. I am not in favor of building into more elephantine proportions the "towering giant" whose present power has been sufficient, I fear, to win this engagement. Bureaus grow and are made dangerous and ever more dangerous by inside manipulation and magnification. Being on the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman knows that is what you have to fight all the time. You know that the salary of a bureaucrat is dependent upon the number of employees he can squeeze into his department, whether they ought to be there or not. You know that we ought to deny this savory meat of more power, to the insatiable appetite of this and every other bureaucratic "towering giant."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in this resolution. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations dealing with the appropriations for the Employment Service, the Department of Labor, and the Federal Security Agency, I may say I have had some experience, since I have been a Member of Congress, in dealing with the problems involved.

It must be understood and recalled that the Wagner-Peyser Act was passed in 1933. That act set up a system of employment services on a cooperative basis with the States. The Federal Government paid most of the expense, but the States matched certain funds. It was not until 1936 that the Social Security Act was enacted and it did not become effective until 1937. Thus we have had the system of employment offices under the Wagner-Peyser Act for years before the system of unemployment compensation under the Social Security Act came into being.

You will recall that title III of the Social Security Act set up the unemployment compensation system.

Unemployment compensation was financed how? It was financed by virtue of a tax levy of 3 percent on pay rolls. Ninety percent of that 3-percent tax was supposedly set apart for the payment of administrative expenses of unemployment compensation. The Social Security Board that was charged with the responsibility for carrying on and carrying out the provisions of the Social Security Act as it related to unemployment compensation had to do something to carry out the purpose of Congress; and one of the things they did was to designate the Employment Service as the agency of government to which employees would have to report who were out of employment in order to be exposed to a job opportunity, in order that they might receive unemployment compensation under State law. Therefore, through the action of the Social Security Board in designating the United States Employment Service as the agency to permit the Unemployment Compensation Service to function, the two from that point on became intimately related. We cannot maintain a system of unemployment compensation, under existing law, without having an Employment Service corollary to it to perform the functions that are required in order to qualify an individual for the benefits under unemployment compensation.

What has happened as a result of this very close relationship and as a result of the tremendous growth of the Unemployment Service in this country and as a result of the fact that the President took over the State employment services? It became a question as to how they were to be financed and as to how they have been financed. Who has paid the administrative expenditures of the offices? Have they operated under the original provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act? They have not. The administrative expenditures of the employment services have been entirely paid out of the same money, out of the same funds that pay the administrative expenses of unemployment compensation, and very properly so. There is no reason in the world why it should not be that way, no reason in the world, because that 3-percent tax on pay rolls is paid by the employers in the respective States of this Union. That is State money. The tax is levied for that purpose. Here is an integrated system of security for workers.

There ought to be some amendments to the law. There ought to be a rewriting of the Wagner-Peyser Act, and I understand that is going to be undertaken. The law ought to be rewritten and the two programs, the unemployment compensation program and the program of the employment services, ought to be brought close together. There is no question about that at all. We have tried to do that as far as we have been able to do it on the Appropriations Committee. You will recall that I took a rather definite part in fighting to return these employment services to the States.

So we have today throughout this Nation one office out of which operates the unemployment compensation group and also the employment service group, all operating in one office and under State control and all financed under the operation out of the so-called title 3 funds that are levied under the provisions of title 3 of the Social Security Act.

The question is, Should we have the operating head that allocates the funds and determines how much money shall go to the State for operation of the Employment Service in the Labor Department, leaving the unemployment compensation over here in the Federal Security Agency, or shall they be put together? I have always felt they should be put together. I stated clearly on the floor of this House a couple of years ago that I felt the Employment Service as it then was being carried on properly belonged in the Labor Department. They were then under Federal operation—the employment operations have gone back to the States with the Employment Service.

The situation is changed somewhat right now. They should be put together. They should be in the Labor Department or they ought to be in the Federal Security Agency. I do not care particularly where they are.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. May I say that I agree with the gentleman 110 percent and that we ought to do exactly what he is advocating. The first step toward that will be to divorce this by taking it into the Labor Department temporarily until we can amend the Wagner-Peyser Act.

Mr. KEEFE. I do not believe that is the way to do it. Just look at the situation we are up against. You have the Social Security Act which provides for unemployment compensation. That involves all this great system of social security. Title III provides for unemployment compensation. I did not write that. I was not here then. It was put in here by a Democratic Congress. A Democratic Congress enacted that law. You are not going to take that out of administration of the Social Security Board. You now have the Social Security Administration that is handling the administration of that part of social security and the President by virtue of his power of reorganization has transferred out of the Labor Department the Children's Bureau which is charged under the Social Security Act with the responsibility for administering other titles of the Social Security Act. So you have brought together in the Federal Security Agency, if I may say so, by action of the President and taken out of the Labor Department a function which has been there for years, namely, the Children's Bureau which administers other provisions of the Social Security Act. That clearly indicates an attitude on the part of the President to concentrate in the Federal Security Agency those functions which related to the Social Security Act. When I saw that I applauded it, I approved it, and I supported it. I felt that it was a proper function of the President to see to it that the Children's Bureau was transferred out of the Labor Department and put over where it belongs, with the Federal Security Agency. That was in line with the idea of consolidating in one place those functions that relate to the subject of social security.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, we get up against this question of the Employment Service. The President says this service is going to stay in the Labor Department. The operating end of the service is out in the States. The operating end is combined with the Social Security Administration which administers unemployment compensation. They are in the same office, they are both under that direction and control. Now, should the operating end of the Employment Service at the Washington level be in the Labor Department now with the Social Security Administration handling the operating end of the employment compensation or should they both be put together and have one operating head here in Washington?

That is the question that we have to determine. Now, if the President's plan is effective, it will mean that this supervisory organization, called the USES, headed by Bob Goodwin, will be in the Department of Labor. It means if it is not made effective, it will revert back to the Federal Security Agency, and there you will have placed together the operating heads of the Unemployment Compensation and the Employment Service.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MANASCO. Does not the gentleman think that our State unemployment compensation commissions now have had enough experience to know how to operate their own organizations and that the Congress should divorce the Federal activities altogether from unemployment compensation and turn them back entirely to the States? We could eliminate a few Federal employees by doing that.

Mr. KEEFE. Of course, I feel that the States are fully competent to administer their State laws, and all unemployment laws are State laws. They are State enacted. The only requirement is that in enacting the State laws they must conform to standards set up by the Federal Government which, theoretically, furnishes the money under which the laws are administered.

Mr. MANASCO. That is right, and it takes a few Federal employees to theoretically furnish them money, so that if we turn it all back to the States, we could eliminate some employees.

Mr. KEEFE. May I say to the distinguished gentleman that when we brought the bill in there this year there was a provision for $900,000 for administration of unemployment compensation by the Social Security Board. The USES, performing the functions of supervising the employment services, asked for around $8,000,000, and we cut them down to the same amount, $900,000, and it has caused quite a storm of protest. They were asking for more money at the Washington level to supervise the Federal Employment Service operated by the States than they had the year before to manage the whole show and actually run these 1,800 offices throughout the Nation.

I think I have delineated the question before the House, and you must determine whether or not to reject the President's proposal, and if you do, you will put in one place this time in the Federal Security Agency the control of the administration of unemployment compensation and the Employment Service. I personally have not any great tremendous feeling as to where they ought to be placed but I say they should be brought together, because they operate together, and you cannot operate one without the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN].

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of Reorganization Plan No. 2. Under the Reorganization Act that was passed last year, the President makes suggestions to the Congress in connection with reorganizing the executive departments in order to promote efficiency and economy.

This plan has three parts to it: The first deals with the United States Employment Service, the second part relates to the Wage and Hour Division, and the third part concerns coordinating enforcement policies of various labor laws.

I am vitally interested in the committee report on the President's plan to permanently locate the United States Employment Service. It has long been my opinion that our public employment service must play a vital role in assuring high levels of productive employment. To be fully effective in carrying out its responsibilities in this connection, the United States Employment Service should remain in the Department of Labor, where its policies, standards, technical assistance, and services can best be geared to the other activities now carried on in that Department.

I find that the section of the committee report dealing with the United States Employment Service is devoted almost exclusively to the views which were presented by State employment security directors. The report fails to bring out the fact that these directors for the past 5 years have been concerned exclusively with unemployment compensation and only since last November have they had any responsibility for the administration of public employment offices. A careful review of most of the reasons which the State directors have given for recommending the transfer of the United States Employment Service to the Federal Security Agency will indicate that they reflect a very narrow conception of the functions of the public employment offices. In the main these State directors seem to be concerned with the routine business management and budgetary aspects of the public employment service rather than with the basic fundamental objectives of providing effective job assistance and job counseling to veterans and other job seekers and to promoting employment opportunities by maintaining sound job-development relationships with employers.

The State directors' lack of understanding of public employment service experience during the past 6 or 7 years is evident from the statement in the committee report and I quote:

> During the years preceding the war, the public employment service gained rapidly in establishment of employer confidence. During the war much ground was lost and employer confidence deteriorated steadily, largely due to the fact that both compulsion and social planning were to a considerable extent substituted for free services.

The committee would have rendered a real service to this House if it would have gone into the facts behind this assertion instead of blindly quoting it as one of the bases for recommending the transfer of the United States Employment Service to the Federal Security Agency.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the Members of this House are entitled to know the facts concerning the development of the public employment service in this country since the prewar years. Perhaps the best index to employer confidence and acceptance of public employment offices may be found in the volume and kind of job placements which public employment offices make with employers. Such placements are based upon job orders which employers give to the local offices and obviously these orders would not have been given had there not existed employer confidence. In 1940, the public employment offices made some 3,700,000 job placements. This was at a time when the Employment Service was under the domination of the unemployment-compensation program in the Federal Security Agency. In 1946, though, with the USES, a separate identifiable agency, in the Department of Labor the public employment offices made more than 5,500,000 placements.

The mere number of placements does not itself reflect the kind of service which the public employment offices perform. It is more important that we know the kind of jobs on which workers are being placed and for which employers are being serviced. In 1940, about 36 percent of all of the placements were made in the service industries, domestic services, and private households—jobs of relatively short duration and paying very small wages. Only 20 percent of all the placements in 1940 were in the manufacturing industries where are found the higher semiskilled and skilled jobs having relatively longer duration and paying reasonably satisfactory wages. By 1946, manufacturing industry placements constituted 40 percent of all placements and had increased threefold over those made in 1940. This increase in the volume of job placements and the tremendous improvement in placing workers in higher skills and better-paying jobs occurred during the years that the United States Employment Service was not a part of the Federal Security Agency. Contrary to the assertions of the State unemployment compensation directors and the apparent belief of the committee, the public employment offices in 1946, a peacetime year, and following the experience of war years, have established a better record and played a greater role in assuring full use of our labor resources than has ever been true in the history of this country.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and four Members are present, a quorum.

The gentleman from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. The Members of this House, Mr. Chairman, should know that this is only one of the many statements of misinformation or evidences of lack of information which may explain the recommendation of the committee to transfer the United States Employment Service to the Federal Security Agency. I, for one, prefer to support Reorganization Plan No. 2, because it reflects a careful study and review of the functions of the various Government departments in the executive branch of the Federal Government. I am not inclined to be persuaded by the special and narrow interest of some State directors, who represent only another species of government bureaucrats, that the United States Employment Service should be transferred out of the Department of Labor. These officials have little or no knowledge of the functions and responsibilities which are lodged in the Federal Government. I strongly urge upon the Members of this House that they search their consciences and bear in mind their views concerning Government efficiency and economy on this matter. I am sure they will come to the conclusion which I have reached that the United States Employment Service properly belongs in and should continue to be a part of the Department of Labor.

I have spent a great deal of time pondering over the words of the committee in their report to the House on Concurrent Resolution 49 to disapprove the President's reorganization plan. I have had particular trouble in understanding the exact purpose of the committee in its somewhat brief disposal of that part of the plan which would give the Secretary of Labor power to standardize procedures and policies for the enforcement of the Davis-Bacon Act, the Copeland Act, and the so-called 8-hour laws all applying to Government construction work. After admitting the value of such a move the committee proceeds to state, and I quote:

> A more appropriate step at this time would seem to require careful consideration of these laws by appropriate congressional committees.

The committee arouses my curiosity, however, by failing completely to reveal what this more appropriate step may be. Personally I can think of nothing more appropriate in the interests of governmental efficiency than to standardize the enforcement policies of many different Government agencies administering the same labor law. I can see no virtue whatever in having a law administered in one way by one agency and in another way by a second agency, and so on down the list of Government agencies.

The Davis-Bacon Act went on the books in 1931. It provides for the Secretary of Labor to determine the prevailing wages for laborers and mechanics in the locality where public works of the United States are being built under contract. Each such construction contract of the United States in excess of $2,000 must contain a stipulation that the wages in performance of the contract shall not be less than those determined by the Secretary. Does the committee suggest that the appropriate step is to repeal or modify this valuable piece of legislation?

The 8-hour laws similarly provide for payment for overtime of one and one-half times the regular rate of pay to mechanics and laborers performing contracts for the construction of public works of the United States. I believe that the time and one-half principle for overtime is too well established as a universal industrial practice to warrant its abandonment at the present time. Does the committee nonetheless imply that the United States Government should now take the initiative in lowering the basic labor standards of this country?

And I believe the same question is pertinent in regard to the Copeland anti-kick-back statute which makes it unlawful for any person to induce wage earners building public works financed by Federal funds to give up a part of their wages in response to force, or threat, or intimidation. This statute blocks a serious loophole found to exist in regard to the Davis-Bacon and 8-hour laws. I assume, therefore, that an intent to repeal those laws would extend to the anti-kick-back statute.

If, on the other hand, the committee is convinced that some other method of administering these laws should be adopted, certainly the Members of this House are entitled to know the disposition of the committee in this regard. And if there is a fatal infirmity in the method chosen by the President, I believe he, too, is entitled to receive the benefit of the committee's opinion and its suggestion as to a more appropriate step toward better organization for enforcing these laws. In choosing to condemn this phase of the plan with faint praise, coupled with a suggestion for consideration by another congressional committee, the proponents have been clearly derelict in their duty to this House.

Each feature of this reorganization plan appears to me to be altogether fitting and appropriate. The Employment Service operated very successfully in the Department of Labor for many years and recently has been returned to that Department as one of the many necessary steps toward normalcy from wartime operation. To require any future reshifting would, of course, constitute an unwarranted temporary disruption of a function which is clearly a labor function of the Government; that is, supervising the use of funds for obtaining jobs for the unemployed.

The Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division cannot consistently with good government continue to be vested with autonomous authority within the Department of Labor and I am convinced that the plan presents a sound solution in this respect. It is preposterous to assert that the Secretary of Labor should not be vested with the labor functions of Government where they have any effect upon any person other than the wage earner. Upon the same principle the functions of the Secretary of Agriculture under the Packers and Stock Yards Act should be transferred on the equally false grounds that the Secretary is interested in the welfare of farmers to the exclusion of packers who are regulated by that act and of the general public.

No; I cannot agree with the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I believe the prime requisite of good government is to place as far as possible under one roof all functions which relate to the same general national problems. In no other way are we going to advance in the practice of good government. It seems to me that this is the only object of this plan, and that there can be no disapproval by fair-minded men of a reasonable Presidential purpose. After all, have we not indicated to him by the Reorganization Act itself our desire to trust largely to his discretion in these matters? Therefore, do we not now find ourselves in the position of having to carry out our declared policy by approving the reasonable use of that discretion? It seems to me that we do. Any other approach would seem to be an indirect attack upon the act itself—and I believe we must decide that question separately upon its own merits.

My plea, therefore, is for a restrained and reasonable approach to this problem. Let us address ourselves impartially to the effects of this plan. I know I have tried my level best to do so and I can only conclude that I must oppose the resolution.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 49, which proposes to reject President Truman's Reorganization Plan No. 2. There have been many very able and splendid speeches on this subject made by gentlemen on both sides of the aisle. It is not a partisan or political matter. I am sure every Member of the House is trying to reach that conclusion which will best serve this important activity of our Government, unemployment and unemployment compensation. The veterans are not involved.

In the State of Kentucky, of course, we have an unemployment service organization set up that is very ably and efficiently conducted by one Dr. Babb. I understand he appeared before a committee of this House, handling this resolution, and declared it would be to the best interest of the unemployment and compensation services in Kentucky that those services be a part of and directed by the Social Security organization of the Federal Government, and not in the Department of Labor as suggested by the President in his plan. Some 32 other States took a similar stand. I think they are right, their position makes sense to me.

If this resolution is adopted and these State services are articulated with the Social Security Board I think in the end we shall eliminate the double budgeting, the double auditing, and the double checking that would be necessary if the President's plan were followed; and it would save money to the Government, it would give more efficient service to the unemployed; and it would provide them jobs and take care of their unemployment claims more efficiently, expeditiously, and economically.

I can see no good reason at all why the President's reorganization plan should be approved as it will cost more and be less efficient. There is every reason as stated by Dr. Bobb, the director of the Kentucky services and also by the organizations of at least 32 other States why it should not be disapproved. I am very happy therefore to unite in the approval of this measure as urged by a number of my colleagues.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. I yield.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-one Members are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 76]

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DONDERO, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Concurrent Resolution 49, finding itself without a quorum, he directed the roll to be called, when 328 Members responded to their names, disclosing that a quorum was present, and he submitted herewith the names of the absentees to be spread upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Committee will resume its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will resume.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, I wish to disclaim any responsibility for this quorum call. I had about concluded the remarks I had in mind to make.

This, of course, is a very simple resolution. But one issue is submitted. The resolution is short. It reads:

That the Congress does not favor the Reorganization Plan No. 2 of May 1, 1947, transmitted to the Congress by the President on the 1st day of May 1947.

This does not preclude the President from submitting some other reorganization plan if he sees fit.

There is no partisanship in this resolution, as I understand it. Quite a number of Members from both sides of the aisle have spoken in favor of the resolution and against the Reorganization Plan No. 2. The agencies of the Government themselves are divided as to what is the best thing to do. The Department of Labor thinks they ought to have this compensation and unemployment service, but the report states that the professional group in the Bureau of the Budget do not agree. Some think it ought to go to the Department of Labor, others insist it should go to the Social Security Agency.

Recently in the city of Washington representatives of 33 States of the Union, including Dr. Bobb of Kentucky, adopted a resolution stating by unanimous action on the part of these representatives that this service should be in the social security branch of the Government and not in the Department of Labor. They went on record as opposing Reorganization Plan No. 2 as submitted by the President. The Social Security Agency opposes the transfer of these services to the Department of Labor.

In 1939 President Roosevelt placed this service in the Social Security Agency. These services were not in the Social Security Agency at the time the Government took them over from the States and the States surrendered these activities to the Federal Government for the period of the war emergency. The Social Security Board has experience in handling this particular problem. The Department of Labor has not had that experience. You have 33 States, you have President Roosevelt, you have a committee reporting this resolution, you have the Social Security Board, all agreeing that we should not adopt this Reorganization Plan No. 2. The Bureau of the Budget is divided. I urge we adopt this resolution and return this service to the Social Security Agency. The States levy and collect the taxes to pay the unemployment compensations and the States pay out the money and therefore their wishes should have great weight. The States are opposed to the President's plan and favor the resolution before us and I am sure you will adopt this resolution and reject the President's plan.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, it is significant that in practically every State since the Employment Service has been turned back to the States the Employment Service and the employment compensation are operated by the same agency. It has been found on State and local levels that these programs have to be integrated in order to properly serve the people.

We must consider not only the workers, who turn to the Employment Service for locating jobs or to unemployment compensation for benefits during periods when they are unable to find work, but we must consider the broader aspects of the problem of full employment and its effect on our total economy. Just as the general welfare is being served better by the correlation under one administrative head of these two programs on State and local levels, I believe there should be integration on the Federal level. This is especially true since policies relating to each of these functional agencies must be coordinated and must not be conflicting. In the hearings it was pointed cut that the States have a great deal to say about policies within their respective States. However, it was also made clear that suggestions of a policy nature which originate in Washington frequently carry the force of administrative orders. When two agencies in Washington are formulating policy suggestions which frequently conflict they have to be reconciled by the State administrative bodies. Consider the loss in efficiency and the accompanying confusion.

There is a question as to whether these two programs should be integrated in the Department of Labor or in the Federal Security Agency. Incidentally the Labor Department requested that the unemployment compensation be transferred to it. I think this question of location is unimportant at this time, although a large percentage of the State administrators urged that the combined activities of these agencies be placed in the Federal Security Agency. I recognize some serious objections to such a course. Involved in this whole problem is the need to find a solution for the administration of these two programs which involve both management and labor and in which the general public has a greater concern than does either of these two interest groups. General economic considerations require that the administration of these two agencies be fair and objective, and free from the pressure either of organized industry or of organized labor.

There is more involved here than merely the location of the Employment Service. In my judgment, these agencies should be brought together, and the passage of this resolution will afford time for resolving the broader aspects of the problem.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL].

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Chairman, I was impressed by the remarks of the gentleman who just addressed the House. I was also impressed by the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

It seems plain to me, and I believe a vote will show that it is plain to the Members of the House, that greater efficiency can be had in the administration of unemployment compensation and the placement of men on jobs throughout the Nation if here in Washington, as we now have it on the local State level, there would be a consolidation and coordination of the activities of these two agencies, and I think employment activities should rest with the Social Security Agency. Consequently, I am supporting the resolution offered by the gentleman from Michigan and am opposed to the President's Plan No. 2 as suggested to the Congress.

Out in Illinois, one of the great States of the Nation, a great industrial State as well as an agricultural State, the people who pay the bills to support job placement and compensation in Illinois, a part of which money goes to other States from this great wealthy State that I have the honor to represent, they want the President's plan defeated, and they insist that the Federal Security Agency is the place where this responsibility of Government should rest. They believe that it will make for a greater convenience in the direction of opportunity at the State level, and that it will conserve some of the money that is taken from them and other States which is later allocated back to the States. So, it is perfectly plain to me that this question should be resolved by defeating the President's plan and supporting the proposal offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

In the future employment and unemployment compensation will become more of a major problem than it is today, and I should like to divert for 1 minute to suggest that in our consideration of other legislation coming to the floor of this House we ought to keep in mind that this great country, rich and powerful as it is, owes its first obligation to see that its affairs are conducted so that the men and women of these United States of America get first place on job placements, on educational opportunities, and on opportunities for housing of which there is such a great shortage in this country today.

That brings me where I should like to divert to say that while it is almost out of order, it is so relevant that I should like to point out that at the present time there have come into this country, without visa, 47,000 people from foreign countries during the year 1946. There are at the present time 17,000 young men and women in this country taking advantage of the housing and taking advantage of the opportunities of our educatioaal institutions, whereas we have a great shortage of opportunities for education, yes, even to the GI's who went out and defended this country in the four corners of the world who now, by reason of the disruption of educational facilities, want an opportunity to complete their education in this country. Seventeen thousand of these men and women of ours are displaced now in the educational institutions of this country by reason of the infiltration into this country of 17,000 students. Even now we have some shortages of opportunity for labor, yet 47,000 have come in under nonquota opportunities in this country during the year 1946.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Of course, the gentleman realizes that he is not speaking in order on the Reorganization Plan that is before the House, but commenting on the particular point which he has brought up out of order, I may say that there are also many American boys and girls that are taking advantage of the educational opportunities overseas in this exchange.

Mr. VURSELL. Does the gentleman have the number?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I do not have the exact number.

Mr. VURSELL. In my opinion, due to the unsettled condition of the world and the lack of opportunity throughout the world, there are very few young men and women from America seeking educational opportunity in the universities of the world outside the continental limits of the United States.

I am a little alarmed at legislation that would open the door wider for people to come in here without any let or hindrance or without any check. May I say that in my judgment there are countless thousands that have come in through the borders without any regard to law or without any regard to the regulations set up by this Government under the immigration statutes. So we are finding ourselves where we are being asked to open the gates wider to the great disadvantage of the returning soldiers who fought throughout the world to preserve opportunities for their own people and for them when they returned. We shall hear more about that later on when the next bill comes to the floor of the House.

May I repeat that in all of our deliberations I think that sometimes we stray too far in our interest in other countries and opportunities for other people to come into this country, to the great detriment of the people who have the first right and the first call on the institutions of this country and upon the opportunities this country offers to the defenders of this country and the people who defended it on the home front in the last great world crisis.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, may I preface my remarks by reading a statement made by Keen Johnson, Under Secretary of Labor, appearing at page 61 of the hearings:

> The need for the reorganization of the Government was pointed out in President Roosevelt's message, which you are familiar with, of January 12, 1937, in which he stated:
> "In these years of world history, a self-government cannot long survive, unless that Government is an effective and efficient agency to serve mankind and carry out the will of the Nation.

"The Government without good management is a house built on the sand. In striving to make our Government more efficient, you and I are taking up in our generation the battle to preserve the freedom of self-government which our forefathers fought to establish and hand down to us."

The message went on to say that no enterprise can operate effectively if set up as is the Government today. The chaos of establishments in the Federal Government, numbering approximately 100, makes it impossible for the President and the Congress to exercise effective supervision or direction, nor can overlapping, duplicating, and contradictory practices be avoided.

Let us depart from a partisan discussion and see just what an independent, impartial agency recommended, so far as the position of this Department is concerned. I refer now to a statement and study made by a group of experts, among whom were Louis Brownlow, Luther Gulick, and Charles Merriam, who came to the conclusion that between the Department of Labor and the Federal Security Agency, or a proposed Department of Social Welfare, the matter should be determined on a basis of whether a particular governmental program involves rights or needs. Those who conducted that study were of the opinion that wherever a program is based upon the rights of an individual it should be allocated to the Department of Labor and that any program based on the need of an individual should be allocated to the Welfare Agency.

WAGE AND HOUR DIVISION RIGHTS AND NEEDS

The second part of the President's reorganization plan would transfer the functions of the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division to the Secretary of Labor. Now, as you know, when Congress passed the Fair Labor Standards Act, it placed the Division in the Department of Labor, and in so doing used this language in section 4 (a):

There is hereby created in the Department of Labor a Wage and Hour Division which shall be under the direction of an Administrator—

And so forth. The act did not specifically give the Secretary of Labor an adequate legal basis for supervising and directing the affairs of the Division. As a consequence, the Division has had an ambiguous status in the Department. I think it is time for the Congress to spell out in clear detail what it means by "in the Department of Labor."

At present, the Wage and Hour Division, for budgetary purposes, is in the Department. Its personnel and budgetary policies must conform to the budgetary policies of the Department as a whole. Also, its legal advice comes from the Solicitor's office, which is under the control and authority of the Secretary of Labor. But because the Congress in 1938 did not spell out clearly its intent there have been some doubts as to the authority of the Secretary of Labor over the Wage and Hour Division in matters of public policy and enforcement procedures.

It is hard for me to give serious consideration to this section of the joint resolution because I cannot see any possible reason why the Division should not be under the direct authority of the Secretary of Labor. On the other hand, there are very good reasons why it should be wholly within the Department. The Secretary of Labor is the Cabinet officer who is responsible to the administration for all labor matters. If this reorganization plan becomes law it will do much toward easing the administrative burdens of the President.

The Administrator of the Division and the Secretary are in accord in supporting the reorganization plan. There is a splendid spirit of cooperation between the Wage and Hour Division and the other divisions and bureaus of the Department. And, of course, there must be. And certainly the Secretary of Labor, who in the public mind is responsible for all governmental functions in the field of labor relations, should be given specific authority to direct the activities of the divisions in accordance with this responsibility. I am certain that there will be no practical change from the present situation. The Secretary has stated frequently, and I quote from one such statement:

If these powers are granted to me I will, of course, make an appropriate delegation to the Administrator and other subordinate officers of the Department.

As the Cabinet officer and adviser to the President on all matters relating to labor, the Secretary should have the clear and unquestioned authority to tie in the administration of the Fair Labor Standards Act with the over-all administration of the other labor functions of the Department.

It seems to me that to say otherwise would be comparable to saying that a city superintendent of schools should have no authority to direct the policies of a senior high school in his muncipality.

The desire for efficiency in carrying out the Government's functions in the field of labor dictates that all such labor functions which have any impact on worker and employer relationships or which arise out of them should be clearly allocated to the Secretary of Labor. At present the Secretary of Labor has final authority and responsibility for determining prevailing wage rates for building construction workers on public works construction. He has the ultimate control and the responsibility for determining prevailing minimum wages and for administering the provisions of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act.

This problem resolves itself into the logical or reasonable discussion as to whether or not you are going to have a unified or coordinated plan under the Department of Labor, or whether there is going to be a division of responsibility. I say that where any attempt is made to divide responsibility, it is bad legislation to try to hamstring the executive branch because what happens then is poor regulation and poor supervision. It may be good politics, however, so the question is, Are we playing politics or are we trying to do a good job of administering or making it possible to do a good job of administration?

There are those who say that labor needs no protection by the Government; that business will be fair, but the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Division of the United States Department of Labor reports that during the 1946 fiscal year, 54 percent of all manufacturing industries inspected were found to be in violation of the Federal minimum wage overtime and child labor laws. Nearly 12,000 plants were involved and more than $9,000,000 owed to 200,000 underpaid employees. In all, more than 2,300,000 workmen were inspected. The bulk of businessmen, of course, were law-abiding. Inspections were made where the Department of Labor suspected violations. Now this is just so much tweedledee and tweedledum. There is an effort here, by means of this resolution to really sabotage effective administration.

And under Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1946 the Congress gave him the final authority and responsibility with respect to the administration and enforcement of the child-labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. I should like to make a parenthetical point here, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the spirit of cooperation which exists between the Secretary of Labor and the Administrator and about which I spoke a moment ago. The actual administration of the Walsh-Healey Act and the enforcement of the child-labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act are in charge of the Wage-Hour Administrator, although the Secretary has the final authority and responsibility for these matters. The arrangement has proved to be efficient and practicable and has presented no problems. Therefore, it is not reasonable to assume that transferring the other functions of the Administrator to the Secretary of Labor would present any problems in administration. On the other hand, as I have pointed out, there are many good reasons for the transfer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] has expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS].

Mr. Chairman, since we will require only about three more minutes on this side, I wonder if we cannot agree on time. I make the unanimous-consent request that we close debate in 20 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. You cannot make any unanimous-consent request in Committee of the Whole. The time has already been fixed in the House. Members do not have to yield time unless they want to.

Mr. BENDER. I withdraw the request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to oppose this resolution until I heard the Whip on the Democratic side make his defense of it, express himself as to how he felt about it. That changed my position entirely.

This resolution, if enacted into law will cut out a lot of duplication, it will cut out a lot of dissatisfaction, it will expedite work, it will save some money; and that is a thing we have all got to do wherever we can. Our taxes are getting out of hand. The cost of living is going to absurd extremes. We have got to save a dollar wherever we can irrespective of the opposition we get from the other side of the aisle. I noticed on the streets this past week here in the city that bananas were selling for 25 cents a pound. I never heard of such a thing in my life. It is utterly ridiculous and completely indefensible. There is absolutely no reason for such price and no man can defend the selling of bananas at 25 cents a pound. It is utterly reprehensible. The United Fruit Co. made public statements in advertisements saying that they are selling their bananas delivered in this country at the port for 5½ cents a pound.

I know, of course, that several gentlemen will seek the floor after I relinquish it to tell me that I voted against OPA. Sure, I voted against OPA, but under OPA we could not get any bananas at all; there were none.

This morning I noticed in the press that meat had disappeared from the Philadelphia markets yesterday, with the prediction that it will be up from 8 to 11 cents a pound when it reappears in a few days. At the same time there are 17,000 more head of cattle on the Chicago livestock market than there were a week ago. Fellows on the other side of the aisle are going to tell me that I voted against OPA. Sure, I repeat again, I voted against OPA, but we had no meat at all under OPA. It is a matter for the administration to stop this hijacking of the necessities of life. OPA was removed, sure; but it is the responsibility of the administration to get after these robbers, thieves, and hijackers of these necessities.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. No; the gentleman can get his own time to come here and defend the failures of his party, to defend his taxes, to defend his spending until they got us into a $280,000,000,000 debt and placed on our backs taxes that are absolutely confiscatory, policies that have driven the cost of living up until we find bananas at 25 cents a pound. We cannot live with fruit at such prices or with the commonest cuts of meat at 40 and 50 cents a pound.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, may I have order, please?

I am making a plea for legislation that will help push this Federal Government back into Washington where it belongs and trim it down to button-hole size. I want to get Uncle Sam back into a position where the common man can respect him again. He is getting himself into such position and will stay there if we can whittle down the bureaucrats and the money spenders. We ought to be seeing more of him. He is back in the newspapers, it is true, but he ought to be there a lot more. We want to get living in this country back on such a basis that we can once again eat meat, bananas, potatoes, and the things usually bought on the general market and not have the money depreciated on the one hand and the people overcharged on the other.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I will give the gentleman the rest of my time to come down here to defend this thing.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania yields back 1 minute.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention of the Members to the actual services rendered by the United States Employment Service.

Many of the services are based on assistance, data, knowledge obtained from close contact with personnel in other branches of the Department of Labor.

ACTIVITIES OF THE UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE NATIONAL OFFICE

First. The national gathering and distribution to all local offices in the States of labor-market information reflecting employment trends, job opportunities, hiring specifications, and conditions of work on an occupational, industrial, and local-area basis. This information is now used by all employment offices in connection with employment counseling and placement service activities, and by employers, labor organizations, and community groups concerned with location of plants and employment stabilization.

Second. All technical services resulting from occupational analysis work such as the Dictionary of Occupational Titles, job descriptions and definitions, aptitude tests, trade questions and employment interviewing aids, and the analysis of physical requirements of jobs and physical capacities of workers. These techniques are used particularly in the placement of disabled war veterans and handicapped workers. They constitute basic services which the USES furnishes to both the VES and the State services.

Third. Nationally directed programs, such as (a) the job-development program, with specific emphasis on obtaining employment opportunities for veterans; (b) coordinated and improved counseling for veterans, handicapped workers, and new entrants into the labor market; and (c) such special programs as the national Hire the Physically Handicapped Week.

Fourth. The clearance of labor, both skilled and unskilled, between the States, and the bringing together of workers and the appropriate job opportunities and professional and technical personnel who must look to the national labor market for employment opportunities. This includes service to college graduates, particularly World War II veterans who are finishing their education under the GI bill and who for the most part are seeking positions in sections of the country other than localities where they have finished their education.

Fifth. The National Roster of Scientific and Specialized Personnel, which constitutes the only national register of our scientific manpower resources, and which is regarded by the Army and Navy and others concerned with national security as an indispensable activity.

Sixth. Working relationships with national organizations of employers, labor, and veterans, who are concerned with employment problems and whose activities are organized on a Nation-wide basis.

Seventh. All technical training materials and staff training assistance now being given by the USES to State and local employment offices.

Eighth. The manual of employment-office operations, which is the basic document setting forth recognized and tested employment-office practices and procedures and which has been adopted and is used without change or modification by practically all local offices throughout the country; and which is necessary to a Nation-wide network of local employment offices.

Ninth. Technical services provided to the Veterans' Employment Service, including manuals on operating methods and practices; statistical reporting and labor-market information necessary to assure the maximum job opportunities for veterans; as well as budget, fiscal, personnel, and business management services.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to also call attention to a statement appearing in the committee's report regarding the permanent location of the United States Employment Service, and upon which apparently is based the conclusion that the United States Employment Service should be transferred to the Federal Security Agency. It is my opinion that the misinformation contained in the statement may have been an important factor in leading to the erroneous conclusion of the committee that the United States Employment Service should be transferred out of the Department of Labor. The statement to which I refer, Mr. Chairman, may be found on page 4 of the committee report:

> The great weight of the evidence is to the effect that social-security activities, which concern all the people—employers, employees, and generally the public—should be consolidated in one neutral agency. The committee believes it would be as great a mistake to place the Employment Service under the jurisdiction of the Department of Labor as to place it under the Department of Commerce.

On the basis of this statement, it would be equally logical to transfer the United States Employment Service to the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

I believe the Members of the House recognize that social-security activities do not concern all the people—employers, employees, and generally the public. As a matter of fact, the social-security activity to which the committee refers is that of unemployment compensation and it is specifically restricted so that it is applicable only to certain employers and to certain types of workers.

For example, employers who have less than eight employees in their establishments are not covered by the tax provisions of the Federal statute relating to unemployment compensation. Consequently, workers employed in such establishments, unless specifically covered by State unemployment-compensation laws, have no rights to unemployment-compensation benefits when they become unemployed. Nevertheless, these workers properly look to the public employment offices for job assistance and job counseling. Two million youths enter our labor market each year and because these young people have had no prior work history, they are in no way covered by the social-security program, yet many of them rely upon the public employment offices to assist them in obtaining jobs. In the same way, I might cite the millions of workers in agriculture, domestic employment, government, and charitable institutions who are excluded from unemployment-compensation provisions, but many of whom rely upon the public employment office facilities for job assistance. As a matter of fact, it is far more correct to say that the Department of Labor is concerned with all the people—employers, employees, and generally the public—insofar as employer-employee relations, job opportunities, and other problems relating to the labor market generally are involved.

Mr. Chairman, as I understand the situation regarding the permanent location of the United States Employment Service, it is that if it were transferred to the Federal Security Agency, its program and activities which are focused exclusively on the development and improvement of a Nation-wide system of public employment offices would be subordinated to those of the unemployment compensation activities. This is so because unemployment compensation is regarded in the Federal Security Agency as an integral part of what constitutes the core of its program; namely, the social insurances. Insofar as experience can serve as a guide, the facts are that when the United States Employment Service was transferred to the Federal Security Agency in 1939, it was practically abolished and its functions were consolidated with those of unemployment compensation. As a result, payment of unemployment benefits took precedence over finding jobs for unemployed workers.

Is there any Member of this House who can question for a moment that it is more important to place unemployed workers on jobs than to pay them unemployment benefits? Indeed, I may say that the committee itself is fearful that the United States Employment Service may once again be subordinated to the unemployment compensation activities in the Federal Security Agency. This is evident from the statement contained in its report which reads that the committee is of the opinion that—

> The functions of the United States Employment Service should be transferred to the Federal Security Agency and that the administration of the unemployment compensation laws be consolidated with it in such a manner that emphasis will be placed, in the administration of the consolidated program, upon the work of the Employment Service.

Why is it now necessary for the committee to point out that emphasis should be placed upon the Employment Service in the event that the United States Employment Service were transferred to the Federal Security Agency? Obviously, the answer lies in the fact that the Federal Security Agency would not ordinarily place emphasis on the Employment Service, since it is foreign to the other activities and functions with which it is concerned; namely, the welfare and social insurance programs.

Not only are the activities of the United States Employment Service more closely related to the other activities of the Department of Labor, but the nature of the United States Employment Service responsibilities with respect to the State agencies so far as the public employment office operations are concerned are distinctly different from those of the Federal Security Agency in its administration of unemployment compensation activities. The United States Employment Service is required by statute to promote and maintain a national system of public employment offices, to provide the State and local offices with uniform administrative and statistical procedures, to furnish and publish information on employment opportunities, and to work with local offices on problems peculiar to their localities. None of these responsibilities are found in the Federal Security Agency with respect to the unemployment compensation program.

We do not have in this country a national system of unemployment compensation. Instead, we have independent State systems. This contrasts sharply with the Nation-wide network of public employment offices. When the inter-State transfer of workers is necessary in order to bring job seekers and job opportunities together, the United States Employment Service is required to directly participate in this interstate transfer. On the other hand, when a claimant seeks unemployment compensation benefits in a State other than in the one in which he was previously employed, the arrangements for the interstate payment of benefits is made between one State and another and the Federal Security Agency is in no way involved. This is but one example of the difference in the character of the responsibilities involved in dealing with the States in the case of the United States Employment Service in contrast to those involved in unemployment compensation by the Federal Security Agency. Indeed, I may say that the committee report is in error when it states "The United States Employment Service"—except in the District of Columbia—"is not an operating agency." The statute which created the United States Employment Service requires it to maintain a veterans' employment service, to maintain a farm-placement service, and to engage in the interstate transfer of workers. No such operating responsibilities can be found in the Social Security Act.

I urge the Members of this House to vote in favor of the President's reorganization plan which would permit the United States Employment Service to continue in the Department of Labor where it is now functioning more effectively than ever before in its history. It is my conviction that this is not only in keeping with sound Government organization based on proper distribution of functions, but that it has national implications involving the most effective utilization of our labor resources, promotion of employment opportunities, and indeed, it is not too much to say, a very real bearing on our national security.

Mr. Chairman, the action of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments favoring Concurrent Resolution 49 to kill Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1947 has given me considerable cause for concern. I have studied this plan with a great deal of care and I have discovered nothing which would justify the report of the committee. In fact, it appeared to me that this plan has every argument in its favor and none against it.

Now in 1945 the Congress gave to the President the power to reorganize the agencies of government along lines of greatest efficiency and economy. In so doing Congress frankly recognized that this type of function is clearly for the Chief Executive who is charged with the constitutional duty of running the departments and establishments of the Federal Government. This was a wise move, because it seems to me that the President should have a better knowledge of these problems through his Cabinet officers than we Members of Congress have through sporadic hearings.

The entire inference which I draw from the terms of this act is that once the President has determined upon a system of reorganization and has embodied in it a plan, then every presumption should favor its legitimacy and beneficial effects. The Congress should not act to upset the plan unless it is clearly arbitrary and capricious. For indeed, gentlemen, if we are going to initiate a policy of substituting our own judgment for that of the President in every instance, we might as well repeal the Reorganization Act and return to the policy of initiating executive reorganization ourselves.

A supreme example of quibbling over details may be found in the remarks of the committee which relate to the standardization by the Secretary of Labor of procedures for enforcing the Davis-Bacon Act, the Copeland Act, and the 8-hour laws.

As you undoubtedly know these laws relate to minimum wages, to the illegal kick-back of wages and to overtime pay concerning certain workmen employed in the performance of contracts for the construction of public works of the United States. There is no central administration of these acts. Each agency or department of the Government supervises the performance of its own construction contracts and is responsible for seeing that these provisions are complied with by each contractor. There is bound to be varying enforcement depending upon the quality and quantity of personnel available to each agency for this purpose and upon the degree of interest each agency has in this type of problem. It, therefore, seems a logical step to require at least some uniformity in the methods used by each agency enforcing these statutes. This would still leave the actual job of enforcement to each agency, but the approach used would be in conformance with the most effective and reasonable policies developed by the Department of Labor in the course of administration of the Wage and Hour Act.

I know that you are familiar with the remarks of the committee concerning this phase of the plan. They purported to favor it in principle. They hardly could escape favoring it to some extent because of its utter reasonableness. But then, after finding merit in vesting enforcement policies in one Government official the committee went on to state that a more appropriate step would be to require careful consideration of these laws by appropriate congressional committees. In other words, gentlemen, they say: "Your suggestions have merit, Mr. President, but from now on we intend to do all the reorganizing ourselves."

I have heard a lot about cooperation around here lately. On more than one occasion I have heard it expressed that the President must carry out his pledge of last fall to cooperate with the Congress. Apparently some Members of this House have the notion that cooperation means saying "yes" at all times to every matter which the Congress suggests, whether good or bad, and regardless of whether Congress is itself amenable to suggestion.

Now that is not cooperation—that is meek acceptance of dictatorship of Congress by the legislative branch of government.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman is criticizing the House, I gather, indirectly for not following along on these reorganization plans. I am sure the gentleman realizes that last year when the gentleman's party had control you did not agree with him on the reorganization plans he sent down.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Yes; I realize there was a difference of opinion at that time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman realizes that he is not cooperating with the House on the question of the tax legislation, over which we have sole authority.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I will say to my chairman that I realize there usually is a difference of opinion between the legislative branch and the executive branch. I am making the suggestion in all good faith and without any bitterness.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If the gentleman will yield further, does not the difficulty in this particular case grow out of the fact that the President has sent down here under one plan what would be, if considered by the House, three pieces of legislation? While we might agree with two of them, here is one that the House apparently does not agree with. If he would not put these all in one basket, we might be able to go along on part of them.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. In principle I agree with that. I admit that in some of the reorganization plans there are items which I do not like. However, I am sure the President finds nimself in that position on the pending labor bill that is before him. There are certain things in there which he advocated, but again, there are many other things which Congress in its wisdom saw fit to attach.

Mr. HOFFMAN. With reference to the labor bill, I think the gentleman is quite right. Undoubtedly we can all find things in that bill with which we do not agree. But does the gentleman recall any proposal for labor legislation being made by any members of the House Committee on Labor or by any Member on the minority side, any single proposition made as to the enactment of labor legislation? Was not the answer always, "No, no, you must not touch the Wagner Act"?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I will admit there was some argument along that line, but I think there were bills having to do with labor that were introduced on our side of the House. In fact, I introduced some of them myself, which had to do with certain phases of labor.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman never appeared before the Labor Committee, did he?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I never had an opportunity.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did the gentleman ever ask? I never heard of it, and I was over there.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I may not have asked.

Mr. HOFFMAN. They were just for the record?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. It was because I realized that the bills were not on the Calendar for consideration, and that there was little likelihood of getting them on. I am sure the gentleman has had the same experience.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What I am talking about is a hearing before the committee. The gentleman did not even ask to be heard by the Labor Committee on the bills he says he introduced, so I assume they were just for home consumption.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Not necessarily, no.

I believe sincerely that the true purpose and meaning of reorganization is that the recommendations of the President, whether he be Republican or Democratic, are entitled to great weight and they should not be overruled unless they are clearly unreasonable or unsound. In my opinion, in my humble opinion, the Reorganization Plan No. 2 is neither unreasonable nor is it unsound. I, therefore, am against the passage of the concurrent resolution and ask that it be voted down.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak out of order for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does this have reference to that California convention that you referred to the other day in which you said that the Democratic Party would wreck itself.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. It does not have any reference to that, I might say to my friend.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You do not care to comment any further on that?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I could at some length if I were so disposed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I refer to the remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL] a few moments ago regarding the student exchange program. Since his inquiry to me with reference to the numbers of American students going to school in foreign countries, I have called the Veterans' Administration and I find that there are as of April 30, 1,492 veterans in 239 different schools in 34 foreign countries. These figures are with reference to veterans only. They do not apply to members of the armed services who are attending schools under the Army educational plan in cooperation with the local European universities. Several thousand undoubtedly fall in this category.

In addition to that, the State Department informs me that there are between 5,000 and 6,000 civilian students who are now overseas in foreign countries. Another 5,000 civilian students are going overseas for short-term summer courses. There are 11,000 additional people who have signified their intention to the State Department to go overseas for educational training during 1948.

In my humble opinion the exchange of students is one of the most valuable projects in the direction of world peace and understanding that we are engaged in.

Understanding between peoples can be furthered through the actual experience of students living and learning with and from each other.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time remaining on this side to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there are two main questions involved in this concurrent resolution disapproving the President's Reorganization Plan No. 2.

The first question is the matter of administration. How can the employment services and the payment of unemployment compensation be best handled and administered? The testimony, as I recall, was unanimous that they ought to be administered together on the Federal as well as the State level. Those who think they ought to be in the Department of Labor and those who believe they ought to be in the Federal Security Agency were in agreement that the two can be handled better, more economically, and more efficiently, if they are together. Therefore, I think we, too, can agree that from the standpoint of good administration, the unemployment compensation laws and the employment services ought to be handled together.

The next question is one of policy. Should they be together in the Department of Labor or in the Federal Security Agency with the other social insurances, or, as someone suggested, in the Department of Commerce, or, in still some other Government agency? That is not the question directly involved in this resolution, but it is involved indirectly, because if we do not pass this resolution disapproving the President's plan, they will be separated permanently. Only when they come together again with the expiration of the War Powers Act, will we have a chance to decide where the two may best be handled together, if we want to move them both out of Federal Security Agency.

The President's main argument for putting the Employment Service in the Department of Labor is found in the fourth paragraph on page 2 of his message. He said:

Policies and operations of the Employment Service must be determined in relation to over-all labor standards, labor statistics, labor training, and labor law—on all of which the Labor Department is the center of specialized knowledge in the Government.

I asked Mr. Rector, of the commission which administers unemployment compensation and the employment service in Wisconsin, and who is also the president of the Interstate Conference of the Employment Security Agencies and who testified on behalf of the men who direct the unemployment compensation and the employment services of the respective States, if he would care to comment on that sentence because it is the President's major argument for his plan.

Mr. Rector, on page 231 of the hearings, said:

Yes. I think the implications in there are very considerable. It has not been said before, but since you raise the point, we might as well speak to the point. There would be a tendency, an undoubted tendency, and we have found it in sitting down there with them, to go over the promulgations of the rules and regulations under which we operate. There is an instinctive tendency on the part of the Labor Department to think in terms of uniform national application of standards of Federal labor law, of Federal training conditions, to force that on the States, if that is a proper term, through regulations and through standards.

* * * * *

That sentence there would be all right; there would be substance to it if we were concerned with an over-all, planned economy, and the substitution of Federal standards upon local standards, State standards throughout; but I am somewhat fearful, sir, of the implications of that sentence.

Now, lest anybody think that he was unduly fearful of Federal pressure, let me read from the testimony on page 82 of Mr. Keen Johnson, Under Secretary of Labor. He had said one of the major reasons why the Department of Labor thought the Employment Service should be under it was because his Department believed that out in the States the Employment Service had been and would be subordinated to the payment of unemployment compensation. I replied that if that were the case "the people in the States would know it and would be objecting to it. They have not so objected."

We did not have a witness from a single State who said that the employment services were being subordinated to the payment of unemployment compensation benefits. The witnesses said the opposite. They said the States naturally want to keep their reserves as high as possible, and in order to do so they want to pay as little compensation as possible, and therefore the incentive is if possible to find jobs for the workers—not put them on compensation.

Mr. Johnson answered me thus:

Congressman, the United States Employment Service here in Washington would like to continue to be in a position to have sufficient authority to emphasize down there in the State that the major factor in this problem is finding jobs for folks and not paying them a check.

Mr. JUDD. What do you mean, "have the authority"?

Mr. JOHNSON. The over-all supervision, on a national level, and all the Federal aspects of it. We would just like to be in a position to insist. Of course, the authority is in the State legislatures.

Mr. JUDD. That is where we thought we put it. We did not know we left it in your hands.

Mr. JOHNSON. "Authority" was probably an ill-advised word. I mean we would like to be in a position where we can urge and insist.

And then the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], with his genial smile, put it: "You mean sound suggestions that would be followed."

You see what those men in the States are up against from Washington. That is why they came down here to protest the President's plan. All of those who were willing to speak, except one, said they favored this resolution. We asked why some of the others did not. Mr. Reilon told us on pages 197 and 198 of the hearings that 33 of the State administrators thought both services should be in the Federal Security Agency:

Four thought they should be consolidated but considered that they should be neutral, and I may say that in the light of certain circumstances in their own States, they preferred not to say where it should be. Four were of the opinion that they did not want to say anything.

All of those who were willing to speak out their mind, with one exception, felt that the two functions should be together and that control should be kept in the States.

That is the crux of the matter. If we want to keep control of unemployment compensation and employment services in the States, where we returned them last November, then we should defeat this reorganization plan. I ask all who so believe to vote "aye" on the pending resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress does not favor the Reorganization Plan No. 2 of May 1, 1947, transmitted to Congress by the President on the 1st day of May 1947.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DONDERO, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration House Concurrent Resolution 49, against adoption of Reorganization Plan No. 2 of May 1, 1947, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution do pass.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution to its passage or rejection.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-four Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 77]

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and to include extraneous matter.

Mr. FORAND asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution from the State of Rhode Island General Assembly.

Mrs. NORTON asked and was granted permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Jersey Journal.

Mr. MONRONEY asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks and include a speech.

Mr. EBERHARTER asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article on the subject of taxes which appeared in the Journal of Commerce of New York today.

Mr. KLEIN asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address by Mayor William O'Dwyer.

INFORMATIONAL SERVICE, STATE DEPARTMENT

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3342, to enable the Government of the United States more effectively to carry on its foreign relations by means of promotion of the interchange of persons, knowledge, and skills between the people of the United States and other countries, and by means of public dissemination abroad of information about the United States, its people, and its policies.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3342, with Mr. JENKINS of Ohio in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on Friday, June 6, the Clerk had read down to line 18 on page 2. There was pending a committee amendment to strike out the language on lines 4, 5, and 6, page 2, which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 4, after the words "United States to" strike out the balance of line 4, all of line 5, down to and including the words "and to" on line 6.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 2, line 7, after the word "and" insert the word "of."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "peace," strike out the words "by means of" and insert "and to correct misunderstandings about the United States in other countries. The means to be used in achieving these objectives are—"

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion offered by Mr. MASON: Mr. MASON moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, we have a bill before us with 21 pages. There is only one page and three lines that deal with this broadcasting system. All the rest of the bill deals with other matters. Some of them I consider very foolish and very undesirable from the standpoint of America.

I call your attention to page 15, paragraph 3, which reads:

Under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, to pay the transportation expenses, and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses, of citizens or subjects of other countries, without regard to the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the Subsistence Act of 1926, as amended—

I wonder why we should pay a greater per diem to citizens of other countries than we allow to our own governmental employees? The bill goes on to say—provide for planned travel itineraries within the United States by groups of citizens or subjects of other countries, to pay the expenses of such travel, and to detail, as escorts of such groups, officers and employees of the Government, whose expenses may be paid out of funds advanced or transferred by the Secretary for the general expenses of the itineraries.

Why should we invite groups to come here from other countries, pay their travel expenses all over the United States to take in the beautiful scenery we have to show; to pay them per diem expenses and to assign Government employees as escorts to go around with them and show them the beauties? I do not see any sense in that at all.

Then again on page 16 it reads:

To provide for, and pay the expenses of, attendance at meetings or conventions of societies and associations concerned with furthering the purposes of this act when provided for by the appropriation.

What societies? Why, it might be the Political Action Committee or any other committee; and we are to pay the expense of their attendance at conventions.

I say that this bill in its present form is absolutely unsound and that we should strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take the 5 minutes because I believe the members of the committee are of one mind, that we should discuss this bill intelligently, section by section, so that we can find out exactly what is in it and not simply jump around from page 1 to page 15, to page 17, and quote a few sentences out of context and try to draw conclusions in that fashion.

We propose to read the bill section by section, to discuss the details of it and try to make clear to you all that is in the bill. Then we will ask you to vote up or vote down those sections after you understand them.

I would like to say just this before closing: I do not believe this Committee and this Congress are going to vote to send this bill back to the committee without real consideration, a bill of this significance which has been studied as carefully as this has been through hearings which in their beginning date back as far as 2 years. It has been carefully scrutinized by the subcommittee, it has been studiously considered by the full committee. It passed both committees unanimously. It has the support of every responsible American in government charged with defending this country in time of war or in promoting and protecting our peace, including Secretary of State Marshall and all his assistant secretaries, including Gen. Bedell Smith, our Ambassador to Russia, and including General Eisenhower himself, who came before the committee to testify that this is of great importance to him as our Chief of Staff in this troubled world.

I ask the Committee to vote down this preferential motion so we can proceed with the business before us.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 86, noes 109.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. MUNDT and Mr. MASON.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 92, noes 119.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FULTON: Page 2, line 18, after section 2, subsection 3, insert a new subsection 4, as follows:

"(4) the dissemination abroad of public information about the United Nations, its organization and functions, and the participation of the United States as a member thereof."

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I will speak briefly on this amendment. This amendment adds a new subsection 4 on page 2 under the objectives of the act. The amendment permits the dissemination abroad of public information about the United Nations, its organization and functions, and the participation of our Nation in that organization.

One of our troubles so far has been that we have not had adequate information given of the position of the United States in dealing with international affairs. We know there are many people in the United States who are confused as to our position, so you can realize how much confusion there is abroad. This will also show to the countries of the world that this particular kind of broadcasting is just not to be patting ourselves on the back, but it is to be a factual and comprehensive function. Under the bill with this amendment, we are to explain the relations of the United States, both within and without the country, as they deal with other countries, and I therefore ask that this amendment be adopted.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that the gentleman has discussed his amendment with the members of the subcommittee, and the subcommittee is perfectly willing to accept it.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, we concur in the gentleman's amendment insofar as this side of the aisle is concerned.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] tells us that we ought to read this bill paragraph by paragraph and offer amendments if we do not like it. In the next breath he says the committee has been considering this proposed legislation for 2 years, or at least holding hearings. Now he comes along and wants to add a new section to the bill, all of which proves what? Apparently that they do not know what they really desire. They do not know how bad it is. Amendments cannot cure the evil it will do.

Every Member of this House who has been here over one term knows very well that once you create a new agency or once you let a department get its finger in on a new activity you cannot stop them—never. It grows and grows—calls for more and more money and employees, and always more power. Over before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments we are holding hearings and considering the writing of a new merger bill for the armed forces and creating a Secretary of National Defense. The purpose of that is to provide for the security of this country, putting in a new member of the Cabinet who is to have control—and that is one part of the bill—over our national production. He is to coordinate all of our resources and industries. A Board is to make an estimate of our national resources; it is to find out what we have and what we are short of—critical materials, I assume. It is to get the whole economic productive machine ready for war if and when it comes.

What has that to do with this? Under this bill, if you will refer to it, you will notice it provides that the Secretary of National Defense—oh, no, no, no; the Secretary of State—you know what kind of a department we have down there, and I do not care who is head of it—there is no indispensable man, there is no man who knows everything—under this bill, the Secretary of State can spend as much of this money as he wishes in as many different ways as he wishes—doing what? Bringing in men from outside, bringing them into our factories, teaching them or permitting them to learn our processes, our methods, our secrets of production—discovering how it is that we in time of stress can produce more of the things necessary to defend ourselves in time of war than all the other nations combined, as we did in the last war—and become as Churchill said, the greatest power in all the world.

By this bill you are putting in the hands of the Secretary of State and his outfit down there, the outfit that has harbored the Reds in the last 10 years, who had them inside, putting it in the power of the Department of State to bring over from abroad the agents of other countries and turn them loose in our industrial world to learn our processes, how we do things, how we get mass production, how we make things better than they do. How do you like that kind of a procedure? What is the use of the Secretary of State, General Marshall, if you please, what is the use of his coming before our committee and asking for a bill to provide for the national defense, for a unification of the armed services, and then have the Secretary of State come in here and ask us to appropriate, as he will later, some thirty-odd million dollars to bring over these people from other nations, the agents of other countries, who are or soon may be our enemies, and put them on the inside where they can drag out everything that we know about production and about processing, all of those things which have brought us into the position where we are as we are today, the most powerful nation in all the world?

What is the use, what is the sense, where is the judgment that says to us that we should hand with this bill to the Secretary of State and his representatives the key to all our secrets, the combination to our industrial safe, and put in the hands of Russia or the countries which it controls the ability to compete with us for the very things both in quality and quantity which will make us secure in the years to come? Why do we not be sensible, why do we not be consistent? Why, as I stated the other day—and I say to you gentlemen, I saw some of you gentlemen from California—you were asked to vote, and many of you did vote, because the leadership of the Republican Party asked you to do so, to cut appropriations—sure you did—for the things that your people wanted, for the things they should have when we have the money, and now be asked to vote some of those same dollars to aid the skilled agents of other nations unlock the doors, now closed, which enable us to make ourselves secure. Now the same people ask you to turn around here and vote for a bill which will give millions of dollars to an agency of this kind, which judged by its past will give away our national shirt.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to H. R. 3342 which provides for a program of information and educational exchanges between the United States and foreign countries.

It is but another piece of futile patchwork in an already haphazard pattern of foreign policy. The very fact that we are willing to engage in a radio contest with the Russians, upon the merits of our respective systems of government, and upon the question who won the war, shows the lengths we have been driven from our course in seeking a just peace.

According to its sponsors, the bill has two primary objectives. First, to promote mutual understanding between the people of the United States and the people of other countries by the free exchange of information and of persons and skills, which it is claimed will contribute immeasurably toward the promotion of world peace. And second, to correct misunderstanding and misinformation about the United States which exists in other parts of the world. It is estimated that up to $31,000,000 a year will be spent for this purpose under the direction of the Secretary of State.

It is contended that it is to our national interest and advantage to "sell the United States" by means of radio broadcasts directed to other countries through which we would advertise the virtues of our brand of democracy and our free enterprise system.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is further proof of the complete frustration of the leaders of our bipartisan foreign policy and their inability to determine where we are going next. This country fought and won two world wars in the last generation in order that people and governments everywhere might be free. What these wars cost our own people in lives and money needs no reiteration. But in spite of this sacrifice—in spite of the fact that our soldiers fought and died in all parts of the world—in spite of the fact that we have poured untold billions of our substance for the relief of people everywhere—it is still asserted that we are a "misunderstood Nation" and to eliminate this "misunderstanding" we must use the radio to broadcast our virtues to the world. We must sell America over the air.

In the light of contemporary history, Mr. Chairman, with due respect to its sponsors, I assert that this proposal is unadulterated folly.

Who sold America to the Pilgrims and the countless millions who followed them to America from every country on the face of the globe in the last 2 centuries. Who sold America to the troubled and oppressed peoples of every land who have constantly sought refuge in the United States? Surely in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries their information about American freedom didn't come to them by short wave radio or through the interchange of professors and students. No, Mr. Chairman, they came here—and will continue to come here—because for more than 200 years—even in the remotest corners of the earth—people have known that the United States meant freedom in the fullest connotation of the term. Things which are self-evident require no proof. That the United States, its people and its institutions, are still free is a statement not susceptible to rational dispute. That the United States, and its people, desire a just and decent peace for all nations—in spite of any foreign policy we have followed up to now—is also incontrovertible. Neither 10,000 radio denials from the Kremlin at Moscow, nor 10,000 radio reiterations sent back to Moscow, can change these indisputable facts.

Yet we go on with these experiments. Frustration follows bewilderment and so we accept one expedient after another—hoping against hope that we may hit upon a solution. But somehow—no matter how many side excursions we take—we come back to the big unsolved question—what can we do to stop the Russians. Is there any sensible citizen in this country today, not addicted to wishful thinking, who believes that what we may say over the radio to foreign countries will have any appreciable effect upon the Russian program of aggression. Is there any reasonable citizen who believes that by exchanging students and professors we can dissuade Stalin from his course of expanding totalitarianism? Nevertheless, we grasp at this straw. We take this action so it can be said we are doing something to stop communism. It matters not that the proposal is visionary, impractical and ineffective. It matters not where we go as long as we are going somewhere.

No, Mr. Chairman, this problem of Russian domination cannot be solved by halfhearted and futile gestures such as this. Radio broadcasts and exchange of information may have their proper places in world enlightenment, but our problem today is too important and too vast to experiment in this makeshift manner. The problem of Russian expansion cannot be solved piecemeal. It is one big inseparable job. It must be assessed in its entirety and treated in its entirety. Measures of this type only add to the futility and confusion. They mislead the people. The only real way to meet the issue is to tell the American people the whole truth. W should base all future action on their verdict. Nothing less will ever suffice.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, with no hesitation, I shall support H. R. 3342. My service with the armed forces in India, Burma, China, and throughout southeast Asia, as well as in Europe, and my continuing interest and study of the current international scene have indelibly impressed upon me the great need that confronts us today to make our democratic way of life better known throughout the world. The position of leadership which this Nation now occupies, whether by chance, choice, or compulsion, has focused the eyes of all peoples upon us. All over the world there is a hunger for news regarding the United States, its institutions, and activities, and in many areas an eagerness for closer and broader relations between their peoples and ours. If we do not offer a full and fair picture of our purposes, our programs, and our objectives, both at home and abroad, others will, and with misinterpretation, distortion, and falsehood. That campaign of misinformation is right now being waged relentlessly.

In a recent typical week, the world was told that the American policy in Germany seeks to effect "an imperialist peace, based on the enslavement of nations"; that "American policy in the Far East is one of world conquest"; that we are making a colony out of the Philippines; that we are launching a race of armaments; that the Turkish Army is secretly being run by American and British agents; that the income of workingmen in this country has declined by 50 percent. Only truth can furnish an antidote for such false propaganda.

This bill would make it possible for us to tell our story and to combat the falsehoods regarding us which are now so widespread and subversive of a stable world order. It would enable us to satisfy the desire of other peoples for closer and broader educational, technical, and professional relations with the United States. It would enable us to use every legitimate means to project understanding and good will abroad—radio broadcasts, news bulletins, documentary films, books, and libraries, and the interchange of students, trainees, teachers, professors, technical and professional leaders, and specialists.

I call attention especially to these last activities partly because I have given them some study and partly because the most vigorous attacks by the opponents of this measure seem to have been centered upon this particular activity. It is dealt with in title II of this bill. No one who is acquainted with the Boxer indemnity program of years ago will doubt the lasting value, political as well as educational, of the interchange of persons, knowledge, and skills which is embraced within title II of this legislation. You will remember that our Government turned back money paid to it as indemnity by China, on condition that those funds be used to pay the expenses of Chinese students in this country. Many of these scholars have returned to China to form the closest to a democratic nucleus which can be found in that country. That program is in large measure responsible for the fact that the Chinese know us and we know them better than any other Asiatic country.

Moreover, Federal interest and support of such interchanges is not novel. As I understand it, this proposed bill is in affect, simply an extension of the Act for Cooperation with the Other American Republics under which programs of educational and technical interchange have been conducted by the Department of State since 1939. The beneficial results of that program are indications of the value of this type of activity, not only in terms of mutual understanding, but also for realistic business relations. Students brought to the United States from South and Central America have, within a very few years, attained positions of influence and prominence in their own countries, where they have been able to, and have in fact, sown the seeds of understanding and friendship between our country and theirs.

One graduate student in economics was called home to Paraguay to become Minister of Commerce; another returned to Guatemala to become Minister of Finance and now is the president of the national bank. Under this proposed bill such programs would be extended to other areas of the world.

It is true that many nongovernmental institutions and organizations have done splendid work in international interchanges in the past. More of such activities, however, are needed, and it is precisely to help such institutions, to assist them with their problems and to aid them financially, when necessary, that this bill is proposed.

For that reason I am particularly pleased to observe that section 403 and, especially, section 906 of the measure before us make it a definite matter of policy that the Secretary of State shall utilize to the fullest the advice, services, and facilities of private agencies in carrying out the provisions of the act. If anything, I hope that the language of section 906 may be strengthened by amendment, which I understand will be offered. I feel strongly that these private agencies should be affirmatively encouraged to continue and enlarge the valuable work which they have undertaken.

The interchange program of the organizations and agencies which the Secretary would use should be determined upon the advice of the outstanding technical and professional leaders of this country. The American way of life has provided maximum encouragement of private initiative in the promotion of professional and technical development, with the Federal Government extending, assisting, and supplementing such activities only when necessary. This principle, so well recognized in our domestic activities and institutions, is, by section 906, carried over into our international relations. It thus insures that the program to be developed under the proposed bill will not be construed as the assumption by the Federal Government of activities which properly belong elsewhere, but rather as positive, active, but supplementary assistance in encouraging the American people to speak effectively and directly to other peoples of the world.

There are no doubt other amendments which may contribute to improve this legislation in detail. But certainly the Committee on Foreign Affairs has presented to us here the broad outlines of a measure which deserves the support of all of those who believe that this Nation cannot, with safety or security, or in its own enlightened self-interest, retreat into a smug, self-satisfied, comfortable shell and ignore the responsibilities—yes, the expenses and national deprivations, if you will—of world leadership, and that the true destiny and immortal greatness of this land we love, as well as its welfare and probably its survival, lie along the path of acceptance rather than evasion of this manifest destiny, and that a most important step in the fulfillment of the role which is ours is to instill in the minds and hearts of our brothers across the sea a true picture of the lofty ideals, the benign motives, and the friendly objectives of our incomparable democracy. Around the globe the weary, the hungry, the frightened cup their ears to catch the voice of America. If we still that voice, if we disregard their yearning, they will turn to those who will eagerly seize the opportunity to substitute distortion for fact.

With an abundance of evidence available that an informational vacuum abroad will be filled, if we are silent, by those unsympathetic, if not hostile, to the interests of my country, without impugning in any degree the motives of those who may differ, I must cast my vote as I sincerely believe the best interests of this Nation and the world dictate, and with emphatic earnestness, urge upon my colleagues approval of this measure.

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot accept this bill as it is now written. This does not mean that I do not have full respect for and confidence in this committee. I can swallow one dose of medicine, no matter how unpalatable it may be, but I cannot take the entire medicine cabinet and the cabinet all in one single gulp. This is not, as I read this bill, the Voice of America. I find no objection to that. Let me say something else, that if this committee were administering this act I could throw many of my doubts into the wastebasket. If this committee were supervising and administering this act I would go along perhaps with the thing in it which says you can build public works in a foreign country if it is accessory to the demonstration of our technique. I could go along with this exchange of professors. I can say that I can think of some that I would exchange permanently with nothing to boot, if this committee were going to do the picking. I could go along with the provision of inviting organizations and groups into this country and paying their expenses if this committee, with its discrimination, were going to do the choosing. I can say further that I could go along with this provision that provides that we shall pay for the entertainment of these people, no matter how many or who they are, or the type of entertainment because I know this committee is made up of men of temperance.

Perhaps my trouble is this, lack of feeling of confidence in some branches of this Department of State. Last year I sat on a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate the circumstances surrounding the theft of hundreds of our secret documents out of the Department of State files. Those documents were taken by men within and delivered to men without, which is the essence of conspiracy. The FBI arrested a man in New York, a man of Russian birth and of doubtful loyalty, and they found 267 of these documents in his possession. One man testified before this committee that the possession of one in particular was a threat against our security. Three of those men were arrested. One of them received a fine of $500; another a fine of $500; and a third a fine of $2,500, only by the benign special prosecutor of our Department of Justice, who accepted those fines.

Let me say further that one of the men in this country today, who spent his spare time with these culprits who were taking these documents while we were still fighting Germany and Japan, I understand is today in our Diplomatic Service.

So, if I am a little bit skeptical about some branches of this Department of State it is because of the reasons here given you. We sat through weeks investigating this proposition, and we found that while Germany was still fighting us our secret documents were taken out and carried to New York and delivered to somebody there. Mr. Chairman, it does disturb me more than a little that there is no assurance that men of the character of the distinguished membership of this subcommittee will adminster this proposed statute.

No. I say we need a surgeon on this bill and I am awaiting with confidence that distinguished legislative surgeon, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], who will be along in a minute.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I arise to express my opposition to many of the provisions of H. R. 3342 which purports to provide for the exchange of persons, knowledge, and skills between the people of the United States and other countries and for other purposes. Briefly, it provides:

First. That we exchange teachers, scientists, skilled mechanics, machinists, other workers, and exchange of persons holding official positions.

Second. To exchange students, educational facilities, construct schools, industrial plants.

Third. Provide materials for the carrying on of this broad and world-wide program.

Fourth. It is claimed by the proponents of this program that it will cost annually more than $30,000,000. It is pointed out, however, by those who have made a careful study of this program that if the program is carried out as provided in this bill it may cost as much as $80,000,000 annually.

Fifth. It contemplates carrying on a broadcasting program between this country and other countries of the world. It is urged that we should adopt this program in order to acquaint the people of other nations with our form of Government and the American way of life and express our friendship and interest in them.

We made heavy contributions of blood and treasure in helping to win World War I. Following the war we loaned to the Allied Nations billions of dollars, nearly all of which loans have since been repudiated. We sent our armed forces to Europe and to other parts of the world in helping to win that war. In World War II we sent approximately 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 men and women of our armed forces to Europe, Asia, and to almost every part of the world. More than 300,000 of our fine young men and women gave their lives and we are now paying compensation for disabilities to more than a million who served in that war and received disabilities. We spent approximately $340,000,000,000.

Since the close of the war in Europe our Government, relief organizations, and many relief groups, churches, and welfare organizations have turned over to the people of Europe, Asia, and Africa more than $18,000,000,000. The people of the various countries of the world that would be the beneficiaries of this legislation have had opportunities to see Americans, their way of life, and America in action in furnishing men in battle, supplies, and relief. If we have not by these sacrifices in blood and treasure proved to the people of the world what we stand for and our friendship for the people of the world, how can we hope to accomplish that by the program provided for in this bill?

There are many provisions of this bill that are objectionable to me and I believe to a majority of the Members of this House. In my honest opinion it will do much more harm than it will good. We have been told that the chief purpose of this bill is to reach the people of countries that have been and are dominated now by totalitarian governments and especially those dominated by Communists. This, of course, means Russia and her satellite nations.

BOLSHEVISM AND COMMUNISM

Mr. Chairman, when I first came to Congress in 1919, there was a great political and social upheaval in Russia and a number of the Balkan States. The Bolshevists murdered the Czar of Russia and his family and took over. They were considered dangerous to the peace of the world. They developed into what we now call Communists. Congress passed laws against bolshevism and communism and we have almost every year since that time passed laws to strengthen our laws against communism so that as our laws stand today, an alien person who has at any time been a Communist cannot come into this country and our laws provide for the deportation of aliens in this country who are now or have been Communists.

Why did we pass these stringent laws against communism? Because our high courts and other officials finally came to the conclusion that the avowed purpose of communism is to overthrow this Government by force and violence.

Now, the bill before us proposes to exchange teachers and students taking postgraduate courses between this country and other countries, and a number of countries are now under the control of Russia and the communistic philosophy of government, industry, agriculture, and education. Of course, the Communists despise our form of government. They are opposed to our form of worship and as I understand, are opposed to religious instruction or the practices of religion. So, here today, we are called upon to make a breach in our immigration laws and our restrictions as to communism and other subversive groups and open up the gates and invite them to come in and give to them entry to our schools, our colleges, our other institutions, and our industrial plants. Not only do we invite them to come in but we pay their expenses to come to this country. We pay at least a part of the salaries of these professors and teachers who will come to our schools, colleges, and universities and allow them $10 a day for subsistence and we also pay the transportation of students coming into this country from other countries and we give them more subsistence than we allow our GI's in taking their training under the GI bill of rights and, strange to say, we also pay the transportation and other expenses of our teachers, students, and others in going to these foreign lands and while in these foreign lands.

Some have urged that these professors and students will not come from communistic and other subversive groups. The Communists and other subversive groups always find a way to get into our country. In the first place, in nearly all of the foreign countries, persons could not leave those countries and come to the United States without the approval of their governments. Will the governments of these countries that participate in this program be willing to send teachers, professors, and postgraduate students to our country that will favor the political, economic, and religious ideals of the people of the United States? Will they let persons come to this country to denounce their form of government and advocate our form of government? If they should send some one of that type to this country, do you think they would permit them to return to Russia or the country dominated by Russia and tell the people of their own country of the superiority of our form of government, our private enterprise system, the superiority of our schools and other activities of our people?

This proposal does not make sense. This bill does not apprise the Congress or the American people of the amount of money involved. It is a blank check covering the world. It does not limit the powers of those who will carry it out. Their power will be almost unlimited. For instance, section 203 gives the Secretary of State the right to provide assistance to schools, libraries, and community centers in foreign countries. Section 204 authorizes the Secretary of State to provide for the development and demonstration of better methods for teaching the English language abroad. Section 202 authorizes the Secretary of State to provide for exchange between the United States and other countries of books and periodicals. Section 301 provides for the assignment of specialists of other countries to the United States. Section 302 gives special allowances. It does not spell out the nature and extent of these special allowances. It provides that these foreign professors, scientists, technicians and students, as well as others, to be taken about over this country at the expense of this Government and hold conferences and other meetings. It gives to them entry into our schools, colleges, universities, and into our industrial plants, coal mines, and so forth. In other words, they will have more encouragement and greater freedom in going about over this country than the average American citizen has.

They will know all about our country and let us bear in mind that those who will come here will be the most alert and intelligent of the citizens of the countries from which they come. Perhaps, in some instances it may turn out to be helpful, but it may turn out as it did after World War I. We held out the olive branch to the German people and provided for these exchanges somewhat along the same line as provided in this bill but not on such an extensive scale. These Germans came to our country and they made the most of their opportunities. They gathered confidential information. They took pictures and acquired knowledge in every line of activity in this country and we found out when World War II came on that Germany was the best informed about the United States, its weaknesses as well as its strength, of any other nation in the world. Because of the disturbed condition of the world at this time, I believe that under this program we will find out later on that those who come here will acquire more information and knowledge about our country than did the Germans, and this knowledge may be used against us. I wish to repeat that, no doubt, in some cases the right sort of people may come, but I am apprehensive, and I am sure that the American people, too, generally, if they knew what is proposed in this bill, would be apprehensive.

DANGERS AND BURDEN

I have pointed out some of the dangers to our country in carrying out this program. It means a heavy burden to the already overburdened taxpayers of America. This program, in my opinion, will cost at least $50,000,000 annually and this is merely a beginning. How many of these professors, scientists, technicians, and students taking postgraduate courses will remain in this country? There is nothing in the bill that limits their stay here. It is provided in the bill that they can be deported if they are found to be undesirable. These persons cannot always be easily apprehended. It is against our laws for an alien to get into this country if he is a Communist or to remain here, but the fact is they do get in and remain.

Enormous sums of money are spent each year by our Government in efforts to track these Communists down. Of course, they deny that they are Communists and it is difficult to prove. We have discovered that many Communists have been occupying and it is believed that many others still occupy key positions in our Government in violation of our laws. President Truman recently felt so much apprehension about the Communists holding office in our Government that he asked the Congress to appropriate $50,000,000 to pay the expenses of the FBI and other agencies of the Government to investigate those who were believed to be Communists.

The American people have demanded that we cut down and not increase the expenses of Government and the Congress, in trying to meet the demands of the American people, have made substantial cuts, not that they desired to deny benefits to our own people but in order to make our Government financially sound. We have denied Federal aid for our schools and other benefits. We have an admitted indebtedness of approximately $260,000,000,000. The interest on this debt alone is approximately $5,000,000,000 a year. We have the highest per capita debt and the highest per capita tax of any leading Nation of the world. Why should we now enter upon this world-wide program? No one knows what it will cost and no one knows how greatly it may harm our country. It is urged that we should exchange broadcasting programs with foreign countries. That would not reach the people of Russia and her satellite nations. In the first place they do not have many radios and these governments determine to a large extent those who may hear these broadcasts from the United States. However, we have millions of radio sets and our people would certainly hear plenty about the glories and wonders of communism, nazism, and other subversive political ideologies. We have had exchange of broadcasts for some time. They have built up an enormous bureaucracy and it has cost the American people tremendous sums of money without apparent or tangible results.

If this program is to be put on, there should be vital changes from what it now is. Believing that the program set out in this bill will not only be expensive but will be dangerous to our country, I am constrained to express my opposition.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on section 3 of title I and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HARLESS] is recognized.

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, it seems foolhardy for us to vote a total of $750,000,000, $400,000,000 for Greece and Turkey and $350,000,000 for central Europe rehabilitation, then stand silently by and not tell the people who will be benefited by these appropriations what our situation is through failure to pass this legislation.

I cannot understand why anyone would want to throw away money, literally down a rat hole, and not take advantage of the expenses we are going to incur by appropriations for the rehabilitation of Europe. It is literally not sound economy. Furthermore, if anyone would properly analyze our entire world situation, we want the rest of the world to know what we are doing about our educational system.

I heard many stories from veterans as they came back from the war that we were sending goods into France and into Germany, and that the people which were being benefited by these goods were not even informed as to what country they came from. I heard a reliable Member of this Congress refer to a lady who was in Paris 5 days after we arrived there. Truckloads of food rolled into Paris and written on the side of the truck was the name of another country as sending the goods into Paris. She looked inside the trucks and the trucks contained American food, American brand canned goods, which had come from America.

I understand we sent 500,000 tons of wheat to France, and we never even told France we were sending it, and the people of France did not know it. Russia sent a mere 5,000 tons, and they had the brass band out telling them about it. I know that if anyone will analyze the situation, they will know that we want the rest of the world to know what we are doing.

I want to mention a situation here in America which we are not doing justice to. We put our heads in the sand. Less than a week ago I was among the Papago Indians of Arizona and New Mexico, and I can tell you about a place where there are 6,000 Papago Indians which this body recently cut off, and about 5,000 out of 22,000 school children are going to school, and we made a contract with them in 1868 that we would educate them; that we would furnish them 1 teacher for every 30 students. Next winter I estimate that between 3,000 and 5,000 of these people will starve to death because they cannot take care of themselves. I think we are acting mighty foolish here in many respects, and it makes my heart bleed when I see these Indians improperly cared for, and you are sitting here today and you are clipping us in a manner that will prevent us from sending information to the world just as you clipped those Papago Indians some 3 weeks ago when you cut down the appropriation for the Interior Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I think it is unfortunate that the committee did not bring in a bill that would provide for dissemination of knowledge of the United States by means of broadcasting. This bill is entirely too broad. A part of the first section of the bill is all right, and I can support that part of the bill, which reads:

To enable the Government of the United States more effectively to carry on its foreign relations by means of public dissemination abroad of information about the United States, its people, and its policies.

Now that means factual information about America.

This present bill is entirely too broad. It puts in the State Department functions that it should not be attempting, and if you look over the other sections of the bill, as someone has pointed out, it is not a bill to disseminate information through radio. I would like to vote for a bill to beam via radio information about America to other countries. I believe in that approach in selling America, and I think it ought to be done.

But read the bill on page 3; lines 11 and 12 state:

The Secretary may provide for orientation courses and other appropriate services for such persons from other countries upon their arrival in the United States.

Now, what are "other appropriate services"? That is pretty broad, is it not?

On page 6, line 4, and again on page 13, line 16, the bill provides for "representation allowances" and the furnishing of "official entertainment without regard to section 901 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946." Now, what are official allowances and official entertainment? Is it liquid refreshments?

Then, I read on page 14, line 14, that the bill permits $10 a day to entertain these people; to pay some of their expenses. To do what? To attend meetings and functions of societies. Now, that is not selling America, as I understand it. There are many similar provisions in the bill. I pointed out yesterday that there are 17,000 students now in the United States from all the different countries in the world going to our universities. Now that is a sizable number. I have here a letter from the State Department dated February 7 pointing out the number of individuals in the United States under nonquota provisions of the law.

Under the nonquota provision, since 1940, 188,678 people have come into the United States; last year, 47,297. Under the quota system, 39,144 came in in 1946. Most of the nonquota aliens are students, scientists, and individual businessmen looking at America. By the way, most of them are staying here, too, under the nonquota system. They are not going back.

Our universities are crowded today. In the last few weeks I have written seven letters to medical schools trying to get a worthy GI entered in medical school in 1948. I have heard from five universities and they are filled up for 1948. This young man cannot go to medical school unless he finds some place that wants to take him. I do not know how many of these students coming here want to go to medical schools or law schools or technical schools, but a great number of them would. We need housing in this country for our veterans. Why load up this country with a great many individuals from foreign countries? There are now 17,000 going to school. I welcome them. I think they are emissaries of good will and I hope as they go back to their own countries they will speak well of America. This bill might well double the number of alien students coming to our schools.

I shall offer a motion, at the proper time, to recommit the bill to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with the instructions to present a factual, interesting radio program to foreign countries about the United States, its people and its policies.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BOGGS].

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I feel somewhat like one of our people who signed a contract and thought he had a very fine deal until a few days later when he was looking over the contract he noticed some small print down at the bottom. I feel in that frame of mind because, like most everyone else, I am for spreading truth throughout the world and for creating and developing an appreciation of our free American system, but when I finally read this bill and heard the discussion on the floor, and then referred in detail to the testimony taken before the committee, I realized that what I was for was not contained in this bill; that we have gone far afield—not necessarily intentionally—from the precepts which we all cherish here in America.

When I refer to our free-enterprise system, our Federal, State, and individual responsibility under our system, I certainly do not mean to imply the horse-and-buggy days. I mean an effective, progressive, live America, effective in its cooperation with the rest of the world. But certainly this bill goes too far in many respects, which are now being made clear to the Members of the House.

For instance, we are placing the Federal Government, maybe only an inch and maybe only a yard, we do not know how far it will go, into the field of education. How far do we want to go in centralizing our educational system and placing a Federal influence and direction on that vital part of our free American system? I do not know whether we should place our Government too far in the field of publications in competition with a free press. I do not know how far we should permit our Government to proceed in the field of broadcasting.

If you will refer to the testimony before the committee, and if I had time I would give you the various citations here, you will note that even General Smith, our Ambassador to Russia, after indicating that cultural progress in Russia was by far ahead of the rest of the world in his opinion, accounted for it by saying the radio and press are controlled by the Government and are directing a strong effort toward increasing the cultural standards of those people, but that left unsaid, naturally his apparent implication, that we were behind because we were not following a similar program.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. OWENS].

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment briefly on some of the remarks that have been made by preceding speakers.

There has been some talk about education throughout the world and throughout the United States. For about 5 weeks I have been sitting as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor and listening to the testimony of those who desire Federal aid for education. I have noted that slightly over half of the States of the Union are asking for aid to education from the Federal Government because of the fact that they cannot furnish that aid themselves or cannot give the children of their States a proper education. Strangely, enough, the very States that need that aid have, in large part, been those that have been most forward in coming before the House and asking that we give aid to foreign nations.

It is true that I voted for the $350,000,000 appropriation for food and medicine for war-devastated countries, because I thought they needed it. Those States voted not only for that and also to give $400,000,000 to Turkey and Greece. Now they are following it up with this bill which comes, however, under Republican sponsorship. It has a dangerous tendency because while we are asked for $300,000,000 or more for this Federal aid to education, which will reach a billion dollars a year in a few years, we are being asked that this aid be given to foreign countries. If we do that, there is no question but that we will have to follow that by giving to all of those States this aid even before they have made any proof whatsoever that they need the aid.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OWENS. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You say that this bill comes to us under Republican sponsorship. Listen—I sat down here and counted the Members as they went down the aisle on a teller vote, and there were only 89 Republicans who voted to strike the enacting clause and only 53 voted the opposite way. It is not a Republican measure.

Mr. OWENS. The gentleman's meaning is very clear. Now, there is another point I want to make to you. I have just finished an investigation in the Central States with respect to schooling. I ask you to go into those schools and see some of the books and observe what is being taught to those children. I say we ought to devote our attention right now to going into our schools in the Nation and observe what is being taught to those children before we go over or invite people to come into our country and disseminate the same type of knowledge and put our stamp of approval on the things that are now being done in our schools.

When I heard the words that are being used here today such as "manifest destiny," I shudder. I have heard the words "manifest destiny" before. Those words brought us into a war at the close of the last century. They helped to bring us into the First World War. Let us stop this manifest destiny as the world leader and teacher. Let us think of America first.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OWENS. I yield.

Mr. SPRINGER. In some of our colleges the GI's who are seeking to secure an education have no opportunity of being admitted because of the in-rush of people coming to those colleges. That situation should be taken care of here and some of those things that our money is being wasted on in foreign countries certainly should be eliminated. Does the gentleman agree with that idea?

Mr. OWENS. I agree with the gentleman wholeheartedly. That should be the program along with the investigation of the schools. I make the charge that our State Department and our armed services are starting on a program to keep the control that they have had for years. They hate to give it up.

There are other portions of our Government here who would attempt to keep the same control. They do not want to give it up. They do not want to have the bureaucratic departments and employees thereof diminished. We ought to have an investigation of what has been done during the last 15 years.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OWENS. I yield.

Mr. BREHM. How does the gentleman reconcile the position of our State Department and some of our leaders in this country, who are advocating military conscription, going into an armament race with Russia now, with the position they are now taking of cooperation? If we are going into an armament race, as we certainly are, then why in the name of common sense do we need a program of this kind? They are absolutely at sword's points. Is that not correct?

Mr. OWENS. I agree with the gentleman. I do not believe there has been any thought whatsoever given to the matter. I believe it is just a question of going on and on, in an attempt to stop the economy program of the Republican Party. They are going to stop it any way they can. They will get us into war to stop it, just so that they do stop our program to balance the budget and establish real economy in our governmental operations.

It is my opinion that legislation such as that which is being proposed by the bill under discussion constitutes an apparently innocent, but nevertheless subtle and dangerous way to extend control and absolute control of our Federal Government. One of our noble founders, Thomas Jefferson, repeatedly warned us against such sinister methods of ending our great constitutional form of Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. OWENS] has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, the Master said, "Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent?"

As a matter of fact, our immigration laws keep millions of people out of this country. So that all these people who love America could not come over here if they wanted to. We keep them out. They would love to come in. They do not hate America. This is the only country in the world that is giving away anything. In the New York Times last Sunday they carried a chart of Europe showing exactly the amount of money that has been given by the United States since the end of the war to every foreign country—to Russia and to Russian satellite countries, and to other European countries. Millions of people throughout the world are hungry. They want bread. They do not want "baloney." They want to be fed. They do not want books, radio broadcasts, or hymns to be sung. I love to sing hymns, but there is a place for that. When people are hungry you cannot make them feel good by singing O, Beulah Land, or Bringing In the Sheaves. What they want is bread. If you are going to throw $31,000,000 into Europe, let us put it in bread. They will love you a lot more if you feed them.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to my friend.

Mr. KNUTSON. But of course that would not provide jobs.

Mr. BENDER. Well, it would for the bakers.

Last Sunday, John S. Knight, publisher of the Knight newspapers, in his Sunday editorial, had this to say about the alleged Voice of America:

> The conflict over the Voice of America still rages with Assistant Secretary of State William Benton marshaling added support for the Voice from an impressive committee of educators, newspaper editors, and industrialists.
> The concept of the Voice as a potent agency for promoting democracy throughout the world seems ludicrously naive, but then, when in recent years has American foreign policy been anything else?
> There is no substantiated proof that the Voice reaches any appreciable number of listeners in countries under Soviet domination. Still, our State Department seems impressed because Russia's chief propagandist, Ilya Ehrenburg, has taken some notice of it.
> A more practical view is expressed by Arthur Bliss Lane, former minister to Poland, who says that he considers it "tactless, to say the least, to attempt to educate these people in the American way of life, namely, democracy, when that very democracy has been deprived them through our action at Yalta, which has resulted in their domination by the Soviet Union."
> Mr. Lane suggests the money might better be spent in developing the personnel of the Foreign Service to the point where it could function adequately.
> Arguments by proponents of the Voice that Government appropriations for its "cultural" radio program are small in comparison to the millions spent by Procter & Gamble to sell soap to Americans fall pretty flat.
> Recent developments in Hungary prove rather conclusively that our brand of "soap" isn't selling in Russia these days.

It has been stated that so many of these countries do not know where these gifts are coming from. If you want to render a Christian service to the people of other lands, since we deny them entry, then feed them. Provide bread. Do you think a man's hunger will be appeased by a radio broadcast or by photographs of buxom maidens which appeared in Life magazine recently?

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. BREHM. Would the gentleman agree with me in what Ray Henley says, that there is bound to be continuous and endless confusion in the minds of our own people as to our objective and our purposes, so long as we talk international peace and cooperation every day before high noon, and talk about bristling armament and military training systems and conscription from high noon until midnight?

I say we are confused. Our leaders are confused in this country. You cannot have both. You cannot have this program of cooperation and talk of peace with an olive branch in one hand, and arm our boys with the other hand.

Mr. BENDER. Of course, we appropriated $400,000,000 to Greece and Turkey, and you know most of that is going to pay debts of Greece and Turkey and going into armament. It is not going for food. Do you think those foreign countries love America when we are implementing governments that they dislike, governments that they detest? Even singing on the radio to them or printing beautiful books will not change them.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mrs. BOLTON. I just wanted to remind the gentleman that man does not live by bread alone.

Mr. BENDER. Nor by radio broadcasts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may again be read for the information of the Members.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FULTON) there were—ayes 70, noes 51.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments to section 2, page 2, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. When used in this act, the term—

(1) "Secretary" means the Secretary of State.

(2) "Department" means the Department of State.

(3) "Government agency" means any executive department, board, bureau, commission, or other agency in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or independent establishment, or any corporation wholly owned (either directly or through one or more corporations) by the United States.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, in support of the contention made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. OWENS] I think it is well that we take time really to find out what the educational set-up is within the confines of the United States. I should be pleased to support certain parts of the pending bill. I believe in the Voice of America part of it, but I certainly do not subscribe to the Cook's tours that are involved. Nor can I understand why so many people have not been to school after these 14 years of the more-abundant life.

Take for instance the State of New Mexico about which our distinguished colleague spoke. According to the Census Bureau 27.3 percent of the people in New Mexico have never gone to school for over 5 years' time. We have many States where from 25 to 35 percent of the people have not attended school for over 5 years.

The table from the Census Bureau shows that the West, the Midwest and northern States have much higher percentage of education. By the way, Iowa is not only a great agricultural State but is a State, I may say to my colleagues where only 4 percent of the people have not been to school for more than 5 years. So I repeat it is not only a great agricultural State but it is also a great educational State.

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. TALLE. I wish to thank the very able gentleman from Wisconsin for paying tribute to my State; and will he not yield to me long enough to permit me to to say ever since the day statistics on literacy were first gathered in our country, Iowa has held first place.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, the table shows the regions where our educational need is the greatest. Every child born in America is entitled to educational advantages. From the national standpoint our obligation is to see that every child in America has somewhere near an eighth-grade education. I attended school with many of these lads from foreign countries and I presume all of you have. They came here under their own power. There are 17,000 of them here now in our schools. The professor- and student-exchange program has merit but we must not forget that over 40 percent of rural Americans never finish high school. I do not like to see any committee of this House bring in a bill that has so many different horses in it going in so many different directions. The Cook's Tours portion of the bill does not make sense. Why tax people that cannot afford or do not afford trips for their own children to royally entertain someone else?

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BREHM. The gentleman remembers that during the last few years when the war was on, another great committee of this House came into the well on three different occasions and told us that if we did not adopt a certain bill which they placed before us, a bill that had been recommended and that had been endorsed by certain great Army leaders, a bill that was endorsed by the State Department, the War Department, and Navy Department, we would lose the war. Three different times that hue and cry was raised and three times we turned them down, yet we won the war. This procedure is reminiscent of those days.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have seen a good many men come to this town on the great white horse, and I have seen the same ones leave on a Shetland pony dragging their feet on the ground.

I hoped the committee would divide the sections of this bill so they could be voted on in accordance to their merit. If they insist on covering so many fields it might be well to let the bill cool off, and bring in a bill that is not so all-inclusive.

The following official table from the Census Bureau indicates the necessity of consideration of legislation for general education:

Percent of population 25 years old and over completing less than 5 years of school, by States, in order of rank: 1940

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] quoted a little Scripture a few minutes ago and in all kindness I would also quote some at this time: "O ye of little faith."

When I hear men talk in the well of this House about students coming over here to America to go to our schools in exchange for students that go overseas, and oppose such a thing, I wonder if they have any faith in the principles of democracy, in the fundamental tenets of our country. Those people come here from those far off destitute lands with their slave psychologies and their oppression. I wonder if they think about those people when they come over here and mingle with the American students, see the standard of living that we have, the freedom of expression, the lack of oppression and all of those things; I wonder why you are afraid to have these people come over here?

Mr. BREHM. Because they will want to stay here and attempt to disseminate their ideologies to the detriment of our people.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. They have to go back under the immigration and naturalization laws. They are only here for the purpose of student training.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS. There is an awful lot of excitement over this student business, which is unwarranted. There are only 377 students involved, all of them postgraduates. The whole program is $250,000 for this year. And while some of the hearts of the gentlemen here bleed for fear we may bring in Communists, in the whole program there has never been an exchange of students with Soviet Russia. None have gone there and none have come over here.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I want to bring in some information at this point which is parallel with the information the gentleman gave, only in reverse.

I called up the Veterans' Administration this afternoon and asked them how many American veterans are studying in European universities and I find out that as of April 30 there were 1,492 American veterans studying under the GI bill of rights in 239 foreign universities in 34 different countries. Remember those are veterans only. In addition to that we have hundreds, yes, thousands, of American GI's who are taking advantage of the fact they are in Europe and near these universities and through the Army's educational program they are also attending those universities. I called up the State Department and that Department tells me that between 5,000 and 6,000 American civilians are over there going to school at this time.

In addition to that, 5,000 are leaving—some leaving this week and some will leave next week—for short-term courses over in Europe. First, let me stop there and say that about 15,000 American students are over there in those categories, and, in addition to that 11,000 American students have signified to the State Department their intention of going overseas and taking postgraduate courses in the European universities.

Now, again, I say to you, in conclusion, have we anything to be afraid of in allowing these people to come over here? Are you actually in your hearts afraid they are going to convert American democracy into communism or to fascism after the struggles and privations and hardships that they have been through in the last few years? I have more faith in the fundamental strength of the principles of democracy and the standard of living in our country than to think that those people can come over here and convert us. I wager you, if anything, the conversion will be on the other side of the fence, and that we will show these people who never had a chance to see what a free-enterprise economy can do, where civil rights are protected, and to see how it really works. I say that we will bring the light that will work miracles in their lives, and I think they will go back to their countries with a message, and they will have to whisper that message, because they have been living in fear of the dreaded police, but that whisper will spread, and the principles of freedom and liberty will grow in those countries where they are now interchanged. I have no fear of these interchanges.

I say to those that do have fear: "O ye of little faith."

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if we cannot agree on a time limit. I suggest that we close debate on this section, as it is not a subject that is controversial. I wonder how many want to be heard on the section now under consideration, the last section of title I?

If no one desires to speak, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate now close on section 3, title I, so that we can read the next section of the bill.

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I was standing and I thought the Chairman had recognized me.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to speak on this section?

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BOGGS].

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak again, because this bill vitally concerns me. I was interested in the remark just made by our colleague, the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD]. He would have you think that we are not in favor of exchanging students with foreign countries; that we are afraid to bring people to our country to study and appreciate the institutions which we have. Certainly that is not my view.

I went to school for 4 years at the University of Delaware with exchange students. Our university since 1924 has been carrying on such a program on a local level, under its own authority, and the students of our country desiring to go abroad do so on their own initiative. Those students of foreign countries who desire to come to this country and go to the University of Delaware do so on their own initiative, and voluntarily. So, all of this authority for a student exchange program is merely to put it in the hands of the Federal Government. We have been doing it. The testimony of the Assistant Secretary of State indicates that. On page 12 of the hearings he referred at some length to the many officials of foreign countries throughout the world who were educated in America. Why should the Federal Government come in now and make it appear absolutely essential that we should give the Federal Government legislative authority to conduct a program which is not new but which has been carried on in the traditional American way for years?

When I came home I found that the various experts and authorities of the Government here had been awarded bronze stars and legions of merit for various gadgets and other things they had figured out for our boys overseas to do. In many instances I found that the boys in our outfit were doing just those things as a matter of course every day, and nobody paid any attention to it.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McDONOUGH. This bill would not deny the exchange of students with foreign countries. I think the House ought to understand that without the passage of this bill that would not be denied, because we are members of the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization. We became a participant in that and the last session of Congress voted it, and that is an exchange of students of foreign countries on a broad scale, broader than this bill provides, if that is possible. At any rate, we are not denying the exchange of students by any legislative act if we do not pass this bill.

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware. I thank the gentleman. I want to refer to page 11 of the hearings, where Under Secretary of State Acheson was speaking. He said this:

> Now I will turn to the rest of the program: One of the most important parts of this is the provision which extends to Europe and Asia, the cooperation between our Government and other governments.
> Do we need legislative action to extend cooperation to other governments of the world? It seems to me we have been doing that in our own American way ever since we have been the United States of America, when and if it was the proper thing to do.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. I want to correct the statement made by the gentleman from California about UNESCO. I know something about that organization, having introduced that legislation in the House. Although we belong to UNESCO, unless we have this exchange system set up under this program our membership in UNESCO is a paper membership only. This is to do something about it, to make the exchange of students which UNESCO seeks.

Mr. BREHM. If the gentleman will yield, does the gentleman know how many students are now going over under the Fulbright resolution?

Mr. MUNDT. Not as yet.

Mr. BREHM. Nine hundred.

Mr. MUNDT. We are just getting that program under way. We have some GI's going to school in Germany and Austria, and several boatloads are going over this summer.

Mr. BREHM. Nine hundred and eight according to my information are going tomorrow.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. OWENS. May I ask the gentleman from Delaware, who has spoken about the educational feature, whether that does not constitute a subtle, sinister way in which we will have Federal control, which was so well pointed out by one of our noble founders, Thomas Jefferson?

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware. In answer to that, before we vote on this bill I certainly do recommend that the Members read these hearings, not only for what is said but for what is not said in the various statements.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II—INTERCHANGE OF PERSONS, KNOWLEDGE AND SKILLS

PERSONS

SEC. 201. The Secretary is authorized to provide for interchanges between the United States and other countries of students, trainees, teachers, professors, and leaders in fields of specialized knowledge or skill. The Secretary may provide for orientation courses and other appropriate services for such persons from other countries upon their arrival in the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 9, after "teachers," insert "guest instructors."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 3, line 13, after "United States" strike out the period and insert a comma and the following: "and for such persons going to other countries from the United States. It is the sense of the Congress that the interchange program under this section shall be on a reciprocal basis so far as is practicable, and that when any country fails or refuses to cooperate in such program on a reasonable basis of reciprocity, the Secretary shall terminate or limit such program, with respect to such country, to the extent he deems to be advisable in the interests of the United States. If the Secretary finds that any person from another country, while in the United States pursuant to this section, is engaged in activities of a political nature or in activities not consistent with the security of the United States, the Secretary shall promptly report such finding to the Attorney General, and such person shall, upon the warrant of the Attorney General, be taken into custody and promptly deported in the same manner as provided for in sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of 1917, as amended."

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana as an amendment to the committee amendment: On page 3, line 14, after the period strike out the remainder of the line down to and including the period on line 21.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I am seeking here to eliminate the highly discretionary part of the committee amendment. Following this amendment I intend to offer an amendment to line 8, page 3, after the word "interchanges" to add the words "on a strictly reciprocal basis." It will be noted that the committee amendment practically leaves it up to the judgment of the State Department as to how many students, professors, and others come into this country under this bill. By this amendment striking out the discretionary part and by the following amendment which I propose to offer, I propose to make it mandatory that this interchange be handled on a strictly reciprocal basis. Otherwise, we will be swamped by invaders from Europe. The committee has repeatedly said that this bill places the interchange on a reciprocal basis, but if you will read the amendment offered by the committee, you will see that this is not true. To the contrary, the bill is, at most, only an expression of hope that the Department may keep it on a reciprocal basis, and there is nothing mandatory at all about it, clearly leaving it up to the discretion of the Department as to how many of these foreigners come in under this bill. We have men in many of our departments, and the State Department is not free from them, who would not be averse to breaking down our immigration bars and letting in great throngs of people from Europe and I do not want to give them that discretion. If you will vote to strike out of the committee amendment this wide discretion as I propose in my amendment and then if you will follow that up by making it mandatory, as I shall propose in my next amendment, then we will at least know what is going to happen under this section. What is wrong about putting this on a reciprocal basis? We are told that Russia has perhaps several thousands of persons in this country now in various capacities, while they say we have only two or three hundred over there. What is wrong about requiring Russia to let our people look over her country behind the iron curtain to the same extent as she is now doing over here?

I think if we are going to have this exchange of students and others, although I am not here advocating it, we ought to have some limit on the number of such who come here, and there is absolutely no limit in the bill as the committee has presented it and seeks to amend it.

The bill ought to be worded so as to fix some limit, or else make it strictly reciprocal. As it stands now, there is absolutely no limit at all. The sky is the limit. I do not think we ought to leave a hole in this bill as big as a ginhouse so that as many as want to and as many as the State Department might elect to have come in may do so. That is exactly what the bill does. Some little State Department employee overseas, mind you, might have it in his power to open the gates and let them in by the boatloads. It is not an answer to say that General Marshall will watch all that. He cannot see after everything. He has to depend upon subordinates.

I hope you gentlemen in the House who throughout the years have tried to maintain our immigration barriers and who have tried to sustain our immigration laws will support this amendment to the committee amendment and then support the next amendment I shall offer to not only remove the discretionary part, but make it absolutely sure that if this program of exchange is carried on, it will be done on a strictly reciprocal basis and not be left to the whim and discretion of State Department employees all over the world.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I do not have time to yield to the gentleman. I am very, very sorry. I wish I had the time. I would like to ask for more time, but the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], the author of the bill, has already served notice that he would object to any such requests made by anybody.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Immigration, I have for a good many years seen the fruits of people getting in here by the hundreds and by the thousands and I have observed how difficult it is—yea, impossible in many cases—to get them out. Twice I introduced bills to deport Harry Bridges and twice this House passed my bills and the bills never went through the other body, and Harry Bridges is still here. We will be up against this sort of situation. Many of these people who will come here will say, "We have no country to return to." Look at what has happened to Hungary in the last few days.

I think, therefore, that the reasonable thing to do, and the fair thing to do, if you are going to have this nation-to-nation exchange, is to do it on a basis of man for man, a 50–50 basis, a basis strictly reciprocal and not give one nation the right to send them over by the boatload while prohibiting our citizens a like privilege. Mind you, I am not here advocating the exchange, but I say if you are going to do it, that is the best way. That is the purpose of my amendment. It is directed to that end. I hope you will support that move because it is a move in the interest of our own country.

I am for sending information to foreign countries. I understood anyway that all General Marshall wanted was authority and money to send foreign broadcasts to Europe and other nations and continents. Well, I am for that. I have reached the conclusion that if it is properly done, by the right parties, it can be an instrument for good. I do not approve of the way it has been done entirely, but I hope the errors will be corrected. I am willing to vote him the authority and money to make such foreign broadcasts. But this bill goes far beyond that. It was not necessary to drag all these other features into this bill.

I support General Marshall thoroughly in his desire to broadcast to foreign countries, but I do not think it is necessary to go as far as this bill goes. Therefore I ask you to give me your cooperation in making it a reciprocal program, if we are to have the exchange at all, so that we will have the right to demand that they go 50–50 with us, make it strictly reciprocal, so that our people may learn as much about the inside of other countries as they are privileged to come here and learn about ours. How can we learn the truth behind the wall of secrecy in other countries if we let them come here and have them forbid us going there? My amendment will make it possible for us to peek behind their wall of secrecy. Why not do it? Of course, as I said, I am not arguing for any of them to come here, but if you are determined to have this exchange of persons, then by all means let it be reciprocal. My pending amendment and the next one I propose to offer will make the privileges and responsibilities on both sides the same, that is, strictly reciprocal. Any other course will be very unfair to our own country. My suggestions will cure some of the glaring defects in this bill—not all of them, however, There are others which I do not have time to discuss and the discussion would perhaps not be pertinent to my amendments. We can give General Marshall the authority he needs to do this foreign broadcasting and we can do it without breaking down the immigration bars.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN] has expired.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am heartily in sympathy with the objectives of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN], who has proposed it. However, to make interchange of students and professors on a strictly reciprocal basis raises some difficulties which I feel sure are not to our advantage. For instance, there are some nations in the world from which it is very important that we have scholars and students come to this country. Yet the universities in those countries, to which we might send students in return, have been destroyed, or they have never developed courses in English to the point where there would be any inducement or advantage for our students or professors to go there. Some of those countries are not very big, but they stand at vital crossroads of the world, or strategically they are very important. It is essential to the security of the United States that we have every possible favorable contact with them.

I think the gentleman will agree that the Secretary of State, General Marshall, is as mindful of the security of this country as any Member of this House, or a. any other American citizen. To refuse to give him any discretion whatsoever in allowing more students or professsors to go to certain important countries than can come here; or to refuse to allow students or teachers to come from some of those countries to the United States because they do not have universities or colleges which offer courses that would be of value or attractive to American students, would, it seems to me, defeat our own purposes, without any legitimate gain. Therefore, I hope very much that the gentleman's amendment will be defeated.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield.

Mr. VORYS. On this matter of exchange of professors, it does not amount to much. There were 45 professors exchanged last year. The total cost was $150,000. Of the 45, 38 were United States citizens who went abroad to teach. Seven were Latin-American professors who came to the United States. Every college or university abroad that receives a foreign professor under this program must pay the professor the agreed local salary for the professor. I think that those 38 going out and 7 coming in will show that reciprocity would not be to our advantage, when we can get institutions over the world to accept professors from this country on that basis. It might be that we would not have a place for the same number of professors back here. That is what strict reciprocity would mean. That is why I think the language in the bill is better. But the entire exchange program is not very big. It is a small part of this entire program.

Mr. JUDD. The gentleman will agree that sometimes in some small obscure country a genius, a man of the greatest ability, develops whose services would be of great value to the United States. We cannot wisely, in a flat prohibition, prevent making available to ourselves the contributions of such an individual. Genius does not depend on national origin or race. Men of genius may appear anywhere. We should not shut them out.

Mr. VORYS. There has never been any exchange of professors with the U. S. S. R., under this program; never.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. I would like to point out another reason why we should not accept the gentleman's amendment.

It strikes out important safeguards whereby we write into the bill authority to deport anybody in case of any political activity. I think that is a safeguard that should be retained.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. My amendment does not strike that out at all. I simply wanted to preserve that. Eisler came here as an expert, I understand.

Mr. JUDD. And so did Einstein, but they did not either one come under this program.

Mr. MUNDT. Eisler did not come here as an expert. He came here under the directions of Moscow.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be voted down, because I cannot see that it adds anything to the bill, or advantage to the United States, and it definitely reduces some of the real advantages of this section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] has expired.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] stated that 38 professors had gone from the United States to foreign countries and that 7 had come from foreign countries to the United States and that they were paid by the foreign countries for their services, yet the program cost only $150,000. Will the gentleman explain that to me? How did it cost American taxpayers $150,000 if their services were paid for by foreign countries?

Mr. VORYS. I attempted to explain it briefly. The State Department insists that every college or university which receives a foreign professor under this program must pay the professor the agreed local salary of the professorship. The Department then makes a grant to cover foreign travel. In the case of a professor going, let us say, from Columbia University abroad, who draws a salary of $7,000 at Columbia, but is sent to Brazil which would normally pay a salary of $3,000, the State Department makes up the difference in salary and pays the cost of the foreign travel.

This program is more expensive per head than the student program. The average cost of the student program is less than $700 a student. This, of course, costs more. You are dealing with a high class of individual. You are picking out not the worst, but the best, to send abroad, just as we are picking the best to bring here to come into our institutions.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREHM. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Is not the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] speaking about section 203, not the section we are now debating? Section 203, page 4, is the policy that has been in effect for the past year under the able leadership of Senator Davis, of Maryland.

Mr. VORYS. No; the only program I am talking about is under section 201, the interchange of students and teachers and professors. As I told you, the interchange of students cost $250,000, the interchange of professors $150,000. The students amount to 377; the professors to 45.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. I still think the gentleman is talking about section 203.

Mr. VORYS. The gentleman is still mistaken.

Mr. BREHM. Personally, I think this is a good deal for the professors. They are getting a nice trip with all expenses paid, getting the same salary in the foreign country wherever they may agree to go. It is a good deal for the professors. I have no doubt some Congressmen would like to take that trip also, get all their expenses paid, and continue to draw the same salary they draw in the United States see and travel abroad just in order to tell the rest of the world what wonderfully gullible folks we Americans really are. I am sure they already know that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREHM. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We can get in on that under the classification "specialized knowledge."

Mr. BREHM. I cannot for the life of me understand what is wrong with some of our Members unless their emotional natures are temporarily exceeding their intellectual natures.

Jesus Christ taught us certain ideals 2,000 years ago but He also laid down rules of practical application in order that we might attain those objectives. I believe in those ideals but it appears foolhardy for us to attempt to put His program into operation in this manner. The Christian churches and missionaries have attempted to spread religion for years and years and yet up we come 2,000 years later with the biggest war in history. There is no practical application in this proposed program. Half the people we are attempting to reach do not accept either a Deity or accept Jesus Christ as the Son of that Deity. We will meet them on a plane entirely foreign to them. Give them food labeled "Made in the United States of America." Stay with the food until it is in their hands, as the Mundt amendment proposes in our $350,000,000 relief bill, and they will appreciate our American help. You can only fill their bellies with hot air by talking.

Mr. JACKSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Plutarch once said, "No man ever wetted clay and then left it, as if there would be bricks by chance or fortune."

The wet clay of world destiny is ready for the hands that will mold it. The shape it will take depends not upon what any nation fails to do with the pliable substance of it, but upon what positive action is taken to give it form and shape. We can, upon the one hand, deny any responsibility in the matter, and as the greatest moral force in the world today, following the example of Pontius Pilate, wash our hands of the whole unhappy affair. Such a course, to many of us, is morally and intellectually repugnant, and would represent to our minds a breaking of faith with millions of our dead, who gave their lives that this world might become a better place in which to live. Did we put down tyranny and despotism at Normandy, at Anzio, at Tarawa, and at Iwo Jima in vain? Did we place upon the altar of human sacrifice the flower of American manhood to no avail? Did we pour out our resources, physical and financial, to the winning of a war to free a world, only to turn our backs upon the rise of subsequent oppression and world slavery? Have we spent billions in the winning of a great and costly test at arms, only to draw back in affright at the prospect of spending other and smaller sums in the winning of a peace founded in truth and mutual understanding of each other.

There are those who charge that our program in Greece and Turkey is on the direct road to war. Although I supported that program, I did so with a reluctance which sprang from a conviction that the measures proposed were largely negative, and open to misunderstanding of our ultimate goals and objectives. The program was attacked here on the floor, Mr. Chairman, on the very grounds that other peoples would not understand our motives in those countries. Today, some of the same gentlemen who were so vocal in that regard, propose to strangle the only voice we have for full, frank, and open discussion of our intentions throughout the world.

In common with the other Members of this House who hate and detest communism, I also loathe it. During the war just completed, I served my country with a combat unit overseas. In supporting this program, I only join with the AL, VFW, and AMVETS in endorsing this program.

I repudiate the puerile charges made and the implications that any member of the committee having had this legislation under consideration could or would place the interest of any country on earth above our own. I have often felt that I possessed too much of the spirit of ardent, flag-waving patriotism—of nationalism—of pride in the accomplishments of the American people, and I for one resent the slightest suggestion that the subcommittee or the Committee on Foreign Affairs has considered any interest in regard to the Mundt bill other than the self-interest of this Nation.

It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that a most cursory reading of the bill would indicate first of all that we have attempted to place a restriction upon unlimited travel by students and professors of other lands. We have required a new and definite principle of reciprocity in this regard, almost to the point of requiring an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. Today, there is no such restriction in law as the one written into this bill. If you would place some degree of restriction and a much higher degree of supervision upon such educational exchanges, you will approve the provisions herein set forth.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, we do not propose to enter into prolonged discussion of the merits of this legislation with those who are so prejudiced, so jaundiced, and so completely opposed to the rest of the world that they accept Jesus Christ, Galileo, Christopher Columbus, and Socrates with ill grace, because they were, without exception, foreigners.

It so happens that America and the ways of America are practically unknown to the world of today, save for what information sifts into the many subjugated lands by radio, magazines, and an occasional returning student. These are the only loopholes in a score of iron curtains, great and small. We can fight the battle with words, with knowledge, with light, or we can accept the ultimate decision in terms of atoms, cosmic forces, and darkness. If this measure had but one chance in ten million of succeeding in its purpose, I should support it. Translated into terms of immobile guns, tanks, and containers of bacteria, the funds concerned would be but an infinitesimal token payment on World War III. Translated into words of hope for the future for a world in chains, it can be a substantial down payment on peace, and a continuance of our way of life.

Almost without exception, the great veteran organizations, the AL, VFW, AMVETS, the churches, the press, and the radio of this country stand solidly united behind the measure under consideration today. Some of the gentlemen may be prepared to tell America and Americans why our only voice is stilled, and why lies, slander, and hatred have taken over in our place.

I am not concerned with the personalities involved in this debate, but I am deeply concerned with the fate of freemen and men who would be free. This program is positive in its approach to realities, and offers to our hands a weapon for truth in a world in which the roster of free nations becomes shorter day by day. At the present rate, we may soon stand alone. We shall need every weapon at that time.

Milton truly said:

> Though all the winds of doctrine were let loose to play upon the earth, so Truth be in the field, we do ingloriously, by licensing and prohibiting, to misdoubt her strength. Let her and Falsehood grapple; Who ever knew Truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter?

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON of California. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. JARMAN. I simply wish to express my firm agreement with the statement the gentleman has just made.

Mr. JACKSON of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, internationalist this and internationalist that. It appears that if one is not an internationalist in his thinking he is out of step with the new school of thought.

It seems strange to me that many people who come to Washington from the farms of the Nation—good, sound, clear-thinking Americans interested in their home communities and counties, their home State and their Nation—become infected after a few months with Washingtonitis. That is a disease which causes one to feel he has become a great statesman with the weight of all the world's problems on his shoulders.

If he gets a few invitations to the embassies for tea or cocktails—well, he is gone, he is sunk, he is all out for any crackpot idea that will count him in with the world thinkers or the world do-gooders.

Just being a country boy from the rural areas of the great State of Pennsylvania, I have listened with interest to the debate on great world ideas and programs of culture and information; on how we can educate all the people of the world; educate students from all countries of the world, and sell them our ideas on culture, and bar our own boys and girls from an education. Ideas such as spending $70,000 for slapstick, modernistic art, that if you attempted to interpret the meaning would make you a fit subject for a psychiatrist.

We might tell them how the Government insists that all prices be reduced and then proceeds to tax our people to secure money to pay subsidies to buy potatoes to keep them off the market to keep prices up; pile up the potatoes, cover them with kerosene to destroy them, or dump them to make fertilizer.

You can readily see how cultured and informed we appear to the starving countries of the war-torn world.

Now we come to the new Voice of America in H. R. 3342. The old voice which has been sounding off for some time is to be discarded, and certainly it must be admitted their programs were about as ridiculous in performance as many other things we do around here.

If the attitude of the people of the countries of the Old World toward us today is the result of past efforts of the Office of Culture and Information—and mind you, we have dumped $16,000,000,000 in foreign countries since July 1945—then our good friend, JOHN TABER, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is deserving of a vote of thanks from the Congress and the American people for his decision to use the ax and officially put out of business this branch of the State Department.

The applause for JOHN TABER'S action had hardly died away before out bounced H. R. 3342, to serve as a new vehicle to pass words instead of food around the world.

I want to say it is a difficult job to put these boys in the cooler to stay put.

We have heard a number of the committee members give us the old catalog stuff that this is an entirely different show—new lines, new acts, new music; that the legislation is so tightly drawn that those engineering this performance will necessarily have to hew to the line. Things will be different—and they now say the State Department boys are completely hog-tied by this proposed legislation. Why is it necessary to have to legislate them into doing the right thing? But mind, you pass this bill and the same old gang that has bounced from NRA to OWI to OCI will take over and Congress will get on to something else and forget the whole matter. We just cannot keep track of them. I have absolutely no faith in the individuals who have been handling this program in the State Department.

No appropriation has been established in this bill; no statistics have been presented to show how many have listened to the programs; nothing to indicate results obtained. Just the same old glittering generalities beating the tom-toms to weary you. And after you listen long enough you are worn out and pass the bill. Let me say there are but few Members in this House who would dare vote for it if their constituents were in the gallery listening to the debate on this bill.

I presume that by now everyone understands my position on this bill. However, so that everyone in the House will be apprised, I might say that the not too charming, soft, persuasive "Voice of Pennsylvania" will vote against this bill.

The Republicans at least were charged with the responsibility to purge from the Federal pay rolls the element in the State Department who have been running this farce. And we did exactly that. A vote for this bill to resurrect this outfit for a new lease on life will be a hard one to explain to the American people. So I hope you vote your conscience and cast aside your fears that you might be smeared as an isolationist, and as a good American forget political expediency. Have the courage of your convictions and rid the Government of this bungling group of bureaucrats who are making a last-ditch fight for their existence.

Believe it or not, you can save some money for the taxpayers of your State at the same time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, little did I ever expect to live to see the day when a Republican Congress would grab the New Deal ball and run away with it. It looks to me as if a few of the new Members elected last fall came here under the impression that what the American people wanted was a continuation of the New Deal but with greater economy and more efficiency. As I read the election returns last fall, we received a mandate from the American people to cut out all New Deal stuff and get back to fundamental Americanism. I am surprised to see so-called Republicans sponsoring New Deal legislation. I think it is about time that we sit up and take inventory and get in touch with the people again. We are badly out of touch at the present time.

Mr. O'KONSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am not unmindful of the value of the exchange of foreign students among the nations of the world. I have spent 9 years teaching in various colleges and universities throughout America. Some of the most valuable knowledge I have gained and some of the most important things I have learned about how people live in other countries came from students from foreign countries who attended those universities in which I was teaching. I do not think there is anything more valuable to promote the peace of the world and friendly relations among nations than an exchange of students and professors, with this reservation, however, that that take place during normal times and in times of peace, that it not take place to too large an extent, and that we do not open the gates too wide when we are facing an emergency and a crisis.

In my judgment, this country of ours never faced a crisis such as it is facing today. In this crisis we must always think first in terms of our Nation's security. To give you an idea of what I mean let us recall Hitler's technique in the conquest of European countries, such as Norway. We find that he succeeded in the conquest of Norway by using the plan of exchange of students between Germany and Norway as his spearhead.

The leaders of Hitler's frontal attack in Norway were German students who were sent to the University of Norway on an exchange basis. The people who led the attack for the Nazis in the conquest of Norway were people who at some time or other attended various educational institutions in Norway. They served as the spearhead of Hitler's attack on Norway. Likewise, in Belgium; likewise, in Holland; and, likewise, in Denmark.

I am chiefly concerned about the security of our country. I am wondering if, during these critical hours, it is wise to expand this program of exchange of foreign students. Yes; we have no exchange students from Russia or professors from Russia. But I am not afraid of Russian Communists in America. I am, however, afraid of English Communists in America; Polish Communists in America, French Communists in America, Serbian Communists in America, and the like. Yes; Russia has no professors or students here, but her satellites have them here by the scores. Russia has her satellites in every nation in the world. Those satellites send students here not as Russians, but English, Polish, French, and so forth. These satellites have only one God—Stalin.

Just by way of contrast, while we are here opening the doors to our wealth of information to the world by this bill, listen to what Russia did just yesterday. Here is a United Press release of what Russia is doing. Listen while I quote:

> The Presidium of the Supreme Soviet today issued decrees defining exactly what constitutes a Russian state secret and fixing penalties ranging up to 20 years in a labor camp for any Russian disclosing one.

Now, listen to this:

> The decrees, made public over the Moscow radio and later published on the front pages of all Moscow newspapers, were made applicable to Russian citizens abroad as well as at home and provided penalties for unintentional as well as intentional dissemination of secret information, or for losing documents containing state secrets.

Twenty years in a concentration camp. Now, what do they consider a secret? Listen to this:

1. Information of a military character.
2. Information of an economic character.
3. Information on discoveries, inventions, and improvements of a nonmilitary character.

And listen to this:

4. Information of a "miscellaneous" character.

There you have it. While conflict with that country is inevitable, our potential enemy is closing its gates of information, tightening the screws of its secrets, we come here with a bill inviting the rest of the world to come and get everything we know.

During normal times this bill would be one of the most admirable things to promote the peace of the world and the friendship of the world that I know of. But these are not normal times. Ladies and gentlemen, let us stop, look, and listen. Let us not become victims of betrayal by students and tourists like Norway was betrayed. Let us think only of our own security. We must not think otherwise.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it would appear that a great many of the Members of the House who object to being gagged themselves would like to gag the Voice of America. It seems to me to be a fairly inconsistent point of view.

As far as the students are concerned, there has been a good deal of talk about our opening the door to a lot of subversive students. I would like to dissipate that worry once and for all.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LODGE. I have so little time, I am sorry I cannot yield.

Mr. Chairman, these students, of course, without this bill could come here anyway, insofar as our immigration restrictions allow them, and they would not be subject to the restrictions to which they would be subject as set forth on page 3, line 21. So that, far from opening the doors, we are improving the situation and providing safeguards.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. There are 17,000 students of foreign countries over here now. Under the terms of this bill it will not increase that load, but it increases the safeguards and protections so that we can scrutinize those who are here and deport any of those engaged in political activities. In addition to that, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'KONSKI] need not worry about the dissemination of information. We are not opening up the secrets of America, because it will be entirely on a reciprocal basis. We do not make any concessions unless they are on a reciprocal basis.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee. We have safeguards all through the bill. We have not only that safeguard, but on page 3, in paragraph 904, there is an additional safeguard. If you will turn to page 19 you will see that no information or knowledge shall be disclosed where it is prohibited by any other law of the United States or is inconsistent with the security of the United States. Then, of course, we have the safeguard on page 18 in connection with the screening by the FBI.

Mr. Chairman, the idea seems to be that it is all right for us to export money and relief and arms and military aid, but it is all wrong for us to say why we are doing this. In other words, those who accuse us of dollar diplomacy are going to be proven right. All we care about is the dollar. We have no ideas that we want to get over. We have no dynamic faith that we want to put behind this thing. We believe that man lives by bread alone and that the reason we are sending relief over there is not because we have certain principles, but simply because it is a way of buying off trouble. Well, that is not my idea of what our foreign policy should be. It is my settled conviction that we have ideas to export. It is my idea that even the atom bomb will move to the measure of men's thoughts, and it is my profound belief that if we do not make it manifestly clear why we are doing this thing, our actions will be very much misinterpreted.

I would like to read to you for a minute a few excerpts from broadcasts which are being made about the actions of our own country.

A Greek language broadcast commented that "while the Voice of America speaks of freedom and democracy, the reactionary clique of Maximos and Saldaris, encouraged by United States aid, exterminates notable representatives of the Greek people."

Similarly, the Soviet radio, in a broadcast to Hungary, described the United States ban on passports for tourists to Yugoslavia as "a clear indication as to who is letting the iron curtain down, preventing the people of the western countries from learning the truth about the new democracy."

The Soviet radio, in a Czech broadcast, asserted that Attorney General Clark described as subversive elements all Americans who were not enthused over the extent of illiteracy in the United States, and threatened them with liquidation.

We must counter these lies by spreading the truth. We cannot afford to be silent.

Mr. Chairman, I hope very much that this bill will be passed, and soon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE] has expired.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

My purpose in doing so is to make an announcement. Many of the Members are worried because it is 5:30 and they want to know what disposition we are going to make of this matter. I have talked with the leadership, and at the conclusion of my remarks I will move that the Committee do now rise, because it appears that the legislative schedule outlined for the rest of the week is not going to be as heavy as originally contemplated and that while there is an appropriation bill to be disposed of tomorrow, that will give us an opportunity on Thursday and Friday to finish this bill leisurely.

I hope that in the meantime the Members of the House will do themselves the justice to read the hearings. Never since I have been in Congress have I heard such a disorganized collection of misinformation circulated about any one piece of legislation as about this legislation. It deserves your careful study and your intelligent, relevant attention and consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 3342, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK (at the request of Mr. RAYBURN) was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. BULWINKLE (at the request of Mr. RAYBURN) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an address by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McDOWELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a resolution passed by the mayor and City Council of the City of Clairton, Pa.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he made in the Committee of the Whole this afternoon and to include therein a table.

Mr. LEONARD W. HALL (at the request of Mr. MUNDT) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. MUNDT asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous material of various types.

EXPLANATION OF ABSENCE FROM ROLL CALL

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, at the time of Roll Call 74 on yesterday, June 9, 1947, I was appearing before the Supreme Court of the United States moving the admission to practice therein of a constituent from my district. By reason of that fact I was unable to respond to the call. I desire the RECORD to show why I was absent on that quorum call.

THE GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the Government corporations appropriation bill will be before the House. It deals in part with housing corporate activities of the Federal Government.

Before the Appropriations Committee began consideration of the bill for the fiscal year 1948 special investigators for the Congress were assigned the task of making a study of these public housing affairs. This assignment came under the Seventy-ninth Congress. Their report is filled with facts which the people and the Congress should have and which will be brought out during the consideration of the bill tomorrow.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and to include therein an extract from a report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, you have just heard the Honorable BEN F. JENSEN, chairman of the Subcommittee on Governmental Corporations Appropriations, who is releasing a confidential report regarding the Federal Public Housing Authority prepared for his subcommittee by Robert E. Lee, staff investigator, formerly with the FBI.

The information contained in this report is so electrifying and pertinent to bills about to be voted upon by the Members of the House that I believe this report should be carefully examined by everyone wishing to know just how corrupt and political has been the administration of FPHA.

To give you a sample of what I mean, I quote from the Lee report for the RECORD:

[Extract from confidential report to the House Committee on Appropriations, by Robert E. Lee]

CONFIDENTIAL INQUIRY MADE FOR THE COMMISSIONER

While in the San Francisco area, the investigating staff learned that Mr. Dillon Myer, the Commissioner of the Federal Public Housing Authority, had directed a confidential inquiry to be made concerning allegations of fraud that apparently had been made to him.

While in the San Francisco area, the offices of the staff were contacted by the chief of staff and a member was directed to obtain a copy of the report and review same, wiring pertinent facts to the chief at San Francisco, in order that appropriate inquiry might be made. The staff member was denied access to the file on this matter and consequently first-hand inquiry could not be made.

After return of the chief of staff to Washington, D. C., this matter was again taken up by the Federal Public Housing Authority and they were advised that the powers of subpena would be exercised as soon as Congress reconvened after which threat the file was made available to the writer for a period of several hours only as they desired that it be personally retained by the Comptroller.

The file contained an affidvit from one Hinton A. Miller, presently assistant housing manager of the Los Angeles Authority, and formerly an employee of the Federal Public Housing Authority at San Diego, Calif., which is the largest directly-operated program in the country. This affidavit alleged as follows:

1. That one Aubrey M. Davis was area housing manager at San Diego in 1944, and his resignation was requested by Langdon Post, the regional director, on political grounds.

2. John R. Arvin, was appointed head of the San Diego Housing Authority to further the political ambitions of Langdon Post and insisted on permitting Negroes in white projects creating tension and embarrassment.

3. That said John R. Arvin had a financial interest in commercial facilities at the projects.

4. That certain favored individuals have cars assigned to them which they use for personal furtherment, and Arvin, himself, being furnished with a Government-owned Cadillac.

5. That he, Hinton A. Miller, was ordered by Arvin through one Milton Kraft to attend a Jackson Day dinner which was a command performance on the part of employees of the project, and a collection of $25 per plate was made by a Hale Berlin for William Meyer.

6. That he, Hinton A. Miller, was later asked to attend a luncheon given in honor of candidate for State senate Charles Dail.

(Mr. Hinton also pointed out that he is a registered Democrat, and as a matter of fact favored Charles Dail but still did not like the tactics used). The luncheon was attended by most of the Federal Public Housing Authority officials and its purpose was to organize them as a group to get the tenants out to vote for Dail. Some of the men were afraid of possible persecution under the Hatch Act and in order to assure them that their activities would not be a violation, Mr. Omer Mills, assistant regional director, advised in a speech that Langdon Post had told him to go ahead and do as suggested; that it was not a violation of the Hatch Act.

7. That he, Hinton A. Miller, was assessed $10 by Arvin as a contribution.

8. That assignment to houses would be had by paying Arvin $25 or $50 through Hale Berlin.

One Hyman L. Sunshine, now housing manager at the Los Angeles Housing Authority and former Federal Public Housing Authority employee at San Diego, alleged in an affidavit as follows:

1. That Aubrey M. Davis, the housing manager at San Diego, was dismissed by Post, alleging discrimination against Negroes. Davis requested an investigation of this dismissal in communications to Washington in 1944 as he felt the dismissal was political, but Commissioner Klutznick declined to interview.

2. At a Christmas party in 1944, Arvin, Meyers, and Berlin were in advanced stage of intoxication and were purchasing kisses from typists at $1 each.

3. In the spring of 1945, at a National Association of Housing Officials' Convention, described as a "drunken dinner," paid for by the Federal Public Housing Authority, Arvin announced that Post would either run for Governor or Senator. This was not denied by Langdon Post. Many of the members present expressed their disgust at this attempt to interject the political angle.

4. He, Hyman Sunshine, was ordered to dismiss three maintenance people for starting a union, which he refused to do, and as a result incurred the enmity of his superiors.

In another affidavit by Hinton Miller the following was alleged:

1. That interoccupancy cleaning contracts were given to the San Diego Janitor Service, although the Aztec Co. had put in a lower bid. As a result of this, one Al Bright resigned. Shortly thereafter Milton Kraft, a Federal Public Housing Authority employee, turned up as a partner; however, his name was subsequently removed when the contract was to be renewed.

It was interesting to observe that Mr. Wooten, the comptroller of the Federal Public Housing Authority, indicated that, inasmuch as items of this nature were occurring from time to time, he was requesting the Commissioner to set up an investigation staff to handle these matters.

This reasoning is inconceivable, and it should be noted that in the situation developing at San Diego there already have been four investigations ordered; and if fraudulent activity exists by the time proper investigative authority undertakes to prepare a case, the evidence may well be destroyed or so confused by mishandling that it will be difficult to properly prepare the matter for court. It should be remembered that investigations of a criminal nature require proper schooling and a knowledge of court procedures and training not possessed by members of the Federal Public Housing Authority.

Mr. Speaker, this is only a small sample of what the Lee report discloses regarding the San Diego area. Get it and read what it says about your congressional district. You will be much surprised and disgusted with the administration of the FPHA. Perhaps then you will know why the House Banking and Currency Committee is reporting a bill to the floor asking us to take the disposal of war housing from the hands of FPHA and turn it over to the Federal Works Administration. Perhaps then you will know why the Subcommittee on Government Corporations Appropriations has cut the funds for FPHA approximately $15,000,000 to $10,000,000 and is putting restrictive language in the bill to control many of the abusive practices of FPHA.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE GREEK-TURKISH AID BILL

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, our President, Mr. Truman, has had good sense to nominate former Governor Griswold, of Nebraska, to be the Administrator of the monstrous Greek-Turkish military alliance bill.

I wish to extend my deepest sympathy to Grovernor Griswold in the genuine and sincere effort that I am sure he will make to execute what is a completely impossible program.

Perhaps Governor Griswold would profit from reading the RECORD of the debate in the House and Senate on the Greek-Turkish bill. I believe that many of the pitfalls which are inherent in this program received attention in that debate.

First and foremost, of course, is the fact that political democracy and liberty do not exist in Greece. The War Department and State Department have made the grievous error of assuming that military suppression is the first thing needed in Greece rather than the institution of political democracy and the abolition of the present corrupt monarchy.

Thursday in the Washington Post on page 2, we find a headline which reads: "Greek Leader Likes the United States Troop Idea." Mr. Speaker, Sophocles Venizelos, President of the Greek cabinet's Council of National Defense, likes the idea that American troops should be sent to Greece. The United Press story states that this suggestion has been made privately in Government circles. Mr. Venizelos said that the Greek Army, if doubled in size and equipment with American funds, could handle the present situation.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that every Member of the House will note that the President of the Greek Cabinet of National Defense believed that it would be a good thing to send American troops to Greece and he has the unmitigated brass to tell us now that the Greek Army has to be doubled if it is to deal with the present rebellion in Greece.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the article from the Washington Post be inserted in the RECORD at this point:

GREEK LEADER LIKES UNITED STATES TROOP IDEA—MOVE HELD UNLIKELY, THOUGH IT WOULD HAMPER GUERRILLAS

ATHENS, June 4.—Sophocles Venizelos, president of the Greek Cabinet's Council of National Defense, today agreed with the suggestion that American troops in Greece would serve to discourage aid from abroad to the guerrillas.

The suggestion with which he agreed has been made privately in Government circles, although there was none who believed the United States was willing to send troops to Greece now.

Venizelos, who also is Minister of the Navy, said in an interview that the Greek Army, if doubled in size and equipped with American funds, could handle the situation. But now, he said, the army was about half the size it should be to handle the guerrillas.

He repeated previously circulated reports that 10,000 guerrillas of unspecified nationalities in Bulgaria and Yugoslavia were being equipped by those nations to fight in Greece.

He charged that the recent guerrilla attacks near the Yugoslav frontier were designed to secure an area in which to establish a guerrilla government.

(In Belgrade, the Yugoslav official agency Tanjug today denied press reports from Athens that an international brigade was being organized at Split to help the Greek guerrillas.)

Well, Mr. Speaker, former Governor Griswold will have to tell Mr. Venizelos that the American people have no intention of sending American troops to Greece. He might just as well also tell him now that we have no intention of financing any increase in the Greek Army. It would be highly desirable if Governor Griswold would make plain to the present Greek Government that a political democracy has to be established in Greece.

I have specific reference to the fact that thousands of Greek patriots are dying in British and Greek concentration camps, that civil liberties are suppressed throughout the country; that honest elections have not been held and that political repression exists everywhere.

Shortly after the Congress passed the Greek-Turkish military alliance bill, the suggestion was made that a general amnesty be granted as the quickest and simplest way to putting an end to the civil war in Greece.

The present Greek Government refused to do this and Gen. Nicholas Zervas, Nazi collaborationist in World War II, now head of the Greek Army, was reported to be quite angry that our State Department should make such a suggestion.

So we find, Mr. Speaker, that Governor Griswold is embarking upon an impossible mission, unless he undertakes to change the political atmosphere in Greece and insists upon a general amnesty and a basic change in this Fascist, monarchial government.

There have been other ugly events since the passage of the Greek-Turkish bill. It came somewhat as a surprise, Mr. Speaker, to the Members of the House that the British Government should assume that the United States would pay for its occupation troops in Greece between the dates of March 31 and the date of congressional enactment of the Greek-Turkish aid bill.

Suddenly, we find that forty to fifty millions of dollars would be paid to the British.

Our State Department has stated that not one penny would go to pay the British, but Assistant Secretary of State Acheson suggested at the time that we might buy ammunition and equipment from the British with which to arm the Greeks. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the British will get paid.

So, Mr. Speaker, we find ourselves staggering from one dirty, filthy mess to another in respect to the situation in Greece, and with no clear policy based on the institution of political democracy in Greece. We sincerely hope that Governor Griswold will not become a peddler for the impossible Truman doctrine of military repression in Greece, but will undertake his assignment as an American servant, devoted to the democratic concept of the inalienable rights of every citizen in a democracy. We trust that he will see to it that the British do not get 1 cent; we trust that the Greek Army will not be doubled in size; we trust that the funds we voted will actually go for rehabilitation of the Greek economy; we trust that the food we send will not go to feed the wealthy aristocracy of Athens but will actually go to the millions of starving Greek patriots, many of whom, in desperation, are fighting against what they know to be a corrupt monarchy.

Mr. Speaker, as the days roll by—as Italy and France and England move from one crisis to another—we discover over and over again that the entire Truman doctrine is basically wrong.

I wish to quote, Mr. Speaker, from a column written by Mr. Walter Lippmann here in yesterday's Washington Post entitled "A Plea for Prudence." I quote:

> We are too far out front in too many places. We are taking on ourselves too many problems. We are making too many quick decisions. We are accepting too many moral commitments. We are striking too many attitudes.

Mr. Speaker, I quote further from Mr. Lippmann:

> Europe cannot be saved from Soviet domination or from economic collapse and anarchy by a series of unilateral American interventions.

Mr. Speaker, I quote further:

> We are in grave danger, not of withdrawing into isolation, as in 1919, but of advancing into isolated interventions all over the globe. We are not strong enough or wise enough to do that successfully, and we shall squander our influence, our power, and our resources if we attempt it.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, Mr. Walter Lippmann has given us some very wise advice. He makes the point in his column that the present Italian Government does not represent the largely elected majority in the legislature.

Mr. Speaker, General Marshall and Mr. Truman are in the process of applying the Truman doctrine of military power to Italy, France, and England. We are undertaking to bolster their economy, to feed their people, to rehabilitate their economy by ourselves, alone, without the help of other nations.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that Mr. Lippmann's article appear in my remarks in the RECORD at this point:

TODAY AND TOMORROW

(By Walter Lippmann)

A PLEA FOR PRUDENCE

The situation in Italy and in central Europe has taken a decided turn for the worse just as the Senate is dealing with ratification of the satellite treaties. Yet it seems to me that what has happened is, if we examine it, a reason, though it runs counter to our feelings, for prompt ratification (which is what Secretary Marshall and Senator VANDENBERG want) rather than for delay.

The new situation is marked by two connected events, one of them in Budapest and one in Rome. In Hungary and in Italy there have been until recently and indeed since the armistice coalition governments. Now there is in Hungary a government which the Communists dominate. In Italy there is now a government in which the Communists and Socialists are not included, against which they are in open opposition and perhaps in actual rebellion.

What makes the situation so dangerously difficult is that the Communist-Socialist opposition to the present Italian government draws its main strength from the industrial areas of northern Italy, which are separated only by an imaginary line from Yugoslavia and Hungary. The stage is, therefore, set, the lines of communication have been opened, for Soviet support of an Italian revolutionary opposition to the de Gasperi government in Rome.

Moreover the political restraint upon the Italian opposition has been reduced, if not removed entirely, by the fact that the de Gasperi government does not represent the legally elected majority in the legislature.

It follows that the frontier between Italy and the Soviet orbit has now become more important than it was when Mr. Byrnes was negotiating the Italian Treaty. The basic issue is, however, no longer what it was, that is to say, where the frontier should be drawn and who should have Trieste and Istria. The question now is whether any international frontier can be established and maintained which will separate the revolutionary opposition in northern Italy from its allies in Yugoslavia, Hungary, and the Soviet Union.

The ratification of the treaty will establish an international frontier which is legally binding upon all the United Nations. The violations of that frontier would then be a question for the United Nations. If, however, the treaty is not ratified the dividing line will be merely the present armistice line which is held by British and American troops. For this reason it seems to me that we have the greatest interest in a prompt ratification of the Italian Treaty, and of the others which are grouped with it. For this will broaden the responsibility for the maintenance of law and order to include all the United Nations. Delay, on the other hand, which in present conditions may be tantamount to rejecting the treaty, would put upon us, with such help as the British could give, the sole responsibility for maintaining the territorial integrity, and maybe even the independence, of Italy.

That would, I believe, multiply the risks and greatly increase the burden which we have assumed. No doubt we shall have to supply the economic support for Italian relief and recovery. But what we must seek to avoid is finding ourselves in a position where an Italian Government, opposed by great masses of Italians, is sponsored and supported by the United States alone.

That would be ruinous to the Italian Government, since it would be pictured as a minority government and a puppet of the United States. The State Department has already laid itself open to that line of attack, which the Soviets will surely pursue, by its effusive and clumsily timed endorsement of the new de Gasperi government.

Europe cannot be saved from Soviet domination or from economic collapse and anarchy by a series of unilateral American interventions. The supreme problem which confronts Secretary Marshall is to extricate the United States from the consequences and the commitments of a spasmodic unilateralism and to get it replaced by a European policy—which we can promote, induce, and support but cannot initiate and impose—of reconstruction and unification and stabilization.

We are in grave danger not of withdrawing into isolation as in 1919, but of advancing into isolated interventions all over the globe. We are not strong enough or wise enough to do that successfully and we shall squander our influence, our power, and our resources, if we attempt it.

Thus we should not have a United States-Italian policy, as we now seem to have, but only an Allied policy in which Great Britain and France, at the minimum, have an equal moral and political responsibility. For to have an American-Italian policy is not a true policy of international cooperation but, in the literal and worst meaning of the word, an entangling alliance.

We are too far out front in too many places. We are taking on ourselves too many problems. We are making too many quick decisions. We are accepting too many moral commitments. We are striking too many attitudes.

For our own good and for the sake of peace most of these things should be shared in the process of decision, shared as to political responsibility, with other governments. For otherwise we may find that Uncle Sam is the head of the parade and that everybody is out of step but uncle.

Against this background of continuous crises, General Marshall made an important speech Thursday at Harvard University. In that speech, there is not one single mention of the United Nations. Oh, yes, he discussed Europe. He discussed the economic situation of Europe. He states that it is wrong for us to engage in unilateral action. He says that our policy is not directed against any country or doctrine, but against hunger, poverty, domination, and chaos. Yes, Mr. Speaker, General Marshall asks for a European program drafted by Europeans. He finally recognizes that political stability depends upon the economic recovery and that we alone cannot finance or organize the economy of Europe, but, Mr. Speaker, not once, not anywhere in his speech, is there a single mention of the United Nations. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? Why is it that our Secretary of State, making a speech defining our foreign policy—a speech dealing with the crucial economic and political issues of the world today—does not once mention the United Nations? The simple truth, Mr. Speaker, is that our State Department considers that the United Nations is dead. Our State Department believes in unilateral action. Contrary to General Marshall, our policy is a military policy. It is a policy of entangling alliances, of unilateral military alliances everywhere in the world.

For our own part, we suggest that these problems be brought before the United Nations for discussion and action. It is entirely useless for England or for France and Italy with governments financed from America to build a program of European reconstruction.

Hungary has had a change in government in the last week. Hungary is occupied by Soviet troops. Suddenly our State Department discovers that Russia dominates Hungary. Any fool would have know that she dominated it long ago. Great excitement has ensued. President Truman has announced that the change of government in Hungary is an outrage. I would like to suggest that there are many things that are outrageous today, including President Truman's attack on Senator TAFT, of Ohio, delivered at his last press conference.

What does President Truman propose to do? Will the State Department now remember that we have a United Nations or will it engage in its customary unilateral and hence self-defeating activities? The blunt fact is as our State Department knows, the United States cannot do one single thing about the situation in Hungary that will make any difference. It will become clear, Mr. Speaker, with the passage of time that our actions in Greece, Turkey, Italy, and France also will add up to a round zero. Except, Mr. Speaker, the American taxpayer in the meantime will pour out five or ten millions of dollars for exactly nothing.

Our President does not like the fact that Senator TAFT pointed out that the Truman foreign policy of entangling military alliances has the effect of pushing prices up in our own country. But in the middle of his hysterical attack on Senator TAFT, President Truman states, and I quote: "The administration fully recognized that these foreign-aid programs would place some strain upon the American economy." Why, Mr. Speaker, does President Truman now a month after the Greek-Turkish military debate acknowledge the fact that his program inevitably pushes prices up under the present situation?

At the time the Congress was debating the Greek military program, the White House was sending out its propaganda boys and its press releases announcing that prices could be pushed down by voluntary efforts. They knew then and they know now that their foreign program will push prices up. It will push wages down. It means a substantial cut in the living standards of the American people. The hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker, that distinguishes the Truman doctrine is nowhere more clearly demonstrated than in the hysterical attack which President Truman launched on BOB TAFT because BOB TAFT took the trouble to tell the American people the truth about the economic effect within America of this insane Truman doctrine.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, General Marshall forgets that the United Nations exists and President Truman belatedly acknowledges that American prices will be driven upward by his foreign program. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, the State Department needs a thorough house cleaning. The military minds which have come to dominate our foreign policy will lead us into war. Their policy of entangling military alliances will bankrupt America. It will force taxes and prices up and living standards down.

General Marshall in his speech last week said that a huge new program of giving away American dollars lies before us. He was speaking only of Europe. For some reason, he did not mention South America. Well, Mr. Speaker, the House will undoubtedly want to give a lot of consideration to the Truman doctrine and its application to South America. A bill has been proposed by the President to make South America into an armed camp at the expense of American taxpayers. I wish, Mr. Speaker, to submit a few questions to our State Department concerning its military program in South America: How much does the program cost? How will the program of arming the dictatorships in South America be paid for? How many revolutions have taken place in South America since 1930? How many civil wars have taken place in South America since 1930? How many changes in government have taken place in South America since 1930? Who will pay for the upkeep of the armaments which we propose South America should have? What is the continuing responsibility in terms of hard cash of this program for the militarization of the Western Hemisphere? What, Mr. Speaker, are the dangers of aggression against South American countries which have led to the formulation of this military program?

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the State Department had best prepare itself to answer these questions. For my own part, I shall oppose with all my strength the proposal to militarize the republics of South America. It so happens, Mr. Speaker, that every South American country needs equipment to build up its industries. It so happens that most of them need farm equipment. More than half of the countries in South America import food. Starvation is a common situation in South America. If we are going to give any aid to South American countries it should be productive—not destructive. All the armed forces of the United States today are available for the defense of the Western Hemisphere from outside aggression. Not one single additional gun or airplane is needed for the defense of any South American country from aggression. The policy proposed by President Truman to arm such a dictator as Peron in the Argentine will lead to wars in South America and possibly to wars against the United States. It is a policy of criminal waste and can only be the product of a mad military mind which considers that security lies only in armaments rather than in the productiveness and political democracy of a nation.

There have been numerous statements, Mr. Speaker, emanating from our State Department that we were determined to intervene in China, in behalf of the government of Chiang Kai-shek. Apparently some people at the State Department did not like the fact that I revealed on the floor of the House that five divisions of American military equipment had fallen into the hands of Chinese Communists. Apparently our State Department lives in such seclusion that they forget that the American taxpayer opposes any further waste of American funds in China's civil war.

If the United States wishes to do something about China, let us present the situation to the United Nations. If the United States feels that South America is in danger of aggression, let us present the matter to the United Nations. If the United States feels that the events in Hungary are an outrage, let us bring the matter before the United Nations. If General Marshall thinks that we need a ten-billion-dollar-a-year rehabilitation program for Europe, let him bring the matter before the United Nations. If we wish to stabilize the politics in France and Italy, let us bring the matter before the appropriate boys of the United Nations.

Mr. Speaker, a propaganda campaign is being waged by the State Department to build up war hysteria and war feelings—to justify in the minds of the American people unilateral military adventures and military alliances. It would be very well if for once the administration would recognize that it has made a basic mistake in the Truman doctrine. The American people have recognized it and if Mr. Truman persists with his advocacy of militarization of America and the world, he will find that the American people will relieve him of office in 1948.

The American people despise a two-faced policy. They despise waste and they despise inefficiencies. They oppose the military mind. They oppose dictators and dictation. They want no part of Peron, Turkish dictatorships, and Greek monarchies, particularly when they have to pay for them with taxes that are too high.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think Mr. Truman would be better advised to enter the 1948 elections without the Greek monarchy, the Peron government and the miscellaneous dictatorships of the world riding on his back. In the meantime, I suggest that he think seriously about BOB TAFT'S statement that his foreign policy of military aggrandizement is pushing the prices that the American people pay up and not down.

(Mr. BENDER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and to include therein extraneous matter.)

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Messrs. WOLVERTON, HINSHAW, O'HARA, HUGH D. SCOTT, JR., and LEONARD W. HALL (at the request of Mr. ARENDS), from June 10 to June 14, on account of investigation of air accident at LaGuardia Field, N. Y.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 11, 1947

(Legislative day of Monday, April 21, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, as we unite in prayer for Thy blessings upon the Members of this body, we know that Thou art lovingly concerned about the way we live and how we wear ourselves out, taking less care of ourselves than we do of our cars. Bless Thy servants, the Senators, with good health and good sense to preserve it. Bless the members of their families. May they commit them all to Thy care, that no leaden anxiety shall keep any man from doing his best work. We feel that we have to do so many things that we would rather not do, as we plead that we have no time to do some things we know very well we should do.

Help us to make wise choices and proper use of our time.

We wait upon Thee for the continual answer to our prayers.

In the name of Christ, Thy Son. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, June 10, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 49) against adoption of Reorganization Plan No. 2 of May 1, 1947, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

THOMAS D. SHERRARD

A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of Thomas D. Sherrard (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORT CONCERNING CONVERSION OF TWO COST-PLUS-A-FIXED-FEE CONTRACTS AND DISPOSAL OF A SHIPYARD

A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report concerning the conversion of two cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts between the United States Maritime Commission and the California Shipbuilding Corp. to a fixed-price basis and the subsequent amendment of one of the fixed-price contracts to cover disposal of shipyard facilities and inventory to the contractor (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

PETITION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a petition of the members of the Stuart (Fla.) Townsend Club, No. 1, praying for the enactment of the so-called Townsend plan to provide old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE—FLORIDA LEGISLATURE MEMORIAL

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] and myself, I ask unanimous consent to present for appropriate reference and to have printed in the RECORD Senate Memorial No. 2 of the Legislature of the State of Florida, memorializing Congress to enact a uniform system of old-age assistance and aid to widows and dependent children.

There being no objection, the memorial was received, referred to the Committee on Finance, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"Senate Memorial 2

"Resolution to memorialize Congress to enact a uniform system of old-age pensions and aid to widows and aid to dependent children

"Whereas security of the aged, widows, and dependent children has become a major problem before the American people, and, therefore, justice and the public welfare demand that ample provision be made for the protection of their health and to provide for their support; and

"Whereas the most feasible plan to solve the social and economic problem is the enactment by Congress of a uniform Federal Government program to provide an equitable distribution among our citizens of age 60 or more and among the widows and dependent children a sum sufficient to support and maintain them with respect and decency and in keeping with our American standard of living: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the members of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Florida do respectfully memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to immediately enact a national pension system for old age, aid to needy widows, and aid to dependent children, and create a fund for the maintenance thereof, the proceeds of which shall be distributed equitably for all citizens over 60 years of age, all needy widows, and all dependent children without regard to the sum paid or contributed by a State or other political subdivision; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be immediately transmitted by the secretary of state to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Florida."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. REVERCOMB, from the Committee on Public Works:

S. 451. A bill to authorize the Federal Works Administrator through the Commissioner of Public Buildings to provide space to accommodate the needs of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 260).

By Mr. ECTON, from the Committee on Public Lands:

S. 403. A bill authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to Gideon Peon; with an amendment (Rept. No. 261).

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS AT UNVEILING OF STATUE OF WILLIAM E. BORAH

Mr. DWORSHAK submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 18), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, with illustrations, and bound in such form and style as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, 5,900 copies of the proceedings held in connection with the unveiling of the statue of former Senator William E. Borah in Statuary Hall, Capitol Building, Washington, D. C., on June 6, 1947, together with such other matter as may be relevant thereto, of which 1,250 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,750 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 900 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Idaho.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer and shall procure suitable illustrations to be published with these proceedings.

INVESTIGATION OF COMPLAINTS OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Mr. BALDWIN (by request) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 124), which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Civil Service, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to (1) possible methods of settling differences between civil-service employees and their superiors concerning efficiency ratings, dismissals, reductions, and suspensions and (2) the desirability of establishing a board, or other body, to hear appeals concerning such matters and other subjects of complaint by civil-service employees, and to settle and adjust such matters and complaints. The study and investigation shall include the operations and results of the present system of review of efficiency ratings.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of such study and investigation together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 49) against adoption of Reorganization Plan No. 2 of May 1, 1947, was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

INVESTIGATIONS BY THE SENATE SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Pittsburgh Press of June 4, 1947 entitled "Keep Up the Steel Probe."

I read two sentences from the editorial:

The Senate steel investigation started out to show the problems of small manufacturers in getting scarce steel sizes.

* * * * *

This work has been done by the Steel Subcommittee of the Senate Small Business Committee, headed by Senator EDWARD MARTIN, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, I also wish to pay a high compliment to the work of the subcommittee, and what they have done.

I should also like to have printed in the RECORD a quotation from the business and finance department of the magazine Time for June 9, 1947, which calls attention to the fine work the Small Business Committee has been doing.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh Press of June 4, 1947]

KEEP UP THE STEEL PROBE

The Senate steel investigation started out to show the problems of small manufacturers in getting scarce steel sizes.

It did that, and more.

It turned up evidence of forgery, fraud, and burglary. It showed extensive "daisy chains" of fly-by-night steel brokers, deluding and defrauding their customers—and sometimes each other.

It showed that much of the gray market is due to heavy bidding by South American buyers—principally in behalf of Argentina, where a 5-year plan and an armament program are being undertaken simultaneously.

This work has been done by the Steel Subcommittee of the Senate Small Business Committee, headed by Senator EDWARD MARTIN, of Pennsylvania.

Much of it has been far afield from the problem of small business, but it has a tremendous bearing on the troubles small business is having. We'd like to know more—for instance, about the steel that goes into export while United States factories are forced to close down for lack of material.

The investigation already has cost more than originally was intended. The Small Business Committee has only $50,000 to spend on all of its investigations—the steel shortage being only one.

Under the circumstances, the committee will have to ask for more money or shorten its steel hearings at a time when sensational charges and countercharges still are pending.

That would be a mistake for several reasons. The hearings thus far have helped small business. There is evidence that the supply of steel is easing. They have exposed rackets in a manner that will warn businessmen against shady deals in which they can lose their money and get no steel.

It would be unfair not only to small business, but also to the large basic steel producers, to end the investigation without giving them a chance to answer the charges hurled at their industry.

Exposing rackets, rascality, and bad practices can result in savings to all business and in maintaining industrial employment. The Senate would invest its money wisely by continuing the investigation.

[From Time magazine of June 9, 1947]

STEEL—THE DAISY CHAIN

The steel shortage has cut deep into the production of big corporations. For many a small manufacturer it has been a worse misfortune; some have been forced to shut up shop completely. To head off this blight to business, the Senate's Small Business Committee is trying to find out why small buyers can get no steel. What it found out in hearings last week was that little businessmen can buy steel—if they are willing to pay fabulous prices for it.

One small businessman named David Hillstrom, proprietor of the Corry-Jamestown Manufacturing Corp., of Corry, Pa., testified that in the last year he has paid $206,000 above the mill price for sheet steel. And he paid $18,000 more for steel he never got. He is now paying from $250 to $280 a ton for sheet steel (mill price: $50 a ton) to keep his plant going.

Arthur Boehn, of Cleveland's Boehn Pressure Steel Corp., said that his company had paid up to 14 cents a pound (mill price: around 3 cents). Last week he gave up in disgust, laid off his 100 employees, shut his plant.

MARKET IN GRAY

Solely responsible for this state of affairs was the gray market daisy chain of steel brokers. The committee was not able to pin down the exact workings of the gray market. But the plain assumption was that steel flowed into it from brokers able to buy from mills, by virtue of prewar dealings, or from manufacturing companies with excess supplies. Instead of canceling their mill orders, as they usually would, these companies took delivery and turned the steel over to brokers at a fat profit. As each party in this daisy chain got his cut, the price was run up and steel was kept out of the normal channels which supply small businesses. The fantastic workings of the chain were described by two would-be steel buyers, L. C. Durham and E. A. Kerschbaumer.

Durham, a Chicago fabricator and steel broker, joined the daisy chain through a broker named McAleer, who phoned him long distance. If Durham could be in New York that night, said McAleer, he could buy 100,000 tons of steel. Too eager to pack, Durham grabbed a spare shirt, flew to New York, and hurried to the rendezvous in a suite in Manhattan's Hampshire House.

MARINE RESCUE

The suite was in the name of Kerschbaumer, a Pittsburgh supplier, who had been lured there himself by a promise of 300,000 tons of steel. Also present were middlemen, lawyers, and "company representatives" who assured the buyers that they would have confirmation of the orders from the mills in the morning.

But confirmation did not come the next day, nor for 6 weeks thereafter. Durham, who expected to go home daily, washed his linen in the bathtub. Kerschbaumer, who claimed he had a $40,000,000 letter of credit to back up his bid, said he also agreed to pay the supposed mill representatives a bonus of $18,000,000—at around $62 a ton—for distribution among mill executives. Still he could not close the deal.

One Brooklyn exporter named James Boyle got so mad at the delay, said Kerschbaumer, that he burst in with two very apparently gangster types with guns, demanded 50,000 tons of steel or else. Durham, a husky ex-marine, happened to walk in just then and relieved them of their guns.

DEAD END

Finally, a man named Herbert Karp showed up with what seemed to be confirmation of a 248,000-ton order to be filled by the Firth-Sterling Steel & Carbide Co., of McKeesport, Pa. The buyers, including Kerschbaumer, who had spent $63,000 in entertainment and bonuses, then made their deals for the steel and went home. But no steel was delivered.

Last week the committee found out why; the letter was a phony. And it reached the dead end of the daisy chain when Boyle and Karp appeared. Boyle, a onetime Hollywood scripter, vehemently denied that any of his party had pulled any guns, though he did admit that one of his companions was carrying a revolver—a small one—in his pocket. Karp pleaded even greater innocence on the subject of the phony confirmation. It was handed to him in a Pittsburgh hotel lobby, he said, by a stranger. He had no idea how it happened to bear the signature, apparently not genuine, of an official of the Firth-Sterling Co.

"I learned that it's the easiest thing in the world to pick up the telephone and buy more steel than the whole industry can manufacture in a year," he said plaintively. "Only you never do get delivery."

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—EDITORIAL COMMENT

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an editorial from the Cleveland (Ohio) Plain Dealer entitled "Sectional Short-Sightedness," and an editorial from the Dispatch-Herald of Erie, Pa., entitled "The St. Lawrence Seaway Is Needed."

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Cleveland Plain Dealer of June 7, 1947]

SECTIONAL SHORT-SIGHTEDNESS

Opposition to the St. Lawrence seaway and power project, which is again the subject of Senate hearings, has been based all along for the most part on mistaken selfish interests. But none of the opposition of this nature comes with less grace than the sectional opposition of the South.

There are many northerners who have felt that the TVA development was unfair in that it poured northern tax money into a project which, they believed, would benefit the South at the expense of the North. Less sectionally minded northerners, however, have recognized that whatever benefits any part of the United States economically or socially must ultimately benefit the entire Nation.

Opponents of the TVA have come to recognize that, whatever else may be said about that project, it proved a most valuable asset during the war; for it is probable that without TVA's added power output, war industries might not have had enough electricity and the atomic bomb development would have been next to impossible.

The South and other sections which fear—without good reason, we believe—that the St. Lawrence project would harm them cannot afford to overlook the testimony given in favor of that project by Secretary of State Marshall, the wartime Army Chief of Staff.

This project would be a wartime asset, Marshall said, because it would provide a vital new line of communication between the coast and the Midwest, a line of communication safe from submarines for at least a third of its length; because it would assist the over-all industrial development of the Nation's natural resources and strengthen the United States-Canadian plans for hemisphere defense and because it would assure a tremendous source of electric power comparable to that of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Marshall is in a position to know what he is talking about. He knows what the needs of the last war were and what those of another war probably would be.

If the opponents argue that the seaway and its power project would be vulnerable in an atomic war, the answer is that so will be every other installation of any kind for defense purposes. We don't refuse to build a battleship or an aircraft carrier because it would be something for an enemy to shoot at.

[From the Erie Dispatch-Herald of June 5, 1947]

THE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY IS NEEDED

Every great advancement means that some older insitution must give way in part, or even whole. The automobile doomed the buggy and the railroads doomed the canal and stagecoach.

The St. Lawrence seaway would encroach upon the business of railroads and lake shippers, and the power it would produce would not be welcomed by certain affected utilities. Yet we think these interests exaggerate their claims and indulge in unnecessary alarm.

Lake shipping could be protected easily by restricting traffic to transocean freight; electric power is vitally needed in the districts affected; the railroads would, we are certain, gain more business than they would lose.

The great need for the seaway as a means of achieving the maximum potential efficiency of the American economy in time of peace or war is obvious to all except the selfish interests.

Hearings are being held in the Senate in another effort to obtain congressional sanction of the project. Men of prominence in many fields, and representing nothing except the good of the country, are trying again to overcome the powerful lobby that has blocked the seaway.

In an era when this country needs every resource it can muster to strengthen itself against the potential onslaught of its enemies, selfish interests should be made to give way for the common good.

ADDRESS BY JAMES A. FARLEY BEFORE CANADIAN EXPORTERS' ASSOCIATION

[Mr. McGRATH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "World Trade and World Peace," delivered by Hon. James A. Farley before the Canadian Exporters' Association, at Toronto, Canada, on June 4, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

CONSERVATION FARMING—ESSAY BY MISS MURIEL MOORE

[Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an essay entitled "Conservation Farming," written by Miss Muriel Moore, a student in the New Market High School, New Market, Va., which appears in the Appendix.]

BROADCASTING OF PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS—ARTICLE BY JACK H. POLLOCK

[Mr. PEPPER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Let's Put Congress on the Air," by Jack H. Pollock, published in Pageant magazine of July 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

DESTRUCTION OF POTATOES—ARTICLE FROM BUSINESS WEEK

[Mr. HATCH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Doing the Communists Work for Them," from Business Week, May 31, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the Senate this afternoon, and also Friday and Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, consent is granted.

COMMITTEE MEETING DURING SENATE SESSION

Mr. TAYLOR obtained the floor.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAYLOR. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare may hold committee hearings on the anti-discrimination bill during the session of the Senate today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I am always happy to yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. I might observe that I think the Senator from Idaho is very much interested in the bill on which the subcommittee is holding hearings.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CARRIERS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 110) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to certain agreements between carriers.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I have been reluctant to enter into the debate on the pending bill, S. 110, because I am not a lawyer and I know that the antitrust laws have been interpreted by a highly complex group of judicial decisions. But this measure is so sweeping in its scope, so destructive of the ideals upon which this Nation was founded, that I feel impelled to state my reasons for opposing it with all the resources at my command.

It would appear that this proposed legislation is yet another attempt to deprive the courts of jurisdiction over a case which is before them for decision. It is an attempt to amend the law before we know what the courts declare the law to be. It is an attempt to legislate the decision in a particular case which is now undergoing the judicial process.

Mr. President, I submit that it is, therefore, special legislation of the worst sort.

If the Congress approves such a bill as this, it is saying to the Supreme Court of the United States, in effect, "We do not care to have you decide this case. We will decide it and relieve you of responsibility. The separation of the power of the legislative from that of the judicial need not apply."

The State of Georgia and the Department of Justice both have initiated legal action in the Federal courts to curb railroad practices which they deem to be in violation of the antitrust laws passed by Congress. Yet, in advance of the Court's decision in these cases, the Senate of the United States is asked to amend the law so that the railroads will be exempt from the antitrust laws, which are binding on other forms of business enterprise.

The bill under consideration, S. 110, is a descendant of the Bulwinkle bill which was introduced in the Seventy-ninth Congress and failed to become law when opposed by the Democratic majority in the Senate. The language is changed, but the effect is the same.

In brief, S. 110 would free common carrier transportation agencies from the operations of the antitrust laws. It is an obvious and undisguised attempt to obtain special privileges and protection for a system of monopoly practices that affect the economic life of the people in every city, town, and village in the United States. It is an effort to pass legislation for the benefit of special interests that have the power to foster or retard the economic development of whole regions by the control exercised over the lifeblood of commerce—the transportation industry.

The control of the monopoly group is exercised over both transportation rates and services, as I shall show presently. The world, in its chaos today, is looking to the United States for economic leadership. And what is our answer today? Consideration of legislation to weaken the system of free competition, which we know to be the best in the world, and which we hold out to be the answer to the economic problems of the world.

It is passing strange that, with all the pressing matters concerning the future of civilization that drastically need attention, it is necessary to put these aside and consider legislation of which the railroads will be the principal beneficiaries, to the detriment of the public welfare.

In his great economic report to the Congress at the opening of this session, President Truman asked us to strengthen the antitrust laws as a bulwark against depression. Is this to be our answer?

I know those in favor of the bill will say that if the bill becomes law the Interstate Commerce Commission will look after the public interest. Despite all evidences of disregard of the public interest by the railroads in their violation of the antitrust laws presented in the hearings on the proposed legislation, the Interstate Commerce Commission has blandly insisted that the legislation is necessary, totally disregarding the public interest, in an effort to vindicate its own negligence in failing to realize and call attention to the abuses carried on in the various railroad organizations established for the purpose of fixing rates and hindering improvements in service.

THE ICC AND THE WEST

My colleagues from the West will be particularly interested to know that the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was established in 1887, 60 years ago, has never conducted a general investigation of freight rates in the far West.

The West is known in transportation terminology as mountain-Pacific rate territory. It is made up of the area lying west of a line drawn southward along the western borders of North and South Dakota, through Colorado, and then following the western boundary of Texas. Mountain-Pacific territory comprises about 40 percent of the land area of the United States.

At the present rate of progress, the Interstate Commerce Commission on its one-hundredth anniversary will have completed a general investigation of rates in the far West.

It is almost beyond belief that nearly one-half the United States is using a rate structure of the 1880's, with only the patches and makeshift changes that the Interstate Commerce Commission has from time to time seen fit to put on the old rate structure.

To the body that has been so remiss in its duty toward the West this bill would delegate the power to approve all agreements between railroads that would otherwise be in contravention of the antitrust laws.

I dare say that some of my western colleagues from the Mountain-Pacific area are not aware of the great discrepancies that exist in freight rates available to shippers in the far West when compared with those paid by shippers in the East to reach common markets approximately equidistant from the two shippers.

Let me give an example that prevailed prior to the recent general rate increases allowed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

From Cleveland, Ohio, to Denver, Colo., the short-line rail distance is 1,329 miles; the first-class rate is $2.89 per 100 pounds.

From Portland, Orego., to Denver, Colo., the short-line rail distance is approximately the same, 1,364 miles, but the first-class rate per 100 pounds is $4.03—a difference of $1.14.

Under the ICC decision in Docket 28300, the rate from Cleveland to Denver was ordered lowered to $2.57—increasing the difference to $1.46 per 100 pounds in favor of the eastern shipper.

We in the West rejoice with our friends east of the Rocky Mountains in their good fortune in obtaining a reduction in freight rates.

I think it is fair, however, to call attention to the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission, in 60 years of its existence, has not seen fit to discharge its duty to examine the general level of similar rates in Mountain-Pacific Territory to ascertain whether we in that territory are due a more equitable rate structure.

Can we expect the Interstate Commerce Commission to discharge additional duties when it has failed to discharge those assigned to it for over half a century?

Will it exhibit the same sluggish lassitude and disinterest in preventing concentration of power on an economic basis as it showed in preventing concentration of power on a geographic basis?

Mr. President, when the day comes upon which we look to the ICC for protection of our economy against trusts, monopolies, and cartels, then Heaven protect us.

There is another question that occurs to me.

Why is this bill so important that it must be placed on the calendar ahead of the vital subject of housing?

Why has the majority so long delayed consideration of the excellent housing bill of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], which has long since been reported by the Banking and Currency Committee?

Rents are to be raised, veterans are still tramping the streets looking for homes, they are still doubled up with their in-laws.

Yet we forget the heroes who saved us yesterday.

We have no time to consider the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill. We have no time to consider the veterans' emergency housing bill (S. 701).

No; we are too busy watering down the antitrust laws.

Truly, Senate bill 110 is class legislation for the benefit of a few, forced in ahead of measures that are of vital concern to most of the people of the United States.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am happy to yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I want to suggest that in the list of things that have not been considered are old-age pensions. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that, last year, when we raised our own salaries, old-age pensions were raised $5 a month only. At that time it was promised that the matter would be considered and studied. Up to the present time, nothing has been done, even though Senators are now again talking of adjourning in a few weeks and going home. I want to compliment the distinguished Senator from Idaho on the very fine talk he is making.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thank the Senator from North Dakota for mentioning the subject of old-age pensions. I am vitally interested in it, and certainly I am prepared at any time to join with anyone who will seek to give our senior citizens a more just share of the fabulous production of this great country.

THE LINCOLN CASE

What are the antitrust charges made by the United States Government against the railroads, their associations, and bankers?

The suit is one filed in the United States district court, at Lincoln, Nebr., charging violation of the Sherman Act by the railroads, by J. P. Morgan & Co., and by Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

The indictment against them charges the fixing of discriminatory freight rates and the retarding of improvements in railroad services, equipment, and facilities.

The case is known as the United States of America against the Association of American Railroads, and others, and is known as the Lincoln case or the Western Railroad case.

Most of the large railroads west of the Mississippi River are defendants.

Generally, it is charged that the western railroads entered into the so-called western agreement under which no improvement in railroad services and facilities or reduction in rates could be made except after notification to all other railroads participating in the agreement.

If there was a protest, it was referred to the western Commissioner, who was the czar of the plan, for a proposed solution by him.

If the czar's proposal was not accepted, the coercive power of a committee of directors with headquarters in Wall Street, the Mount Olympus of the railroad business, was invoked.

The membership of the committee of directors was a cross-section of powerful economic and financial interests in the country.

Pressure by this group was effective in most cases to bring into line the recalcitrant western railroad managements which occasionally had the effrontery to assert managerial discretion to improve service or lower rates in order to obtain new business.

Simply and briefly stated, the plan was one to eliminate competition between the railroads in the West by forestalling any changes not satisfactory to the members of the conspiracy.

In short, an enterprising railroad was prevented from disturbing the status quo by the veto power of interests who maintain their dominant position by perpetuation of the existing status of the railroad industry.

Reductions in rates and improvements in service by an enterprising competitor serve the public interest but conflict with interests of monopolists who fear competition based upon better services for lower rates.

It is sufficient to say at this point that final power over all matters relating to railroad rates and services in the United States is vested in the Association of American Railroads with headquarters in the Transportation Building here in Washington.

Mr. President, there stands the citadel of power which has decreed that the West shall enter the competitive race under a handicap.

The acts charged to the defendants are matters that are of vital concern to the businessman and the farmer in the West, because the acts relate to the everyday matters of transportation on which the success or failure of economic enterprises so often depends.

I offer for your consideration some of the acts performed by the railroads on which the case is brought.

As most of the evidence in the Government's case is from the railroads' own records, there is no doubt of its authenticity.

One matter handled by the Western Commissioner related to potatoes. In this I was particularly interested because Idaho potatoes are justly famous for quality and flavor.

I grant that North Dakota raises some very fine potatoes also.

Mr. MURRAY. If the Senator will yield, I should like to inquire what his opinion is with reference to Montana potatoes?

Mr. TAYLOR. Montana potatoes are very fine. Inasmuch as the Senator from Maine is not on the floor, I do not have to mention Maine potatoes. We will just forget them.

Mr. MURRAY. Of course, the Senator will recognize that Montana was the first State to start the "big potato" habit in the United States. We introduced it in the Northern Pacific dining cars. The Northern Pacific began calling their line the "great big potato route." Montana is entitled to credit for having started in the United States this vogue of fine western potatoes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I want to apologize. The senior Senator from Maine is on the floor, but, whenever I start talking about potatoes, I always look in the direction of the desk where the junior Senator from Maine sits, because we have been together on several propositions having to do with protecting the interests of potato growers. But I want to say that the Maine potatoes are very fine. I might say that, last year, we had our annual "to-do" about potatoes, here in Washington—a dinner, featuring competition between Maine potatoes and Idaho potatoes. The dinner was held in the family dining room of the Senate. I sat across the table from the wife of the Governor of Maine. On each plate there were two potatoes, a Maine potato and an Idaho potato. The Maine potato was round. The Idaho potato was just as big around, but longer. It is a bigger potato. Everybody was cutting the potatoes open. It was all very beautiful. I cut open the Maine potato; it was beautiful, indeed. I cut open the Idaho potato; the center of it was about the color of one of the cigars I smoke.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. I am glad to hear the Senator's defense of Idaho potatoes; they certainly need it. Maine does not require such defense. Maine's potatoes speak for themselves, and the waiting markets gather them in.

Mr. TAYLOR. The producers of Maine potatoes are able to sell their potatoes, that is true, but I think it will be found that many high-tone restaurants advertise Idaho potatoes as a drawing card.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAYLOR. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I call attention to the fact that when either Idaho or Maine want potato seed they buy the seed in North Dakota.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, in 1946 the State of Idaho produced 42,000,000 bushels of potatoes, of which 32,000,000 were shipped by rail outside the State. In other words, we like our potatoes so well that we consumed 10,000,000 bushels of them ourselves.

Furnishing heater service to prevent the freezing of potatoes during the winter months is extremely important in order that potatoes may reach the markets unimpaired in quality.

One railroad, the Chicago & North Western, proposed to discontinue charging shippers for heater service in order to meet the competition of trucks.

In a letter to the committee of directors from the western Commissioner's files, the czar stated:

Proposed cancellation of heater charges on potato shipments.

That was the heading of the letter.

The practice of furnishing heater service for perishable commodities during winter months is one of long standing in western territory, charges being assessed to cover this additional service. However, in order to meet competition offered by trucks in bringing potatoes to the Chicago market and furnishing such heater service at no expense to the shipper, one of the lines proposed to discontinue any charge for providing this service. The other roads invoked the services of the Commissioner in an endeavor to have such action held in abeyance, stating that similar cancellation of heater charges would, of necessity, have to be made by competing lines, with resultant decrease in net revenues. This matter is now receiving consideration. However, further meetings of all interested roads are being held in an effort to arrive at some equitable practice to be put in effect for next season. In the event the matter is not satisfactorily adjusted in that manner, I shall, within a short time, furnish my conclusions as provided under the Commissioner plan.

Later, in a letter, dated October 2, 1933, to the committee of directors, the western Commissioner, the czar, stated that the proposal had been killed in accordance with his recommendation.

These are his regal words:

Proposal of C. & N. W. Railway Co. to eliminate charges for heater service on potato shipments.

With my letter of September 1, I enclosed copy of my Circular C-6-1 of August 23, 1933, on the above subject, embodying my conclusions in this case and recommending against the proposal. Advice was subsequently received from Mr. F. W. Sargent, president of the C. & N. W. Railway Co., that my conclusions were accepted and that they would be governed accordingly.

In other words, Mr. President, here a railroad wanted to lower the charge, that is, not charge extra for the heater service in shipping potatoes, but the big czar said "Nothing doing. You will charge just the same," and the railroad meekly fell in line.

Thus speaks his majesty.

Certainly, such a procedure as this is not in accord with the best interests of the farmers in the West. At the very least it raises a question of a violation of the antitrust laws which should be decided by the courts.

Everyone knows the importance of the livestock industry to the West. The great variety of packing-house products made from western livestock has a vast distribution to all parts of the Nation.

We find an instance of the western Commissioner taking a hand to block the efforts of an enterprising railroad to lower rates on packing-house products.

The western Commissioner was appealed to when the Chicago Great Western announced its intention to assert independent action and publish reduced rates on packing-house products.

After hearings the czar concluded that the reductions should not be made effective.

This conclusion was unacceptable to the Great Western, so the czar promptly reported that railroad's insubordination to the committee of directors in their temple in the clouds on Wall Street.

A resolution was immediately adopted by the committee calling upon the Great Western to reconsider and recede from its proposed action.

Shortly thereafter President Joyce, head of this recalcitrant railroad, was called to the carpet in New York to discuss with a group of the committee of directors his declination of the Commissioner's decision.

Later, in his annual summary the western Commissioner reported:

As a result of the conference with the subcommittee of the committee of directors, the Chicago Great Western Railroad Co. indicated a willingness to abide by my conclusions under the Commissioner agreement, and the proposal was withdrawn.

When the czar had failed, the gods prevailed.

The unholy idea of competition was exorcized from the tabernacle, and the railroad president, hat in hand, went down the elevator, a chastised man.

Naughty fellow—proposing to lower rates on livestock.

Let the farmers, the growers, and the stockmen pay higher rates, let the housewife pay higher prices, or let the neighborhood butcher absorb the difference, but do not try to lower those sacred railroad rates.

DISCRIMINATORY RATES

There are hundreds of examples of how such enormous powers in the hands of a private railroad supergovernment would work to the disadvantage of the West and the South.

We from the west here were heartened recently by the action of the United States Supreme Court in its decision in the case of New York against the United States.

That decision delivered a body blow at the freight-rate structure which has inhibited the development of what eastern bankers like to think of as colonial areas.

Under the discriminatory freight rate set-up, which has existed for many years, manufacturing in the West has been discouraged while manufacturing in the Northeast has been encouraged.

The railroad boys sat down together many years ago and decided that the industrial hub of our country should be just where it was in the 1800's, and that developing territories such as Idaho and Georgia should be mere colonial outposts, useful for raw materials which would be shipped to eastern factories for processing, and useful as markets for those raw materials after they were manufactured.

Freight rates have been so arranged as to permit the East to take the raw materials out of the South and the West cheaply and, at the same time, to block any attempt on our part to ship finished products to the East.

This decision of the Supreme Court seems to make clear that the Interstate Commerce Commission has the authority to lower freight rates.

By this decision the ICC is empowered to do what the State of Georgia and what the Justice Department have been trying to do through their suits against the railroads.

It may break up this discriminatory rate system.

But if S. 110 becomes the law of the land these suits and decisions will be swept aside.

The railroad private government will again have power to coerce carriers to make rates subject only to the always gentle and always considerate ICC.

Mr. President, let me give another example of the way in which this freight rate discrimination works. Our Idaho wool growers must ship their product all the way to the Boston wool market to sell it. Not only must they pay freight to a point far distant from Idaho, but they must pay freight on the dirt which the wool contains.

There are no wool-cleaning plants in Idaho, because of the freight rate structure and other factors. Therefore, wool is sold "in the grease" as they say in the trade. That means that Idaho woolgrowers pay freight charges to transport as much dirt as they do wool. Idaho wool, uncleaned, runs about 53 percent to 61 percent foreign materials. If we had a processing plant and marketing facilities in Idaho that freight rate could be saved.

Likewise the freight in shipping finished materials—suits, blankets, and clothes of all kinds could be saved. We buy back much of our own wool in the form of finished products—products manufactured in the East. It is the lopsided freight rate structure which makes this sort of hi-jacking possible.

The simple and sensible thing would be to process or clean the wool in Idaho, weave it into cloth in Idaho, and even make suits and blankets in Idaho. It would be a great saving not only to the people of Idaho, the producers, processors, and laborers of Idaho, and would redound to their benefit, but it would also be a saving to all the people of the United States. They would ultimately save these freight rates. But the railroad freight rates on finished goods moving east prohibit this.

S. 110 is a bill that will allow this situation and such schemes as the western Commissioner plan to continue in operation unchecked by liability, to antitrust prosecution, restricting competition in the field of transportation to the detriment of the West.

PRACTICES UNDER WESTERN AGREEMENT

There is documentary evidence available as to the misdeeds of the western Commissioner and committee of directors under the western Commissioner plan on which I could talk for a week, and on which I should probably talk at least that long.

I shall, however, be content merely to list in abbreviated form a few more of the so-called accomplishments under the western agreement.

These are from hearings on H. R. 2536 in the Seventy-ninth Congress; let me read to the Senate this roll of infamy:

In 1934 reductions in rates on less-than-carload agricultural implements moving from Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Nebraska stations to points in Kansas were prevented.

In 1934 elimination of the absorption by St. Louis lines of the expense of trucking shipments from the rails of one line to the rails of another in St. Louis was accomplished. The railroads wanted to make these reductions, but the clearing house, with the czar presiding, said "No."

In 1934 a shortening of running time by 24 hours on California perishables into New York was prevented.

In 1934 reduced excursion fares of 1 cent per mile from Montana points to Chicago and return were prevented.

In 1934 a reduced fare of $57.40 from El Paso to the Twin Cities by way of St. Louis, Memphis, or Vicksburg was prevented.

In 1934 the construction of a spur track to serve an industry already served by one track was prevented through pressure applied by Committeeman Arthur Curtiss James, of 40 Wall Street, New York.

In 1935 a reduced $6 round-trip excursion-coach fare between St. Louis and Chicago was prevented.

Placing of motion pictures on passenger trains was prevented in 1936, and, in addition, it was agreed that no road would put facilities for recreation on any passenger train without giving 8 months' advance notice to all other western lines.

In 1937 reductions in rates on bananas, New Orleans to Shreveport, from 63 to 40 cents, were prevented, according to the Commissioner's letter of January 3, 1938.

In 1937 the Commissioner prevented the Wabash from establishing a week-end round-trip excursion fare of $3.65, Decatur to Chicago and return.

In 1938 the efforts of the Rock Island to substitute tourist cars for standard sleepers between Memphis and Los Angeles failed when the Missouri Pacific took the position that the proposal would break down the passenger-fare structure and make it necessary for other lines to put on tourist cars.

Efforts in 1939 to extend return time limit on round-trip excursion tickets generally to 6 months were unsuccessful.

In 1940 the efforts of the Missouri-Kansas-Texas of Texas to reduce rates on crude oil between the Shreveport group points and Texas points were unsuccessful when the Commissioner, or czar, disapproved.

In 1940 the efforts of the Illinois Central failed to establish the convenience of credit cards good for railroad tickets, pullman tickets, dining and buffet service, all-expense tours, and baggage charges.

In 1941 the Missouri Pacific, by agreement of March 28, 1941, agreed to a slowdown in delivery of carloads of goods at Wichita coming from St. Louis and points east and northeast thereof.

Even transportation involving the sports life of the country was not free from interference by the western conspirators. Football excursions felt the touch of the conspiracy. On November 9, 1935, the Commissioner was involved in the making of an agreement among Texas lines that no intrastate football excursion fares in Texas would be established without the Commissioner's study thereof to determine whether they were in line with his previous opinion on the subject dated August 3, 1935.

This agreement was the result of the action of the M.-K.-T. of Texas in establishing a football excursion fare of $3.15 instead of $4.20 between Austin and Dallas, Tex., in connection with a game at Dallas on October 12, 1935.

Attention is called to an interesting case, Union Pacific Railroad Company against Spano, decided by the Supreme Court of Colorado in 1936, in which a Colorado receiver of grapefruit was able to recover damages from a railroad for slowing up a delivery to him.

Delivery of the shipment, which arrived in Denver about 10:40 a. m. on a given date, could have been made within from 15 minutes to 2 hours, as the consignee demanded, but was forbidden by the railroad during business hours of that day. Delivery was purposely and willfully held up until the following day. In consequence, the market value declined. The fruit dealer sued and won a judgment for damages.

The verdict was challenged by the railroad on the ground that it was forced to take this high-handed action because of an agreement previously entered into by all Denver delivering railroads. That agreement provided that freight of the character involved arriving after 7 a. m. should not be delivered before 5:30 p. m. of the same day. That, of course, means that delivery is delayed until the next day.

The Supreme Court of Colorado, however, upheld the receiver of the grapefruit at Denver.

Apparently the western railroads by their agreements are violating State laws in addition to the Federal antitrust laws.

But let us consider for a moment the effrontery involved in that case.

Imagine a railroad coming into court and admitting, nay asserting, that its arbitrary, inconsiderate, arrogant, and tyrannical action in withholding delivery of fruit for a full day was a part of a prearranged, ordained, and codified canon of railroad ethics.

Mr. President, is this the industry to which we are now asked to give special privileges and special exemptions from the antitrust laws?

Are we to tell them, "Go and sin some more"?

Are we to take away the public's last shred of protection and turn shippers, merchants, farmers, and passengers over to the railroads?

With the experience of effective action of the nature I have recounted under the western Commissioner plan as a background, the Association of American Railroads was formed.

In 1933 preliminary discussions among banking and investment groups led to formation of a steering committee to represent stockholding and investment interests in creating a national organization for the central control of railroad affairs including, of course, freight rates.

THE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN RAILROADS

On September 21, 1934, the plan was approved by a joint meeting of the member lines of the American Railway Association and the Association of Railway Executives.

A steering committee which represented the financial interests stood ready to exert its influence and the influence of its associates among directors and substantial stockholders to compel the subordination of interests of individual railroads to the dictates of group interest.

This assured the cooperation of railroad directors.

President Williamson of the New York Central expected that the activities of the Association would produce some unhappiness, but, as he observed to President Atterbury of the Pennsylvania, all must expect in the common good "to be pinched in places where it will hurt."

The smaller roads were somewhat dubious of the mutual benefits to flow from the pinching.

At least two small roads, the Bangor & Aroostook and the Wheeling & Lake Erie, sought to join with specific provisions reserving the right to resist association decisions affecting their respective roads.

Even this limited retention of individual initiative was rejected by the association, and Vice President Cleveland of the Association of American Railroads sought to reassure the doubtful by telling them that as far as possible his policy should be "a cooperative one through leadership rather than through coercion."

But he did not disavow the power to coerce.

He merely promised to refrain from using it so long as the smaller roads behaved.

Ultimately, of course, the very power that produced their fears compelled the small roads to join.

This was an "or else" proposition.

The Association of American Railroads was superimposed on the machinery established in the West, the East, and the South for handling the fixing of freight rates by the railroads.

That is, the Association of American Railroads is the supreme appellate authority to which appeals are made when the regional rate machinery is unable to keep the railroads in line.

The Association of American Railroads, since its organization in 1934, has been very active in preventing rate reductions.

On several occasions, according to its own records, the association has either hastened the effective date of rate increases or persuaded rail carriers to raise rates.

The association is very proud of this.

Concerning one of the general increases in freight rates granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Association of American Railroads boasted that—largely through cooperative efforts of this department—

That is, the traffic department of the Association of American Railroads—the effective dates of the advances were set forward at least 15 days earlier than was anticipated.

This means that the people of the United States were saddled with this general rate increase 15 days earlier than would otherwise have been the case had it not been for the Association of American Railroads.

In regard to increased rates on specific items the Association of American Railroads has reported, for instance, that it had secured an increase in the rates on rice by means of cooperation between the common-carrier barge lines operating on the inland waterways and competing rail lines.

Likewise, it has claimed credit for "securing an advance in the cotton rates in both southwestern and southeastern territories."

The records of the Association of American Railroads show many, many other instances in which the association's activities have increased the cost of transportation.

I have picked at random a few of the instances.

Let me read to you from another roll of infamy.

This time the misdeeds are those of the Association of American Railroads:

It persuaded the Chicago lines from increasing their absorption at the Union Stock Yards covering services for livestock. If established at Chicago this policy would have been extended to all markets in Western Territory. It would have saved livestock shippers an estimated $1,000,000 per annum.

It persuaded the southwestern and the western trunk lines to increase their rates and minimum weights on furniture to avoid a reduction in the rates and minimum weights on furniture originating in Eastern and Southern Territories.

The southern and southwestern lines undertook to reduce their rates on paper and pulpboard into the northern markets. This probably would have resulted in a reduction in the rates on the entire paper group and paperboard group from the North. This controversy was finally adjusted by increasing by 10 percent the level of rates which had been proposed by the southern and southwestern carriers.

Largely through cooperative efforts of the Association of American Railroads' traffic department the rates on imported vegetable oils from Gulf and South Atlantic ports have been increased from 3 to 6 cents per 100 pounds, making it unnecessary for what otherwise would have required a reduction from North Atlantic ports.

Largely through cooperative efforts of this department the effective date of the advances were set forward at least 15 days earlier than was anticipated.

It also prevented many reductions in the rates on soda products and created an understanding as between the lines in the Eastern and Southwestern Territories to keep rates up.

It persuaded the Comptroller General to change his rulings to the effect that land-grant deductions should be made in reduced rates on animal food products in the drought-relief territory. Thus, the Government's appropriation for drought relief was cut into for the benefits of the railroads. No humane feelings stay the avariciousness of the carriers.

It persuaded the southern lines not to make a reduction in their citrus-fruit rates which, if made, would have caused a similar reduction in rates from producing points in Texas and California; and the AAR action thus cost well over $1,000,000 per annum.

It has been instrumental in having a policy adopted by the individual railroads not to make joint rates with trucking companies, the result of which has cost shippers and consumers a considerable sum of money.

It persuaded the eastern lines to refrain from rescinding their wharfage charges on coal, which would have represented a considerable saving to shippers.

The AAR traffic department assisted in avoiding suspension of increased rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission and in obtaining modification of other orders or requirements of the Commission that might have resulted in reductions in rates.

It has participated in conferences with shipper groups and obtained, as a result thereof, higher rates, with the retention of traffic.

The result of these activities by the Association of American Railroads is an increase in revenue of millions of dollars to the railroads, taken from the pockets of those who pay the cost of transportation.

Mr. President, the traffic department of the Association of American Railroads boasted in 1938 that it had increased the railroads' revenue at least $3,000,000 a year for a period of several years through lobbying activities which produced increased rates. No doubt it improved its performance as time went on.

Yet, under this legislation, Mr. President, the Association of American Railroads would be eligible to receive approval from the Interstate Commerce Commission that would throw a mantle of protection from the antitrust laws around the association, and depredations of the American public would go unchecked. The Commission seems to indicate it would give such permission, by approving this proposed legislation in principle.

Mr. President, most of the past success of the Association of American Railroads has consisted of lobbying the ICC.

If monopoly control were turned over to the ICC, the association would be able to play all games on its home grounds.

PRESENT FREEDOM FROM REGULATION

It seems to me that a fundamental assumption of this bill is that the Interstate Commerce Commission is in fact presently empowered to pass upon every detail of rate making and every detail in the physical operation of a railroad, as well. If that assumption were a valid one, perhaps the measure would not be quite so objectionable.

Senate bill 110 is designed to take the railroads out of the jurisdiction of the antitrust laws, that is, the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act, with their amendments.

The supporters of the measure have stated on many occasions that the Interstate Commerce Commission can provide all of the policing necessary to assure that the railroads should not be operated as one gigantic monopoly. They have said that the antitrust laws are not necessary to protect the public interest, insofar as the railroads are concerned. That is an interesting argument; however, it is refuted by the Interstate Commerce Commission itself, in its annual report for the year 1938, from which I quote as follows:

> There is gross exaggeration in the idea that every act of the railroads is subject to regulation. The railroads have a large degree of initiative in the making of their rates and have freely made a multitude of reductions to meet competition. We have no power to control their passenger service and exercise very little control over their freight service. They select and pay their officers without supervision or hindrance. Nor do we undertake to tell them what equipment and supplies they may buy, how they shall operate their shops or maintain their tracks, what rail, ballast, and ties they shall use; what stations or other buildings they shall erect, what construction contracts they shall let, or how they shall manage their affairs in many other ways. The pattern of their regulation is in no way unique, but is substantially the same as is now applied generally throughout the country by the States or the Federal Government to other public-utility companies.

Mr. Wendell Berge, who distinguished himself in a long and brilliant career in antitrust work in the Department of Justice, has assembled an imposing array of court interpretations of the Interstate Commerce Commission Act which documents this contention that the ICC does not attempt minute regulation of every act and every rate of the railroads. It is his interpretation, and that of the ICC itself, that the Commission is empowered only to set ceilings and floors in the field of railroad rates. Within those limits the railroads may set their own rates. In other words, they may compete.

If the entire job of policing the railroads against the monopolistic practices were to be turned over to the ICC, as this bill proposes, we should then also have legislation authorizing the Commission to pass upon every rate, every purchase, and every proposed improvement in service by the individual railroads or by their joint rate-making bureaus. That, of course, would involve a tremendous staff; and if the Congress were to decide upon such a course, it would have to realize that an appropriation of many millions of dollars would be necessary to enable the ICC to carry out such regulation.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has estimated that at present it passes on no more than approximately 2 percent of the rates charged by American railroads.

We have seen that it is not presently set up on such a scale as to be able to police the individual rates of all railroads. We have seen that it is probably not desirable that it should be. That being the case, how much less desirable is it to allow a private rate-making bureau, such as the system headed by the Association of American Railroads, to perform that function.

This bill would make it possible for the Association of American Railroads to function as a kind of supergovernment, in that it would have complete control of the economic life of this Nation, through its final powers to fix rates for transportation of commodities to all sections of the country.

The power to fix railroad rates in our economy is the power to make or break business. The West and the South have been continually retarded in industrial development by the discriminatory freight rates which have been imposed upon those sections under the present system.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish to commend the Senator from Idaho for the very able address he has been making. I also wish to express my profound regret that there has not been a larger attendance in the Senate during the course of the Senator's remarks. The Senator from Idaho has shown conclusively by the factual statements he has made how this bill will militate against the people of the great section of the West from which he comes. He has pointed out how the practices which this bill will make legitimate will increase the handicaps under which the farmers of the West are laboring, and how it probably will strike a death blow at small industry throughout the West.

I regret that so many Senators see fit to close their eyes and shut their ears to the facts. At the time when this important statement is being made by the Senator from Idaho in regard to the vital effect which this bill will have on the West, there are in attendance only about a dozen Senators. The junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH], the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] are the only Senators present on this side of the aisle. On the other side of the Chamber the eminent majority leader the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES] are present.

I regret that a quorum is not present, so that western Senators in particular could have had a better understanding of the devastating effect of the bill upon the great West. I am sure that had they heard and analyzed the remarks which have been made by the Senator from Idaho they would have undertaken to defeat the bill, and prevent their people being held longer in bondage by these illegal acts and conspiracies.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator include the Senator from Michigan in his list of those present?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Michigan, the President pro tempore, was presiding, and since he was occupying the President's dais at the time, naturally I did not call his name.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did the Senator put me in the category of those present?

Mr. RUSSELL. I include the senior Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. WHITE. I hope the Senator from Georgia will admit that the quality of representation is high, even if the numbers are not great.

Mr. RUSSELL. The last thing I would do would be to disregard the quality of the representation, but the geographic areas represented by those in attendance at the moment are largely those within Official Territory, which naturally are supporting the pending bill, and I was expressing my regret that other Senators who have such a vital stake in the legislation, particularly those from the Western States, had not heard the remarks of the Senator from Idaho, who has shown that the pending bill is most injurious to the people of the West.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thank the Senator from Georgia for his complimentary remarks and informal roll call. In self-defense, I wish to point out that I am not the only Senator whose remarks on the pending measure have not been listened to.

If the power to fix rates were made absolute, and not subject to challenge, even in the courts, those who controlled the railroads would be the economic dictators of this country. No new industry could start in business anywhere without a nod from this supergovernment in the form of favorable freight rates. No existing business could continue to operate without permission from this super, private government in the form of continued favorable freight rates. The railroads could decide which sections of the country would have a raw material economy and which sections would have a manufacturing economy.

It has often been contended that legislation such as this is necessary to allow the establishment and continuance of joint through rates. As a matter of fact, there is nothing in the present antitrust laws to prohibit the establishment of joint through rates, and the Justice Department has never taken the position that the establishment of such rates was in any way illegal, if they are freely entered into by the participating railroads.

The language of the bill, especially with the committee amendments, seems to be such as to offer a great many safeguards. But the basic fact remains that the bill is one to legalize a monopoly.

In some cases it charges the Interstate Commerce Commission with the job of policing very minute details of railroad management action to see that they are not against the public interest, although admittedly monopolistic. However, there is no assurance that the Interstate Commerce Commission will be given the huge staff necessary to engage in such minute policing. On the contrary, the action of the majority in this Congress has been aimed almost exclusively at reducing appropriations, regardless of need, or the requirements for carrying out laws on the statute books.

There is no reason to believe that the attitude of Senators on the other side of the aisle would be less parsimonious with the Interstate Commerce Commission after it had been given this tremendous job of enforcement. Such a policy seems completely out of line with our ideas of free American enterprise, even if it could be accomplished. It takes from management responsibility to obey the antitrust law. It sets up the ICC as the policeman on the corner who must have his eye on the railroad company manager every moment.

Mr. Berge points up the difficulties of administering any such arrangement very well in his statement on the bill. He says:

> The point simply is, that the language of this act purports to preserve independent action only after the determination has been arrived at through procedures set up in the agreement.
> After a proposed rate change has run the whole gamut of the procedures that may be approved by the Commission, then, under the strict terms of the bill, a dissenting carrier may disregard it if he doesn't like the result. The bill does not state that a dissenting carrier does not need to go along through the various phases of the private appellate procedure, or that he can act independently prior to or during the procedural processes.
> Moreover, regardless of the inclusion in the agreements of a provision for independent action, approval of an integrated structure of associations, such as now exist, with inherent power, through collective economic pressure, to control a dissident carrier, would, as a practical matter, dissolve a stipulation of independent action into a pious hope.

It seems to me that the limiting language contained in the bill is in the nature of rather attractive window-dressing. The basic idea of the measure is to exempt the railroads from the antitrust laws, and to free them from the requirements imposed by the antitrust laws.

Once monopoly has been legalized, it will be futile to impose minor limitations upon it. In the main, such limitations will be so minute as to be unenforceable under the program here set forth.

It will be noted that the language of the bill is such that the Interstate Commerce Commission, at least in the field of rates, needs only to approve a basic agreement between carriers setting up the rules and procedure for establishing rates. Thereupon any action by the carriers taken pursuant to that master agreement need not be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Therein we find complete freedom to set freight rates and passenger rates in all areas of the country, on any basis they choose. Therein lies the machinery for completing the rule of the industrial life of this Nation by the men who come to dominate the private rate-making agencies, which would be legalized and exempted from prosecution under the antitrust laws.

There is still another sweeping exemption from the antitrust laws tucked away in an inconspicuous part of the bill. I refer to paragraph 9 of the bill, which reads:

> No agreement approved by the Commission under this section, and no conference or joint or concerted action pursuant to and in conformity with such agreement as the same may be conditioned by the Commission, shall be deemed to be a contract, combination, conspiracy, or monopoly in restraint of trade or commerce within the meaning of the antitrust laws.

The able Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] has summed up the effect of this paragraph very well.

He has pointed out that not only would the railroads or other carriers be freed of the restrictions of the antitrust laws in taking action pursuant to such an agreement, but bankers, financiers, and manufacturers could likewise participate in the immunity.

Any action which could possibly be construed as falling within the scope of a basic carrier agreement would be legalized, and the antitrust laws would be made a mockery.

WARTIME OVERCHARGES

The blackest mark of all against the Association of American Railroads and its subordinate organizations is the one that I speak of now—the gouging of millions of dollars in exorbitant rates, fares, and other charges from the Federal Government during World War II. This was done at a time when it was easy for the railroads to take advantage of a country whose attention was riveted on fighting for its life.

The conduct of the railroads during the war will also serve as a guide for what might be expected of them if they are allowed to obtain immunity from the antitrust laws under Senate bill 110. I say this because, during the war, a small measure of relief from the antitrust laws was granted the railroads in the making of rates on Government traffic. Making of these rates was by a group known as the Traffic Executive Chairmen's Committee, operating under the auspices of the Association of American Railroads.

The high rates paid by the United States Government became a general topic for discussion in transportation circles. In order to ascertain the reasonableness of freight rates paid by the War Department on wartime traffic, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, the late Harold D. Smith, appointed a committee of three to investigate and report to him.

The committee was composed of three impartial transportation experts, two of whom are Washington lawyers, Charles E. Bell and E. B. Ussery, and W. B. Hammer, a member of the staff of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The committee issued its report, commonly known as the Bell-Hammer-Ussery Report, under the date of October 20, 1945.

As one would expect, the committee found that immediately after Pearl Harbor there commenced an unprecedented production of the materials and tools required by the armed forces—the Army, the Navy, and the collateral branches of those services, including the Air Forces and the Marine Corps, as well as the Maritime Commission, the War Shipping Administration, and other war agencies.

As the war progressed, this production increased by tremendous leaps and bounds.

Modern instruments and accessories of war were invented, and the production of those already in existence was accelerated.

New plants and facilities were constructed on a huge scale, very largely in areas where none had previously existed, as well as in other areas. Existing plants engaged in commercial production were converted to war production, and at a greatly increased tempo.

Transportation became of transcendent importance, not only for raw materials moving in tremendous volume, but for semiprocessed materials moving to finishing plants all over the country and for finished products from those plants and from primary origins in the various areas to transit or storage points and other destinations throughout the United States, and to the various ports of the country for transshipment overseas.

With the growth of the Army and other armed forces, of military and naval installations, and the shipbuilding plants of the country, huge quantities of construction materials, ordnance, ammunition, subsistence of all kinds, uniforms and other clothing, shoes, raw materials, and finished products of every description had to be transported.

Literally hundreds of thousands of individual items were transported in greater or less volume.

A large proportion of this traffic moved from and to points between which previously there had been little or no commercial movement and, therefore, rates adapted to the movement of a great volume of tonnage between such points had never been established by the carriers.

The report showed that in 1943 about 88,300,000 tons of traffic moved for the War Department at total charges paid by the Finance Office of the War Department of approximately $1,200,000,000. About 92 percent of this traffic moved by rail.

In 1944 some 94,000,000 tons moved, about 90 percent by rail, at a cost of almost $1,394,000,000.

For the first 8 months of 1945, nearly 71,000,000 tons were transported, 90 percent by rail, with charges of $988,000,000.

It was shown that the total movement of traffic for the War Department during the war period averaged about 100,000,000 tons annually, of which 90 percent moved by rail.

Noting that an exhaustive study would be a herculean task requiring years to complete, the committee confined its study to representative war traffic for account of the War Department.

I wish to call to your attention some of the facts and conclusions shown by this study.

They concern items known to many of us as necessary for waging a successful war against the Axis.

These examples are chosen at random and are representative of what the committee found.

On airplanes and airplane parts it is stated that—

In the opinion of the committee, the rates charged on airplanes and airplane parts, especially the parts, have been excessive.

On ammunition and explosives:

The committee is of the opinion that the Department has at all times since the beginning of the war been assessed excessive charges for the transportation of ammunition, explosives.

In regard to combat vehicles, which classification includes armored cars, Army tractor tanks, gun carriages or mounts, half tracks, and tractors with vehicle beds, the committee stated that—

In the opinion of the committee, the rates charged on combat vehicles to the Pacific coast clearly were and are excessive.

Concerning charges for the transportation of airplane aluminum landing mats, it was held that—

In the opinion of the committee, the War Department has been and is being assessed excessive rates on aluminum landing mats.

In regard to wooden pontoon bridge parts—

The committee is of the opinion that the rates assessed prior to August 15, 1944, were excessive.

On radio outfits:

The committee is of the opinion that excessive rates were assessed on all shipments moving from the Holabird Signal Depot to Pacific coast destinations prior to August 1, 1944.

Concerning shell containers it was stated:

In the opinion of the committee, the presently applicable rates applied on these containers are excessive.

Concerning soldiers' rations the committee found that excessive rates had been charged.

On wire camouflage netting or nets the report stated:

The committee finds that the Department has been assessed excessive rates on transcontinental traffic on all shipments of wire camouflage netting or nets from transcontinental origin groups to Pacific coast destinations moving both prior to and subsequent to March 30, 1945.

In its general conclusions and recommendations the committee makes this significant statement:

Based on the committee's investigations and studies and its general knowledge, it cannot escape the general conclusion and the firm conviction that the Government has paid, and is paying, many millions of dollars in excessive charges for the transportation of matériel and supplies of the War Department.

Likewise—

The Government has not only paid excessive charges in a stupendous amount before and since Pearl Harbor, but it is still paying such excess charges on presently moving traffic and will continue to pay them until appropriate action is taken to remedy this situation.

Thus, we find what the railroads will do when given only a slight amount of relief from the antitrust laws—as was given the Traffic Executive Chairman's Committee for the purpose of negotiating rates for war traffic. What can be expected if this legislation is made law, under which the railroads will be given complete immunity from the antitrust laws?

The answer is all too obvious.

Mr. President, the public interest demands the defeat of this vicious legislation.

Free competitive enterprise must not be weakened by waiving the application of the antitrust laws and the promotion of monopoly.

Various transit arrangements were necessary for the handling of war traffic similar to those needed for commercial traffic.

A transit arrangement, or transit privilege, consists of stopping carloads of a given commodity at some intermediate point or points, designated as transit points, on the route between origin and destinations, for the purpose of some manufacturing or other processing or storage by the shippers or owner of the property, and subsequent forwarding from the transit point to destination.

Under such arrangement the through rate applicable over the route of movement from origin to destination is charged on the commodity so transported, plus a charge for the additional service performed by the carriers at the transit point, and also subject to switching charges, if any, as published in tariffs on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission or State regulatory bodies.

Provision is made that the services of unloading or loading cars at the transit point shall be performed by the shipper or owner of the property, or at his expense.

Under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act and the State statutes, the provisions governing transit arrangements, and the charges therefor, applicable to commercial traffic, must be published in tariff form and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission or the appropriate State regulatory body.

Concerning the handling of these transit arrangements, I believe the Senate should consider the committee's treatment of the subject.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that an excerpt from the report be included in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WARTIME TRANSIT ARRANGEMENT OVERCHARGES

Commencing in July 1941, the War Department has effectuated many transit arrangements with the carriers whereunder War Department material and supplies may be stopped at points intermediate between points of origin and the ports of the United States and accorded various forms of manufacturing or processing and/or storage, and subsequent forwarding to the ports or railheads for transshipment overseas. To a lesser extent similar arrangements have been effectuated on various specific commodities from various points of origin in the United States to various domestic destinations. For the most part such arrangements have been effectuated at points at which the War Department had established Army depots and holding points and had constructed facilities for this purpose. The facilities so provided were usually set up at locations considerably removed from centers of population and industries, in order that they might not interfere with the terminal operations of the carriers at important points. Under such arrangements War Department material and supplies may be stopped and stored at such points while in the course of transportation to the ports or other destinations, thus eliminating the necessity of holding thousands of cars at the ports awaiting vessels for overseas movement.

Many of the aforesaid transit arrangements provide for certain manufacturing of processing, or changes in the method of packaging, as well as for storage of such commodities, but in this respect they do not differ in principle from a great many transit arrangements on commercial traffic; for example, transit arrangements, (1) on grain, whereunder grain can be converted into flour and other milled or processed products; and (2) rough lumber may be converted into dressed or finished lumber or other lumber products.

Some of the transit arrangements accorded the War Department also provide for transit arrangements on the same commodity at not more than two transit points, but here again they do not differ in principle from certain commercial arrangements, for example, (1) on grain shipped from primary markets to Chicago, where it is stored and/or processed and subsequently reshipped on basis of reshipping or proportional rates to other points from which it may again be shipped to still other points where it is milled or manufactured into flour and other finished products, all with the protection of the through rates applicable on the products from the first grain reshipping point to the ultimate destinations of the products; (2) on cotton shipped from country points to compress points from whence the compressed cotton may be shipped to warehousing points, from whence it may be forwarded to points of consumption.

Instead of incorporating in published tariffs the transit arrangements accorded the War Department, the carriers elected to grant such arrangements through the medium of section 22 quotations. * * * (Sec. 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act allows the carriers to quote the Government free or reduced rates.) The most important of these, which authorize transit arrangements on specified commodities from all origins in the United States moving to the various ports and railheads for transshipment overseas, and which provide for certain manufacturing and processing, as well as storage at the transit points, and also authorize transit at not more than two transit points on the route of movement are the following: Section 22 quotation No. 31 series, authorizes transit arrangements on specified articles of ammunition, explosives, and so forth, at transit points specifically named in the quotation; (2) section 22 quotation No. 206 series, authorizes transit arrangements on the articles specifically named in the quotation, included within the term "subsistence stores," at transit points specifically named in the quotation; (3) section 22 quotation No. 16 series, authorizes transit arrangements on property of the War Department at transit points specifically named in the quotation, except items of ammunition, explosives, and so forth, on which transit is authorized in quotation No. 31 series, and on subsistence stores on which transit is authorized in quotation No. 206 series.

Scores of other section 22 quotations have been issued from time to time authorizing transit arrangements on specified commodities and groups of commodities from and to specifically named points, specifically named areas, or specifically named territories.

All of these section 22 transit quotations provide for the application of the through published tariff rates or the specific rates or basis of rates set forth in such quotations. All such quotations contain the following provisions:

1. That the rates therein authorized for line-haul application will not be subject to land-grant deductions;

2. That specified charges will be assessed for the transit privileges accorded at each transit point;

3. That such transit arrangements will also be subject to all other applicable charges, including diversion, reconsigning and/or switching charges, if any, as published in tariffs on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission and the respective State regulatory bodies;

4. That additional charges, based on certain distance scales, will be assessed for backhauls and out-of-line-hauls, but subject to certain exceptions where indirect routes meet the rates applicable via direct routes through the transit points.

In their various section 22 quotations, authorizing transit for the War Department and other Government agencies, the carriers have required that the rates and charges authorized in those quotations be subject to the Ex parte 148 increases on and subsequent to May 15, 1943.

Reference is made to the report and order of the Commission, dated April 6, 1943, suspending the increases as of May 15, 1943, and to the fact that in that report the Commission made mention of rates on various commodities which were below the normal level and which had been established at the request of the Government, including the War Department, and that the Commission did not require the suspension of the Ex parte 148 increases in such rates. The Commission's report, of course, was limited to rates in published tariffs on file with it. The Commission also stated in the same report the record does not enable us now to give a more precise specification of such rates, but the petitioning railroads may bring them to our attention by appropriate applications for individual and informal consideration. On April 29, 1943, the carriers furnished the Commission with a list of such purported rates and published transit arrangements thereon.

In the supplemental report of the Commission on further hearing, decided December 12, 1944, in which the Commission further suspended the application of the Ex parte 148 increases, the following statement appears:

"As hereinbefore noted, the Secretary of War at the hearing called to our attention the fact that, with respect to special rates made for the Federal Government, some railroads have apparently construed our findings as authorizing the continuance of the increases in such rates although when compared with normal rates paid by shippers generally the special rates were not below reasonable levels. We are of the view that we should except from our order suspending the authorized increases only rates which had been reduced below reasonable levels as a real concession to the Government, but not rates which, even though reduced at the request of the Government, were not below such levels. The petitioning carriers should remove the increases insofar as they apply to rates or charges which, while established for the Government, were not below reasonable or normal levels as compared with rates paid by shippers generally in the same territory."

The carriers, however, have continued on and after May 15, 1943, the Ex parte 148 increases in all rates and charges provided for in their section 22 transit quotations, including rates covered by such quotations prior to March 18, 1942, and which had been applicable prior to the ex parte increases. Moreover, as to War Department traffic covered by transit quotations issued since May 15, 1943, the carriers provided that the Ex parte 148 increases shall be applied on traffic moving before, on, and subsequent to that date.

The War Department has no record of its tonnage moving under transit arrangements, but from studies the committee has made of the commodities involved and of the section 22 quotations, it has no hesitancy in asserting that such tonnage has constituted a very great proportion of the total tonnage of that Department.

With millions of tons moving each year under these section 22 transit quotations, it is readily apparent that the Ex parte 148 increases have totaled many millions of dollars each year on such War Department traffic. The added charges of the carriers for their services at transit points have also been subjected to the Ex parte 148 increases on traffic moving on and subsequent to May 15, 1943. For example, where the previous transit charge was 3¼ cents per 100 pounds, under the Ex parte 148 increases it became 3½ cents.

In a petition filed with the Commission, the carriers estimated that the amount they have received from the Ex parte 148 increases on Government traffic accorded transit mounted to twenty to thirty million dollars annually.

Commencing in the latter part of 1943 the matter of the elimination of the Ex parte 148 increases from the rates provided for in section 22 transit quotations, has been the subject of extended correspondence and many conferences between the War Department and other Government agencies and the carriers, but the carriers have steadfastly refused to eliminate them. Summarized, their reasons are as follows:

1. That there has been an enormous saving to the Government through the granting of these transit arrangements which authorize the application of through rates from points of origin to destinations on such transited traffic instead of the full combinations of the local rates into and out of the transit points.

2. That under the language of the Commission's decision in Ex parte 148, the transit arrangements accorded the War Department and other governmental agencies are privileges which under no circumstances would have been extended commercially, and that the Ex parte 148 increases should be continued in the light of the Commission's decision.

3. That the mere holding or storing of freight at some intermediate point awaiting a time when it will be to the interest of the owner of the goods to forward it to final destination represents quite an extension of the original purpose of transit arrangements.

4. That every transit privilege granted means a very large increase in the cost of service, and that under a minimum operation the transit arrangements accorded on Government traffic involves four terminal services in place of two on the direct movement, and that in numerous quotations six terminal services are involved instead of the two contemplated under published through rates.

5. That the net income of the railroads has steadily decreased each month as compared with the previous year, beginning in June 1943, and notwithstanding the fact that gross earnings have increased the unit costs have advanced due to increases in wages and costs of supplies; that the conclusion reached by the carriers not to remove the ex parte increases is logical when consideration is given to the very large saving which the Government received on account of these transit arrangements.

The committee's comments on the foregoing reasons advanced by the carriers are as follows:

1. That the establishment of transit arrangements on Government traffic has resulted in substantial savings under the full combinations of the local rates may not be denied. However, it is absurd to measure such savings by the difference in the through rates and the full combinations of the local rates to and from the transit points. Especially is this so when there is taken into consideration the thousands of transit arrangements throughout the country on hundreds of commodities in commercial movement on which the application of the through rates has been voluntarily authorized by the carriers which are substantially less than the full combination of the local rates to and from the transit joints. Why the carriers should advance this reason as a justification for continuing the Ex parte 148 increases on Government traffic moving under transit arrangements is not clear to the committee since it is well known that the carriers have removed such increases on a tremendous volume of commercial traffic accorded transit arrangements, including storage in transit. Such an argument forces the conclusion that the carriers were, and are, unwilling to accord the Government the same treatment they have accorded the commercial shippers.

2. The War Department and other Government agencies have contended with the carriers, and correctly so, that the language used by the Commission in its Ex parte 148 decision is not such as to approve the application of the Ex parte 148 increases on all Government traffic on and after May 15, 1943. It is the contention of the War Department that the line-haul rates authorized in such quotations, without the addition of the Ex parte 148 increases, are rates which had not been reduced below reasonable or normal levels, whether such rates were incorporated in published tariffs or authorized by section 22 quotations.

The Office of Defense Transportation also made efforts to induce the carriers to remove the Ex parte 148 increases in the line-haul rates covered by transit arrangements accorded Government traffic. In a letter dated March 9, 1944, written personally by the late Joseph B. Eastman, then Director, Office of Defense Transportation, addressed to Mr. A. F. Cleveland, vice president, traffic, Association of American Railroads, he urged that the Ex parte 148 increases should be removed. He stated, among other things:

"I do not subscribe to the position of the carriers that an increase in line-haul freight rates is justified simply because storage in transit is granted."

Making mention of several other considerations which, in his opinion, justify the removal of the Ex parte 148 increases, Mr. Eastman stated:

"The Government departments affected did not object to the application of ex parte 148 increases to section 22 quotations made by the carriers prior to the original decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in this case, and for this reason they believe that the carriers should not insist upon the retention of the increase in connection with section 22 traffic subsequent to the date when the Interstate Commerce Commission ordered these increases removed.

"Moreover * * * it is clear beyond all doubt that the establishment of a transit privilege does not in itself accomplish a reduction of the line-haul rates. The United States Supreme Court in its decision in Central Railroad of New Jersey v. United States (257 U. S. 247), 1921, said, among other things:

" 'Whether the privilege shall be granted or withheld is determined by the local carrier. If granted, the local carrier determines the conditions, and these are set forth in the local tariff. Although a joint through route with joint rates is established by concurrent action of several carriers, the transit privilege may thus be granted by a carrier without the consent of, and without consulting, connecting carriers. And the whole revenue received for the use of the privilege is retained by the local carrier.'

"It is, therefore, entirely clear that a transit privilege is a special service granted only by the carrier upon the line on which the stop-off takes place. The charge for the service is provided for in a special tariff of that carrier. This charge is distinct and apart from the line-haul rate. * * * The transit service is an auxiliary service the cost of which is borne by the carrier upon whose line the service is rendered. The charges for the transit service accrue to that carrier alone.

"If the charge for the transit service is inadequate, the carrier on whose line the service is performed can undertake to increase the charge to a compensatory level. If, on the other hand, joint line-haul rates were increased to defray the increased cost of the transit arrangement, the connecting carriers, not being called upon to bear the cost, would receive compensation for nothing and be unjustly enriched. Moreover, the charge for the service would, without any line of variance in the cost, vary with the amount of the line-haul rate.

"It follows, beyond any question, that when these storage-in-transit arrangements were established, no change whatever was made in the line-haul rates, for the transit service and the charge therefor are things apart from the line-haul rates. Transit service, as I have said, is a local, auxiliary service confined to the railroad where the stoppage takes place. The line-haul rates in question were, therefore, never reduced, upon request either of the Government or of commercial shippers. They were increased by the original Ex parte No. 148 decision and clearly they should be reduced to conform to the subsequent decision in that proceeding.

"I urge, therefore, that you convey to the carriers my views on this subject, and request them to remove the increases in rates in Ex parte No. 148, which were subsequently suspended by the order of the Commission in the reopened proceeding."

On May 2, 1944, after the death of Director Eastman, Dr. G. Lloyd Wilson, Chief Consultant—Rates, of the Office of Defense Transportation, stated at a meeting in New York of the chief traffic officers of the rail carriers and representatives of the interested Government agencies:

"We have always believed that the Commission in exempting the suspension of Ex parte No. 148 increases until June 30, 1944, the rates on various commodities which had been reduced considerably below the normal basis at the request of the Government did not intend to exempt the rates charged for transportation at the published rates, nor that such rates bear the increase simply because the commodity was accorded transit under arrangements with the Government covered by section 22 quotations. It seems to me perfectly clear that transit is nothing more than interrupted transportation which is charged for at what is known as a 'transit charge' to cover the additional service required of the railroad at the transit point.

"Surely, the Government should not be called upon to pay transportation charges for shipments stored in transit in excess of the charges which are paid by the public merely because the Government is accorded transit arrangements. I have discussed this matter with Colonel Johnson (who succeeded Mr. Eastman as director, Office of Defense Transportation) and he authorizes me to inform you that he agrees that the Ex parte No. 148 increases should not be retained in connection with those rates."

Notwithstanding the statements of director Eastman and Dr. Wilson (with which the Committee agrees), and the arguments presented by the Chief of the Traffic Control Division of the War Department and representatives of other Government agencies, the carriers declined to eliminate the Ex parte 148 increases and they have since steadfastly adhered to that position.

In its decision in Federal Match Corporation v. G. N. Ry. Co. et al. (128 I. C. C. 145), the Interstate Commerce Commission condemned the assessment of transit charges based on the length of haul. At page 418 of that decision, the Commission said:

"Charges for transit are presumably assessed to cover the extra cost to the carrier performing the transit arrangement, including the expense of clerical hire, delay to cars, policing, etc., and where no out-of-line haul is involved the general practice is to assess a flat charge."

In Mixed Care Dealers Asso. v. D. L. & W. R. R. Co., et al. (33 I. C. C. 133 at p. 140), the Commission said:

"It is clear that charges for transit service at the same point which vary from $3 to $13.23 per car cannot be successfully defended."

Yet, under the guise of transit arrangements the carriers have imposed a penalty in the amount of 6 percent of the line-haul rates on the traffic accorded transit, and these penalties vary with the measure of the line-haul rates.

The Traffic Control Division made a survey of transit utilization at 44 War Department transit points on July 11, 1945. The average weight of the cars shipped from such points was 57,316 pounds. The charge for the transit service performed at the transit points is constant and assuming that the charge is 3½ cents per 100 pounds the total transit charge on 57,316 pounds would be $20.06. Assuming that the through line-haul rate via the transit point from a given origin to a given destination is 75 cents per 100 pounds and that the rate from another point of origin to the same destination is $1.50 per 100 pounds, a 6-percent increase in the rate of 75 cents on that weight amounts to $25.79 but from the point where the rate is $1.50 the increase amounts to $51.58, both amounts being over and above the charge of $20.06 for the additional service performed by the carrier at the transit point.

To use a concrete illustration, the War Department shipped a car of lead-covered cable from Philadelphia in September 1944, which was stored in transit at Ogden, Utah, and reshipped in May 1945 to San Francisco for export. The weight of the shipment was 43,850 pounds. A 3½-cent transit charge was in effect at Ogden covering the added service performed by the carrier at that point, and amounted to $15.35. The applicable rate from Philadelphia to San Francisco was $1.27, but the application of the Ex parte 148 increase of 6 percent, because the shipment was stopped in transit, resulted in a rate of $1.35; thus, an increase in the transit cost of $35.08. Had the shipment moved from Chicago, from which point the published line-haul rate is 88 cents, the line-haul rate assessed under the transit quotation would have been 93 cents, or 5 cents per 100 pounds greater than the published through rate. The application of the 6 percent increase would have resulted in an increase in the transit cost on this car of $21.92. The combined transit cost on the shipment from Philadelphia amounted to $50.43, while had it moved from Chicago the transit cost would have been $37.27, notwithstanding that the actual service performed by the carrier at Ogden would be the same on both cars.

3. The contention of the carriers that transit privileges accorded the Government are such "which under no circumstances would have been extended commercially" can best be answered in the language of Director Eastman's letter of March 9, 1944, to Vice President Cleveland, of the Association of American Railroads, viz:

"I do not believe, however, that the statement is sound that these transit arrangements would, under no circumstances, have been extended to commercial shippers, in view of the large volume of traffic involved. The same need has not arisen in connection with commercial traffic."

4. Referring to the carriers' claims that every privilege so granted means a very large increase in the cost of service, and that under a minimum operation it involves four terminals instead of two, and in numerous quotations six terminals instead of the two contemplated under the published through rates, it should be noted:

First. The carriers have ignored or failed to give consideration to the facts called to their attention by the Chief of the Traffic Control Division of the War Department, viz:

"(a) That the holding and reconsigning points of the War Department were set up at locations considerably removed from the centers of population and industry for the purpose of not interfering with terminal operations at any important point, and that this had been a deciding factor in avoiding confusion and overburdening of facilities, both at the ports and industrial centers; and that the effective use of these holding and reconsigning points resulted in keeping matériel out of port areas until such times as vessels were ready to take it forward.

"(b) That the holding of matériel at inland points has also been responsible for keeping to a minimum the detention time of cars at the ports, thus enabling a greater utilization of railroad equipment; also resulting in considerable extra revenue for the carriers since it has enabled a quicker turn-around of equipment and the utilization of such equipment on a greater number of hauls during a given period of time.

"(c) That in consideration of the heavier loading of railroad equipment by the War Department, averaging 60,000 pounds per car, a transit charge averaging $21 per car is considered more than ample to cover the additional cost of the additional transit service.

"(d) That all War Department holding and reconsigning points have extensive traffic facilities, averaging 34 miles per installation, were built and are maintained at the expense of the United States Government; that each installation is provided with its own switching power and thus the carriers' obligations with respect to delivery of cars and the switching out of cars for line-haul movement is not as great as it is in cases of most commercial facilities where transit privileges are granted."

Second. On a direct movement from origin to destination two terminal services are required, one at the point of origin and the other at destination. Where transit is performed at only one trainsit point en route, two additional terminal services are required, whether on commercial or War Department traffic. In both cases, the added charge for the transit service is designed to take care of the cost of that service. As heretofore appears, the transit charge on a car weighing 57,316 pounds is $20.06. Where War Department traffic is accorded transit at two transit points, instead of one, this charge of $20.06 is also paid for the transit service at the second point. Manifestly, there is no justification for adding an additional penalty reflecting an amount equivalent to 6 percent of the line-haul rate. Under this method the added transit charge varies dependent upon the measure of the line-haul rate contrary to findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the cases hereinbefore cited.

5. The matter of the net income of the carriers, or their revenues on all traffic transported, has no place in the consideration of the revenues they derive from the line-haul rates on traffic accorded transit arrangements, whether for commercial or Government traffic. In the first place, if their revenues on their entire traffic are insufficient their recourse is in obtaining increases in their rates and charges on all traffic. To single out any specific character of traffic upon which to place a general increase would be to burden that traffic with charges which would not be placed on other traffic. Such a policy cannot be too strongly condemned, especially where, as here, the carriers, under the cloak of transit arrangements, have continued the Ex parte 148 increases in line-haul rates on Government traffic accorded transit privileges, while they have removed such increases in the line-haul rates, and in the transit charges, on commercial traffic. Moreover, by specific provisions in their section 22 transit quotations that the line-haul rates will not be subject to land-grant deductions they have deprived the Government of those deductions from published tariff rates where such deductions would otherwise be mandatory under the statutes.

If the added charges for the services performed at the transit points are not compensatory the remedy is to increase the measure of those particular charges, not only on Government traffic but on commercial traffic.

Findings: The committee finds that the addition of the Ex parte 148 increases provided for in the carriers' section 22 transit quotations on traffic of the War Department transported thereunder on and after May 15, 1943, were, and are not, justified except on commodities on which the Ex parte 148 increases are applicable to line-haul rates which, under the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Ex parte 148 proceeding, were established below normal, or reasonable, levels. The committee further finds that except on the commodities last herein mentioned the charges on War Department traffic accorded transit arrangements, moving since on and subsequent to May 1943, have been and are excessive to the extent of the Ex parte 148 increases. (Bell-Hammer-Ussery Report, pp. 100-115.)

TRUSTS AND DEPRESSIONS

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, the importance of this bill transcends the subject matter of transportation.

It transcends the question of regional development—of rail rates which will make it possible for the West and the South to take their rightful places in the Nation's economy.

The bill affects every person in the United States.

If it passes, Mr. President, we shall have taken another step toward a great depression.

Will we repeat the mistake of the twenties?

The bust of 1929-32 had its roots in the policies we adopted, the actions we took, from 1921 on. They were the policies which the great leader of Republican thought, Warren G. Harding, bracketed under the term "normalcy."

During the twenties the proportion of business controlled by the 200 largest nonfinancial corporations—as measured by corporate income—rose from 33 to 43 percent.

Basing the point systems to hold up prices were perfected for cement, steel, and other products.

The decline of competition contributed to a disproportionate increase in corporate profits.

It was also partly responsible for the fact that when demand shrunk after 1929, industry trimmed its sails by reducing its output rather than reducing its prices—thus shifting the major burden of adjustment to the discharged workers.

The depression resulted from a lack of purchasing below and a muscle-bound concentration of power and wealth above.

Are we now moving toward another 1929?

We have already voted to abolish rent controls and are preparing to leave the building cycle free to soar and smash.

We have done nothing to provide housing for the middle- and low-income families.

We have reduced income taxes on the higher brackets but have done little to increase the purchasing power of consumers in the low-income groups.

On the contrary, in the House Ways and Means Committee the majority is beginning to talk about sales taxes as a way out.

Sales taxes destroy buying power.

They cut into the income of the consumer.

We have just voted to destroy the Wagner Act, which enabled labor to organize and through collective bargaining to maintain wage scales. If anyone doubts that the object of the Taft-Hartley bill is to hold wages down or reduce workers' pay I refer him to the frank statement of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the effect that the President's veto of the Case bill last year resulted in higher wages. Now that unions have been crippled, wages will go down. Farmers will lose their best customers.

Lack of mass purchasing power will result in slackened sales which will lead to excess inventories which will lead to more discharges, and the cycle will have come full round.

Today we contemplate another blow at economic stability.

We consider a bill to legalize monopoly, to increase economic concentration.

Where will it all end?

I will tell the Senate where it will all end: It will end in a crash.

The Harding doctrine of boom and bust is still gospel in the Republican National Committee.

The elephant never forgets and never learns.

President Truman, in his economic report, gave some thought to the threat of a depression, and one of his recommendations was that we take action to strengthen the antitrust laws.

To date, I have seen no legislation on the floor of the Senate designed to accomplish this salutary end. Instead, I see a return performance of a weary, battered, and sorry old bill to exempt a giant industry from the historic antitrust laws.

I see a proposal to legalize cartels with the blessing of the ICC, a Government agency whose chief testified last year before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce that he regarded the railroads as his agency's "clients."

Mr. President, let us save our people from another panic.

Let us preserve their purchasing power and stop the trend toward concentration of wealth at the top.

Let us reject this proposal to legalize monopoly.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not desire to complain continuously about the lack of attendance in the Senate Chamber, but observing only the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] and the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE] on the other side of the Chamber, and only two or three Senators on this side, I think we should have a quorum present. We have had none up to this time. I wish to acknowledge also the presence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'CONOR in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] is necessarily absent.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] is absent because of a death in his family.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate, having been appointed a delegate to the International Labor Conference at Geneva, Switzerland.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Kansas if he knows whether it is the desire of the Senator from New Jersey to address the Senate at this time.

Mr. REED. It is entirely agreeable to have the Senator from Alabama proceed at this time, Mr. President.

Mr. HILL. Very well; I shall do so.

Mr. President, more than half a century ago the Congress of the United States enacted the Sherman Antitrust Act to stop the growing power of monopolistic forces which threatened to control our national economy. The Congress thereby preserved for the people of the United States the American system of free competitive enterprise. The Sherman Antitrust Act has been truly called the charter of economic freedom for the American people. Although the forces of greed and financial and economic power have, through the years, sought to weaken or to destroy it, the Sherman Act has withstood all attacks, and today it stands unshaken as the great bulwark of economic freedom of the people of this country.

Mr. President, today we have before us proposed legislation which is designed to repeal the Sherman Act as applied to a major industry, one which I might aptly and truly call the basic industry of the United States, the transportation industry. There have been many previous efforts by the rulers of that monopoly-ridden industry to exempt their rate-fixing activities from the antitrust laws. The Bulwinkle-Reed bill, the measure now before the Senate, is an all-out effort to remove the activities of these private corporations operating public transportation services and the activities of their bankers from the prohibitions of the antitrust laws. This bill is adroitly drawn, but the undeniable fact is that it effectively provides the means of removing from the application and effect of the antitrust laws a major segment of our economy, to wit, the transportation industry; and because that is the basic industry which controls the life or death of all other industries, legalized monopoly control and domination of that industry will, as surely as night follows day, bring about the destruction of our entire competitive economy.

Mr. President, as I said yesterday, this measure might well be designated as a bill to destroy the American free enterprise system. At this point I wish to read a statement made by Mr. Arne C. Wiprud, special assistant to the Attorney General, and Chief of the Transportation Section of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Labor, not in speaking for any selfish interest, not in speaking for any interest which had any ax to grind, but in speaking as an assistant attorney general and as a spokesman for the Department of Justice, the agency of our Government which, more than any other governmental agency, is charged with the duty of protecting the rights, the interests, and the welfare of the people. He made the following statement before the committee, in summarizing what this bill would do if it were enacted into law:

An analysis of the provisions of S. 110, made in the light of the facts of record and the reports of this committee, compels the conclusion that through its passage the legislative policy of competitive enterprise in public transportation would be supplanted by a Nation-wide cartel-monopoly, under the domination of the Association of American Railroads and the traditional railroad bankers. This is so because that bill would:

1. Effectively repeal the antitrust laws as applied to public transportation.

2. Legalize the continuation and expansion of control over every phase of a carrier's operations by the Association of American Railroads and the traditional railroad bankers.

Insulated from the courts, and without fear of hindrance from other agencies of the Government, they would be free to create combinations of carriers, Nation-wide, with power not only to fix rates, but also to determine what part of the rate each carrier shall receive, at what time its trains shall arrive and depart, over what routes they may operate, what equipment shall be built and how it shall be used, and what should be done collectively to promote—

These particular words are taken from the Interstate Commerce Act—

"adequacy, economy, and efficiency of operation or service."

Mr. Wiprud continued as follows:

In view of the vast powers thus conferred upon the transportation cartel, and the extent of the pressures it would be able to exert upon otherwise independent carriers, it is clear that no carrier could afford to remain long outside the cartel.

3. Undo the public benefits which have resulted, or may be expected to result from antitrust suits involving the Pullman monopoly, the western agreement, the traditional banking houses of J. P. Morgan & Co., and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., equipment manufacturers, safety and signal monopolies, and rate-fixing combinations dominated by the Association of American Railroads, all of which have been and are adverse to the interests of carriers and large sections of the country.

This legislation cannot be considered apart from its effect upon other businesses and the national economy. As transportation is the basic industry which controls the life or death of many other industries, it is clear that those who control the transportation cartel could dominate the national economy.

Further, and equally important, this legislation would set the pattern for similar legislation in other basic industries, particularly if they are regulated industries, such as insurance, utilities, communications, securities, and banking. If we pass this bill, how can be consistently withhold like grant of power to the Federal Communications Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Federal Power Commission, and other regulatory bodies? Thus this legislation points the road to complete cartelization of all industry in our country, completely reversing our system of private enterprise.

Here it should be stated that there is nothing about the transportation industry that requires different legislative treatment in relation to the antitrust laws than any other private industry, except in the making of joint transportation rates.

All have recognized, Mr. President, including the Supreme Court of the United States, that there is a legitimate area of collaboration in the making of joint transportation rates to facilitate commerce. But that is a far cry from what is sought in this bill, which, in the final analysis, is a desperate bid for continued domination of transportation companies by the banking houses of Morgan and Kuhn, Loeb. They have been brought to book, for their misrule of the railroad industry, in antitrust suits in the Federal court at Lincoln, Nebr., and in the Supreme Court. Only this bill, or similar legislation, can save them.

Mr. President, appearing before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce on the pending bill was Mr. Wendell Berge, who, at the time of his appearance, was Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice. Mr. Berge is one of the great students of the question of monopoly, cartelization, and antitrust laws, in the United States. Perhaps there is no man in the entire country who, from his study, from his first-hand knowledge, from his experience as head of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice, can or does speak with greater authority on the question of cartelization, of monopoly, of antitrust laws, than does Mr. Berge.

In testifying before the committee, Mr. Berge, like Mr. Wiprud, was not representing any railroad or any selfish interests, or any interests which had an ax to grind. He was there as the servant of the people of the United States. He was there, Mr. President, representing you and me and all the people of the United States. He was our spokesman. He was there charged with the duty of being the protector of the rights and the interests and the welfare of the people of the United States.

This is the way he summed up the pending bill. I read from page 65 of the hearings before the Senate committee on Senate bill 110. First he said:

1. Through the device of a hierarchy of associations, headed at the top by the Association of American Railroads, the transportation monopoly, in combination with monopolies in other basic industries such as the steel, cement, and oil combines, has so fixed transportation prices as to maintain the industrial status quo and to prevent new interprises from competing with the industrial monopolies.

2. The arbitrary rail-rate structure established by the illicit monopoly has preyented southern and western regions from developing competitive industries.

3. This bill would legalize the present unlawful domination and control over the Nation's competitive economy possessed by the Association of American Railroads and its industrial allies.

4. The bill would legalize and perpetuate the coercive powers of the Association of American Railroads and its subsidiary organizations, which compels adherence by individual railroad members to the prices fixed by the action of those associations and compels individual roads to do the bidding of the powerful railroads which dominate the Association of American Railroads and which combine with the powerful industrial monopolies.

Mr. Berge proceeded:

5. Competition between the various forms of transportation, the railroads, the trucks, the freight forwarders, the barge lines, and the pipe lines, has been effectively curtailed through joint action between the organizations in each of those modes of transportation, which have conspired to raise the level of rates in each form of transportation to the highest level.

6. The proposed legislation would facilitate the strengthening of the combinations in each mode of transportation and would encourage the further curtailment of competition between them.

7. The power of the transportation monopoly is so great and the control exercised by the dominant members over all of the railroads in the United States is so tremendous that they have been able to flout with impunity the orders issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and even to prevent individual railroads from entering into joint rail-truck arrangements in accordance with the laws enacted by Congress.

8. Individual carriers have been prevented from initiating or modifying rates or from protesting against rates proposed by other carriers, in accordance with the Interstate Commerce Act, without subjecting themselves to veto powers within the hierarchy of associations.

9. Technological improvements have been impeded, air conditioning in passenger trains has been prevented, fast freight and passenger service which some railroads wanted to furnish have been prohibited by railroad associations, and improvements in service and facilities have been curtailed.

Senate bill 110, according to Mr. Berge, "would make possible the immunization of agreements and practices such as I have outlined and which are now under attack in court proceedings instituted by the Department of Justice and the State of Georgia, and might render futile any judgment obtained in those cases to enjoin those agreements and practices. The Department's opposition is predicated, however, on more fundamental ground than the mere desire to save the jurisdiction of the courts in pending antitrust cases, although this itself is an important consideration."

Mr. Berge continues:

This bill raises most serious and fundamental questions of policy which this committee and the Congress must determine. The bill would establish a precedent which would encourage other industries, already chafing under the limitations imposed by the antitrust laws upon the concentration of economic power in private groups, to seek similar immunities.

Other groups, Mr. President, have already announced their intention to follow the example of the transportation industry in asking the Congress to exempt them from the interstate commerce laws, and it takes no prophet to foretell that, if the pending bill should become law, Congress would be literally besieged by industries of all kinds seeking to enter the door through which Congress would have permitted the railroads to pass out from under the antitrust laws. Other industries, innumerable, will be seeking congressional action to remove them from the operation of the antitrust laws. I do not doubt that if transportation, the basic industry, were removed from the operation of the antitrust laws, many other industries, which are to such a great extent dependent upon the transportation industry, will be able to present good cases, strong cases, supporting their desire to be removed from the operation of the antitrust laws.

The pending bill does exactly what the general counsel of the Association of American Railroads said in 1935 he thought should be done. When that association was being organized and the form it should take was being considered, including the machinery it should have and the procedure and practices under that machinery, Judge Fletcher, counsel for the Association of American Railroads, in a letter dated November 26, 1935, addressed to Mr. Stacy D. Lloyd, and appearing at page 1350 of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce on H. R. 2536, commonly known as the Bulwinkle bill, said:

In the fifth place, in my opinion, the railroads should be exempted entirely from the operation of the antitrust laws and existing statutes should be amended so as to eliminate standards of competition and the so-called existing channels of trade and commerce. As I see it, no regulated industry should be subjected to the sanctions of antimonopoly statutes. Neither does it seem to me that railroads should be forced to compete, in an era when their rates and, to a large extent, their service are under the control of regulating bodies. In my opinion, the importance and value of competition in transportation have been tremendously overestimated in the public mind.

Mr. President, that was in 1935, when the lawyer for the Association of American Railroads was bringing the association into being, helping to determine the charter, the form, and the plan for the association. He declared there should be no competition required among railroads.

The Association of American Railroads was set up. Under it there has been practically no competition. If the pending bill should become law, it would do exactly what Mr. Wiprud and Mr. Berge testified it would do, namely, establish the transportation industry as a cartelized monopoly, without competition, a monopoly destructive of the American free-enterprise system.

Mr. President, many persons seem to think, as has been intimated during the debate a number of times, that today the railroads are under the authority, regulation, supervision, and control of the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to practically everything they do. That is a very mistaken, a very incorrect understanding of the true situation. There are two kinds of railroad activities; first, those which are subject to the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, second, those which are left to the competitive free-enterprise system, within the managerial discretion of the several railroads. It is the vast field covering competitive free enterprise and the many acts which do not come under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but which are left to the discretion of the several railroads, which the pending bill would remove from the operation of the antitrust laws and permit to be controlled by a private government of the railroads themselves. That is exactly what the pending bill would permit. It would ratify and approve, it would make lawful, a private government of the railroads of the United States, set up immediately for the purpose of destroying competition between railroads.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it the idea of the Senator from Alabama that the pending bill would result in something similar to the National Industrial Recovery Administration, under which railroads could write their own code of so-called fair practices?

Mr. HILL. There can be absolutely no question about that. Their code would be far more inclusive, far broader, than the old NIRA codes. Railroads could, as I said, and as the Senator from Texas has suggested, set up their own private government, completely outside the jurisdiction of the Government of the people of the United States. All other industries, certainly so far as monopoly and competition are concerned, come under the antitrust laws, and are under the control of the Government of the United States. Under the pending bill, the Government of the United States would lose its jurisdiction over unfair practices by railroads. The railroads would be free to establish a government of the railroads, for the railroads, and by the railroads.

As I have said, many things the railroads are permitted to do are not subject to the power, authority, and regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission. In its fifty-second annual report, a very recent report, the Interstate Commerce Commission said:

There is gross exaggeration in the idea that every act of the railroads is subject to regulation. The railroads have a large degree of initiative in the making of their rates, and have freely made a multitude of reductions to meet competition.

The aim of the pending bill is to remove all competition. In the event of the passage of the bill, never again could the Interstate Commerce Commission say that the railroads "have freely made a multitude of reductions to meet competition," because the expressed purpose of the bill is to destroy any and all forms of competition among railroads. The Interstate Commerce Commission, in its fifty-second annual report, further said:

We have no power to control their passenger service—

I shall comment on that more extensively a little later, Mr. President—and exercise very little control over their freight service. They select and pay their officers without supervision or hindrance. Nor do we undertake to tell them what equipment and supplies they may buy, how they shall operate their shops or maintain their tracks, what rails, ballast, and ties they shall use, what stations or other buildings they shall erect, what construction contracts they shall let, or how they shall manage their affairs in many other ways. The pattern of their regulation is in no way unique but is substantially the same as is now applied generally throughout the country by States or the Federal Government to other public-utility companies.

So, Mr. President, as I have suggested, any idea that the Interstate Commerce Commission has anything like full or plenary power over the activities of the railroads is a very wrong, a very erroneous idea.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator referred to the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission has no control over the purchases of supplies by the railroads and activities of that kind. Is not one of the things that have stood out in the history of railroads the fact that they frequently have their own subsidiary corporations from which they buy supplies, and that such subsidiary corporations are usually very profitable and successful?

Mr. HILL. The Senator is absolutely correct; and as I proceed a little further in my speech I shall quote from the very strong minority views written by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] and the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], which show that the passage of the pending bill would take all these subsidiaries out from under the antitrust laws. I am coming to that point later, I will say to my good friend from Texas. I am glad he raised the question.

As we know, Mr. President, one of the greatest authorities this country or the world has ever had on the question of monopoly, cartelization, the question of protection of free enterprise, was the late Mr. Justice Brandeis. He made a deep study of this subject. He spent many years while he was in the private practice of the law engaged in the trial of cases involving the question of monopolies. He wrote books and treatises and articles on the subject. He was recognized as the great authority on the subject of monopolies. I read from a statement by Mr. Justice Brandeis contained in his book Business—A Profession, pages 295 to 299, published in 1933, as follows:

> No one has recognized more fully than members of the Interstate Commerce Commission the limitation of accomplishment through railroad regulation. No one recognizes better than they the continuing need of competition—

That is the key word in this whole thing, Mr. President, "competition," because competition is the very heart of the American free-enterprise system. Whenever competition is eliminated from our economic and industrial life we no longer have the American free-enterprise system.

> No one recognizes better than they—

> the continuing need of competition to secure satisfactory service. * * * To abandon competition in transportation, and rely upon regulation as a safeguard against the evils of monopoly would be like surrendering liberty and regulating despotism.

In all history is there a record of anyone who has been able to regulate despotism? Despotism per se, despotism within its very self, has such power, such full and plenary power, that nothing can regulate it. The only thing that can be done with despotism is to strike it down, to prevent it from ever coming into being, to make an end of it.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGRATH in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. And yet the growth of monopoly and centralization of business in this country has proceeded to such an extreme that it will now be very difficult to decentralize business. Studies of the subject have been made by Congress and it is thought that collectivism has gone so far in this country that we are only a few theoretical steps behind the degree of collectivism which prevailed in Germany and Italy before the war. Following is a statement which I took from the March 1938 issue of the Fortune magazine:

> Thus collectivism in industry begets collectivism in government. And if this is not collectivism as practiced in the so-called collectivist states, it is only a couple of theoretical steps removed from it. Carried to its extreme, it means the downfall of the economy upon which American business has been reared; the perversion of the democratic order; the destruction of the right to risk and profit; and—all too easily—the loss of those civil liberties that are at present based upon the principle of the limitation of governmental power.

So it seems to me that we have neglected the problem of concentration of business and monopoly, and that is the reason the pending bill is before us today. The railroads have become convinced that they can escape from our monopoly laws because other industries have been able to do so in far too great a degree.

Mr. HILL. I want to thank the Senator from Montana for his contribution. I was going to comment on that point a little later in my remarks. The Senator is exactly right. I regret to say that the necessities of the war effort gave great impetus to that trend toward centralization. The whole trend has been farther and farther away from our great American free enterprise system toward the system of monopoly and cartelization. The Senator from Montana rendered a great and distinguished service to the country as the chairman of the Small Business Committee of this body. He studied this question. He has realized the dangers which lie in monopoly and cartelization to our whole economic system, to our free enterprise, to all the freedoms we enjoy. Today, instead of the Senate debating the pending bill, talking about whether we will pass a bill to take the great basic industry, the transportation industry, from under the antitrust laws and legalize and make lawful monopoly and cartelization of that industry, we ought to be exerting our efforts to try to retard, indeed to break down, some of the monopoly and cartelization which have taken place in other industries in the United States.

Mr. President, since one or two Senators have come into the Chamber since I began reading from Mr. Justice Brandeis, I shall again read the sentence I previously read:

> To abandon competition in transportation, and rely upon regulation as a safeguard against the evils of monopoly would be like surrendering liberty and regulating despotism.

As I said before, there has never been a man smart enough or wise enough to know how to regulate despotism, because despotism in itself has so much power that there cannot be and will not be any regulation of it. As I said, the only thing to do with despotism is to strike it down wherever we find it, whether it be the despotism of a George III or the despotism of the Association of American Railroads.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I am in full accord with what the Senator is saying. It has taken a long time to bring about the present condition of concentration of business and expansion of monopoly in America. It took something over 70 years to accomplish it. But it is thought by some businessmen that we can stop it and that we can make it profitable for industry to decentralize. Many of the large concerns in the United States have already started a movement in that direction. In the study of the subject which was made by Fortune magazine it is pointed out that while it took 70 years to wind up this process, we might be able to unwind it if we put our minds to it. The article says:

> Indeed, the greatest obstacle in visualizing the possibilities inherent in such a reverse of the economy would seem to lie chiefly in the habit of mind that has conditioned every businessman to think of mergers as inevitably more profitable than the sum of their constituent units.

If businessmen could begin to realize what is happening to the country, and that they could make a profit out of decentralization of business and spreading it out, in the South and in the West, it would be possible to bring the United States back into the free competitive system.

Mr. HILL. I thank the Senator for his contribution. As I stated before, as the chairman of the Small Business Committee of the Senate the Senator has made a very fine and thorough study of the whole subject of monopolies and cartelization, and the effect on American business and American free enterprise. He speaks with authority. He has certainly placed his finger on the very heart of this question in what he has had to say.

Quoting further from Mr. Justice Brandeis:

> No system of regulation can safely be substituted for the operation of individual liberty as expressed in competition.

That is the basis of the American system. We know that when we complain that some businesses or some great magnates in business have sought to seize upon or drain off too much profit, and have taken unto themselves too much from others, perhaps even through the system which we sometimes designate as exploitation, we are warned that we must do nothing to interfere with individual liberty, and that all will be well because of the competition in our system. Yet today the great railroad magnates, supported by the great bankers, are seeking to take competition out of all railroad and transportation business.

Mr. Justice Brandeis further says:

It would be like attempting to substitute a regulated monarchy for our Republic.

I do not believe that we want a king in this country, Mr. President, even though it be King Railroad.

Human nature is such that monopolies, however well intentioned and however well regulated, inevitably become, in the course of time, oppressive, arbitrary, unprogressive, and inefficient. If we study the history of fascism and nazism, and the history of the ruling houses of Japan, we find confirmation of what Mr. Justice Brandeis said.

Mr. Justice Brandeis further said:

It has been suggested that we accept the proposed monopoly of transportation but provide safeguards. This would be like surrendering liberty and substituting despotism with safeguards. There is no way to safeguard the people from the evils of a private transportation monopoly except to prevent the monopoly.

That is the question before us today—whether we, as representatives of the American people, shall prevent this monopoly, or whether we shall become parties to it by giving our approval, our consent, and our ratification to the effort to make the monopoly lawful.

I believe that the late Commissioner Eastman, during his long and distinguished service on the Interstate Commerce Commission, was generally recognized by all groups and all classes of the people as the outstanding authority on the Commission on the subject of railroads and transportation. He spoke words of small comfort to those who claim that the railroads are almost completely controlled by the Commission, and that the matters which Congress left to managerial discretion and free enterprise are of no consequence. He said:

The carriers were returned to private management—

He is referring to the return of the carriers from Government operation to private management after World War I—in order that the country might have the benefit of private initiative.

Mr. President, I was not a Member of this body at that time. Senators seated before me were not here. But can they not hear the echoes? The Government had found it necessary to take over the railroads for the winning of World War I. As will be recalled, the railroads wanted to get their properties back, with a guaranteed rate of profit, and all that. Cannot Senators imagine how the lobbies rang with the words that the railroads must be returned to their private owners in order that the country might have the benefit of private initiative? Yet today the Congress of the United States is being asked to enact a law which would put an end to private initiative, and which would stifle, strangle, choke, and destroy private industry.

Mr. Eastman further said:

So long as the carriers do not charge rates which are unreasonable per se, unjustly discriminatory, unjustly prejudicial or preferential, or unlawful in other respects, it is a matter for them to determine, in the exercise of their private initiative, whether it is wise for them to meet competitive conditions, and how far they will go in that direction.

That is our American free enterprise system. There is nothing new about it. It applies not only to railroads, but to the man operating the crossroads grocery store or the little tire shop. It is our system.

We—

have not been made managers of the carriers nor given power to encroach upon such fields of managerial discretion. These are matters which in my judgment are left by the law to private initiative. They are not matters of public initiative.

The pending measure proposes to place the matters which Congress has left to free competitive enterprise, and which have been within the managerial discretion of the several railroads, not under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission but, as I have said, under the control of a private government, the constitution and laws of which are to be merely approved by the Commission. After such constitution and laws of the private government are thus approved, the private government is to go into operation completely insulated from the antitrust laws and with almost, but not quite, complete freedom from worth-while control by the Commission. The degree of control of the previously approved private government by the Commission is set forth, as we know, in paragraph 7 of the bill. This paragraph, as the distinguished Senator from Montana, who is an able member of the committee and who has studied the bill knows, is complicated, wordy, vague, ambitious, and weak. Especially is it weak, and its weakness will grow in proportion to the growth of the railroad-mindedness of the members of the Commission.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. Does not the Senator believe that if in the case of the railroads genuine free competition were restored, it would eventually benefit them in the way of permitting industry to develop in the South and West, for instance, which would greatly increase the business of rail transportation? Take, for example, the Western States which are prevented from developing industrially because of discriminatory rates. If such rates were removed and genuine free competition prevailed, we would then witness a great growth and development of business in all parts of the Nation, from which the railroads would eventually profit.

Mr. HILL. The Senator is exactly correct. No one can estimate how much the economy of this Nation has been thwarted and retarded because of the discriminatory practices of the railroads in those areas. There is no way to develop any one section of the country without its having a wholesome and beneficial affect on the economy of the entire Nation.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, as our population increases it becomes increasingly difficult to continue to crowd them into the large industrial centers. Some way must be devised of spreading our people into other sections of the country, where they can find jobs and opportunities in life. If we continue the present system of discriminatory freight rates and other means and methods of preventing the development of the Western and Southern States, an already serious problem will become intensified.

Mr. HILL. The Senator is exactly right. What this bill would do would be to freeze and make permanent the very system by which banking houses, more particularly the House of Morgan and the House of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and the great railroad magnates of the East, are enabled to retain in their hands control of the economy of our Nation, a condition which results in retarding and, in many instances, strangling national growth and development.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. In respect to the public advantage which accrues from competition, I wonder if the Senator has not observed that competition among various kinds of transportation has had a very salutary influence upon the quality of transportation which the public enjoys. For example, when we developed water transportation did we not give the public an advantage in respect to freight rates from the railroads, because they met the water competition? When we established bus lines and truck lines, did they not give traffic advantages, such as pick-up-and-delivery service at the store and at the depot, and advantages of that sort, as well as more favorable rates? The airplane added another kind of transportation. In other words, is it not a recognized principle that competition of many different kinds of transportation has been of advantage to the public, and, in accordance with the same principle, should not competition even in the same categories be encouraged?

Mr. HILL. The Senator is exactly correct, and I am delighted that he has made that observation. As I go along I shall, at a little later point in my speech, try to show that because of the system developed by the Association of American Railroads the very benefits which were derived from competition among the different types and kinds of carriers are now more and more being taken from us and denied us.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator will recall, as some of the others of us do, instances of railroads trying to lobby in State legislatures in an effort to have the legislatures forbid the use of highways to motor vehicles engaged in transportation. They were not trying to save the highways; they were trying to keep the trucks off the highways in order to avoid competition.

Mr. HILL. They were trying to keep down competition. If this bill should pass and Congress should put its approval on this monopoly, this cartelization, the railroads would be able to suppress competition; indeed, the whole purpose of the bill is to eliminate and wipe out competition not only with bus lines and truck lines but with airplane carriers and all other means or vehicles of transportation.

Mr. President, the bill, if enacted, not only would put an end to competition in transportation in different forms among the different carriers, but it would go much further than that. It would take in many other industries and many other businesses, as is so well brought out by the minority views on the previous Bulwinkle bill, signed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY]. In their views those distinguished Senators bring out the following facts:

> Under the specific provisions of paragraph (2), the transportation industry could set up and perpetuate a "private government" which could have the power, through concerted action, to determine the rates to be charged and the service to be performed; the time at which trains shall depart and the time they shall arrive at their destinations, from where they shall leave, over which routes they shall run, and the places at which they shall stop; the equipment and facilities to be used, and whether or not improvements thereon shall be made or suppressed; the part of the rate each carrier shall receive; the allowances which shall be granted to shippers; and the basis and extent of settling claims of passengers and shippers against a particular carrier.
> The phrase "promotion of adequacy, economy, or efficiency of operation or service" is so broad as to authorize concerted action comprehending every activity in the transportation industries.

This bill, if enacted, would take railroads from under the antitrust laws, give them exemption from the antitrust laws, permit cartelization, and destroy competition.

Mention was made earlier of the House of Morgan, and of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. The trail now leads more directly to the Wall Street offices.

I continue reading from the minority views of the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from New Hampshire, as follows:

> It would include the financing, construction, and utilization of equipment, safety devices, facilities, stations, and terminals. It would include action determining whether spur tracks or other facilities, necessary to meet the requirements of particular shippers, shall be constructed, and whether new types of service necessary to promote an advancing economy shall be instituted.
> Approval of agreements permitting the industry to organize into combinations and by joint action to make determinations of such wide scope would constitute a delegation to private groups completely to cartelize transportation.
> Competition would be eliminated not merely among the carriers within classes of carriers—the trucks and busses, the water carriers, the freight forwarders, the pipe-line companies, the railroads. Paragraph (4) would permit agreements between carriers of different classes "relating to transportation under joint rates or over through routes." But this provision could authorize agreements between the carriers in all the classes of transportation under which collective action could be taken to curtail services, equipment, and facilities. All these things relate to transportation under joint rates or over through routes and, indeed, are within the term "transportation," as defined in the Interstate Commerce Act. The term is defined in that act to include "locomotives, cars, and other vehicles."

I suppose the term "vehicles" includes velocipedes and bicycles—> vessels, and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof, and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation—

Mr. President, even the word "elevation" is included. That means the elevators for wheat, I suppose. I presume the railroads own elevators in Montana. I ask the Senator from Montana whether that is correct.

Mr. MURRAY. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. Inasmuch as the word "elevation" is used, I suppose when a sack of flour is thrown on a car, that is elevating the flour; is it not?

Mr. MURRAY. It is.

Mr. HILL. Those who wrote this measure included everything in it. The lawyer who wrote this bill should have gotten a good-sized fee, because he included practically everything under the terms used in the bill.

I read further—> and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage, and handling of property transported.

I suppose that would cover almost everything.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Do I correctly understand that the Senator from Alabama is reading a part of the committee report?

Mr. HILL. I have read from the minority views submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] on the Bulwinkle bill of the last Congress; but the last matter I have been reading is the definition in the Interstate Commerce Act of what the term "transportation" includes; and, of course, the bill now before us is intended to apply to that act, insofar as this definition is concerned.

Mr. PEPPER. I understood that the Senator was reading from the views of certain members of the committee, showing that under this measure it would be possible for various types of carriers to get together and agree on rates in a given area.

Mr. HILL. Exactly. Not only would that be possible under this bill, but such a monopoly is in existence today. In other words, this bill is for the purpose of keeping the Supreme Court from proceeding under the antitrust laws to destroy the monopoly that is now operating. As I proceed with my remarks, I shall show how under the bill it is proposed to do just what has been mentioned by the Senator from Florida. The bill, if enacted, will mean that a State with large waterways, such as the State of Florida, with all its fine waterways, will receive practically no benefit from them. Of course, God Almighty put the waterways there, and He sends the water down, during the year, to keep them full of water. But under this bill all those advantages that God put there would be taken away from the people of Florida. Here, Mr. President, is the sharp ax, here is the guillotine blade; and Senators will notice that there is nothing ambiguous or weak or in any way uncertain about the language that is used in this measure.

For instance, paragraph (9) of the pending bill provides that—

> No agreement approved by the Commission under this section, and no conference or joint or concerted action pursuant to and in conformity with such agreement as the same may be conditioned by the Commission, shall be deemed to be a contract, combination, conspiracy, or monopoly in restraint of trade or commerce within the meaning of the antitrust laws.

That is the section which covers or includes all the railroads. What do Senators suppose the railroads weigh, anyway? No doubt they weigh billions of tons, with all their engines and cars and equipment, and tracks. But the few words I have just read would lift all the weight of the railroads from under the Government of the United States and place it under this proposed private government of the railroads.

Mr. President, I quote further from the minority views submitted by the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from New Hampshire, and let me say that the minority views constitute a very fine report:

> Thus, not only would combinations of carriers participating in agreements for joint and concerted action be immunized from the antitrust laws but their bankers and financiers, manufacturers of railroad and other carrier equipment, and powerful shippers, taking "joint or concerted action pursuant to and in conformity with" the carriers' agreement, would be immunized from the antitrust laws. By these adroit provisions, effectively eliminating the application of the antitrust laws, financial and powerful shipping interests, acting through rate making and other procedures provided in agreements approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, could ally themselves with the dominant carriers associations to fix transportation rates and limit transportation services so as to stifle new competitors and perpetuate monopoly.

Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina knows that is exactly what has been done by the railroads under the monopoly set-up which they are asking the Congress to protect. Under the provisions of the pending bill, the Congress is asked to protect that monopoly set-up from the Supreme Court of the United States and the antitrust laws which have been passed by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, earlier today, during the course of my remarks, the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] called attention to the growing trend in many industries—a trend which, as I have stated, received a tremendous impetus from the necessities of the past war—toward monopoly, cartelization, and a denial and a defeat of our private, free, American enterprise system.

On the 9th day of March 1947, the New York Times carried a most interesting story on the front page of its business section. The story is entitled "World Survey, a Challenge to Free Enterprise Here." I ask Senators to note the subtitle. We often refer to our high standard of living, of which we are justly proud and which we seek all the time to make higher, so as to provide more of the comforts and the good things of life for our people. The subtitle of the article to which I have referred is "Highest Standards of Living Found in Countries"—

Mr. President, where do you think the highest standards of living are to be found? Do you think they are to be found in countries where there is monopoly, where there is cartelization, where there is nationalization of industry, where there is socialism, where there is fascism, where there is communism? Oh, no, Mr. President. This is the subtitle of the article: "Highest Standards of Living Found in Countries With Political and Economic Liberty."

That is the battle we wage here today, the battle for political and economic liberty, the battle for the kind of liberty which has made America the mightiest and greatest and most powerful nation on the face of the globe. We wage the battle for economic liberty, which is the very heart and core, the sinew and brain, of the American system and the whole American economy.

This article, written by Mr. Russell Porter, says:

A world-wide trend—

That was the thought of the Senator from Montana a few minutes ago when he propounded a question to me—

A world-wide trend away from free enterprise and toward various forms of socialism and communism was shown in a survey published last week by the New York Times. Two world wars and a world depression have broken down private capitalism virtually everywhere except in the United States and Canada.

It is a significant commentary, as pointed out in several quarters, that the standard of living remains highest in those countries, particularly the United States, where there is the least restriction upon competition, the essential characteristic of free enterprise.

When he uses the word "competition" he is talking about the very competition we are trying to protect, defend, and save by our opposition and our effort to defeat the pending bill.

Mr. Porter proceeds in his article:

On the other hand, living standards have deteriorated steadily in countries where competition has been crushed by State monopolies and the private monopolies—trade associations, cartels, etc., which preceded them. Dictators and intellectuals have replaced the kings, czars, and emperors, but they have not solved the fundamental social problem of the world. That has been done best by the people themselves, in lands where they have had individual liberty to establish their own political and economic freedoms.

This presents a challenge to all Americans. Against such a background, how can we protect ourselves against this nationalization and cartelization of the world? How can we keep our competitive system from being destroyed? How can we avoid slipping into the abyss?

The very abyss into which this bill would push us.

How can we help to pull the rest of the world back?

Mr. Porter proceeds:

Public opinion seems to be crystallizing to the effect that if we are to meet our obligations at home and abroad, we must have another miracle of production like that which overwhelmed the Axis. This requires a revival of wartime teamwork, with everybody working and producing more, and with the Government encouraging and stimulating competition in both the domestic and international fields. Otherwise we shall have a restricted, contracting world economy in which free enterprise will wither and die, instead of the expanding economy needed for peace and prosperity.

Then Mr. Porter adds these words:

The role of the Government is not to intervene on either side, as most Americans see it, but to stand by to encourage cooperation and fair play in the public interest and to prevent either side from using monopolistic practices to restrict production and competition.

If we should pass the pending bill we would be doing the very contrary, the very opposite, to what the needs and compulsions of the hour demand, that is, to protect our people from monopoly, to fortify and safeguard and make even stronger the American free-enterprise system.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point the entire article by Mr. Russell Porter.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORLD SURVEY A CHALLENGE TO FREE ENTERPRISE HERE—HIGHEST STANDARDS OF LIVING FOUND IN COUNTRIES WITH POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC LIBERTY

(By Russell Porter)

A world-wide trend away from free enterprise and toward various forms of socialism and communism was shown in a survey published last week by the New York Times. Two world wars and a world depression have broken down private capitalism virtually everywhere except in the United States and Canada.

It is a significant commentary, as pointed out in several quarters, that the standard of living remains highest in those countries, particularly the United States, where there is the least restriction upon competition, the essential characteristic of free enterprise.

On the other hand, living standards have deteriorated steadily in countries where competition has been crushed by state monopolies and the private monopolies—trade associations, cartels, etc.—which preceded them. Dictators and intellectuals have replaced kings, czars, and emperors, but they have not solved the fundamental social problem of the world. That has been done best by the people themselves in lands where they have had individual liberty to establish their own political and economic freedoms.

This presents a challenge to all Americans. Against such a background, how can we protect ourselves against this nationalization and cartelization of the world? How can we keep our competitive system from being destroyed? How can we avoid slipping into the abyss? How can we help to pull the rest of the world back? How can we meet all the demands upon us for food, money, and credit without allowing our gifts and loans to be used against us to torpedo our system?

Because of these questions, 1947 has become a critical year for America. Another world war or another great depression could be the end of both free enterprise and democracy in a world already headed toward totalitarianism. Therefore, if there is any one answer to such questions, Americans appear to have made up their minds. It consists of maintaining the Nation's economic strength at its highest possible point. From the standpoint of national security, this constitutes our greatest safeguard against attack from the new nationalism, militarism, and imperialism that are developing in the world. It is also our safest insurance against the lowering of our standard of living.

Public opinion seems to be crystallizing to the effect that if we are to meet our obligations at home and abroad, we must have another miracle of production like that which overwhelmed the Axis. This requires a revival of wartime teamwork, with everybody working and producing more, and with the Government encouraging and stimulating competition in both the domestic and international fields. Otherwise we shall have a restrictive, contracting world economy in which free enterprise will wither and die, instead of the expanding economy needed for peace and prosperity.

A special responsibility rests, in the eyes of the public, upon the leaders of American industry and labor. They have the power to save or to wreck the American way of life. Labor-management cooperation means industrial peace, abundance, a chance to prevent another major depression, survival for ourselves, and hope for the world. Class warfare means strikes, chaos, possibly 1929 all over again, and maybe the third world war.

An immediate test of the devotion of both sides to the American way is at hand. This is in the collective-bargaining negotiations soon coming to a head in the mass-production industries. Whether differences are reconciled by discussions around the table in the democratic tradition, or fought out on the picket line in class warfare, may determine the whole course of American and world history.

The test will be one of self-restraint on both sides. For management it will come on prices and profits. It will be a test of the National Association of Manufacturers in its pledge of constructive action in the public interest, and in its case against the Robert Nathan report and price controls. It has said that competition and consumer resistance in a free market would bring down the cost of living. With few exceptions management now concedes that prices are too high, while profits are booming. The question is: What is it going to do about it?

TEST FOR LABOR LEADERS

For labor the test will come on wages and productivity. It will be a test of the sincerity of the top leaders of the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations in their professed loyalty to free enterprise. They know that wage increases cannot be granted in all cases without boosting costs and therefore prices, and that lower prices would do the country more good than higher wage rates unless men and machines are allowed to work with greater efficiency. But what will they do about this?

Either side can wreck the economic system by holding out for excessive wages or excessive profits, but both sides must cooperate in order to save it.

The role of the Government is not to intervene on either side, as most Americans see it, but to stand by to encourage cooperation and fair play in the public interest and to prevent either side from using monopolistic practices to restrict production and competition.

A strengthening of the Government's foreign economic policy in order to stimulate the competitive system in world trade is also considered essential. It must be kept alive despite all the efforts of foreign governments, trade associations, and cartels to kill it here as they have killed or emasculated it in their own countries. Americans do not want a crusade to enforce our system upon the rest of the world, but they are determined to keep it and are ready to share its benefits with others who wish to adopt it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in his article of March 9, Mr. Porter referred to an article which he wrote 6 days previously, under date of March 3, 1947, which appeared on the front page of the New York Times, columns 2 and 3, and which comprised nearly three full pages of the New York Times. The article is cationed: "Future of free enterprise in world found uncertain—Times' survey shows nationalization trend growing outside Western Hemisphere—mixed economy in many lands."

The article proceeds:

Of 22 nations surveyed by correspondents of the New York Times, Canada appears to be the only one—in which private enterprise can be said to be functioning today with anything like the freedom from government controls that obtains in the United States.

The only one out of 22 nations—

Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate at this juncture to read this article, but I desire to call attention to one or two subheads.

I refer to the article on Britain, a special to the New York Times from London, dated February 27. The article on Britain, one of the 22 countries surveyed, is captioned:

Britain socializing.

That is not news. We know what is happening in Britain; there everything is moving now toward socialization and nationalization.

I read this from the article on Czechoslovakia:

Private industry in Czechoslovakia retains a respectable position, despite an over-all 70-percent nationalization of industrial capacity.

The article on France is from Paris, March 2, written by Harold Callender, a special to the New York Times:

Since the war France has lived under a regime of mixed economy, with huge new doses of socialism.

I read this from the article on Italy, by Mr. Arnaldo Cortesi, dated Rome, March 2:

Nationalization gaining in Italy.

Here is a story from Budapest, Hungary, dated March 1. The story is old, I am sorry to say. It is captioned:

Capitalism lost in Hungary.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. We all know, to our sorrow, that not only was capitalism lost in Hungary at the time that article was written, but since then even socialism has been superseded there. The important point to be emphasized in connection with what the Senator is saying is that there is no way ever to reverse any of the trends toward state socialism once they get into full swing. Some country may start out with a political program of nationalization of only two or three industries, but when people are encouraged to take the first step toward socialism, and yet their country embarks upon such a program, even though it has definite limits in its inception, forces are created which it is absolutely impossible to stem at any subsequent time. All private industries and all the individual rights and liberties in that nation must go through the wringer and be eliminated, and men then will be compelled to start again on that tortuous path that preceded the time when King John surrendered to the barons on the plains of Runnymede. Civilization will be set back thousands of years if greedy interests succeed in destroying the antitrust laws and cause a political revolution in the country with state socialism as its goal. We cannot socialize the railroads; we cannot have Government ownership of transportation, without endangering our whole system of free enterprise. As I stated on yesterday, the passage of this bill will generate a demand for governmental intervention, for the American people outside official territory will not forever endure the present unjust and unfair discrimination which handicaps them.

Mr. HILL. The Senator is exactly correct. All history confirms the truth of the statement made by the Senator from Georgia. It must not be forgotten, in connection with what he has just said that if the pending bill were passed, a long step would be taken toward the condition described by him. It would be the greatest step possible toward monopolistic cartelization of the basic industry of America, the railroad industry which is basic because every other industry in the United States depends in some degree on transportation.

Recurring to the survey I was reading and not take too much time on it at this point, it is interesting to note the heading on an article about Spain, which reads:

Spain uses the subtle "I. N. I."

The "I. N. I.," as a reading of the article discloses, is a government corporation, the "National Institute of Industry," which controls the economic and business life of Spain.

There is a special dispatch from Stockholm, under date of February 26, by Peter Hershend, under the heading "Sweden Aims at Socialism."

Senators have heard something about Turkey lately. There is a dispatch from Istanbul, Turkey, under date of March 1, under the caption "Turkey's state capitalism."

I come to the last article. I have skipped a great many. I did not think it necessary to waste time on Russia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think it might be well to touch upon Russia, in order that the proponents of the pending bill might see the ultimate objective at which we are sure to arrive, if the proponents succeed in enacting the pending bill. I should be pleased if Senators who are here, defending the free enterprise system of America, would let the proponents of the measure understand what will be the full result of the passage of the pending bill.

Mr. HILL. I thank the Senator. I appreciate his suggestion. I think it has much weight.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, if the Senator is going to touch upon a matter that the proponents of the pending bill should hear, I think there should be a quorum call. There is but one Senator present on the other side of the aisle, possibly two; and there are but five Senators on this side. If the Senator will yield, I shall suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HILL. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. McFARLAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hawkes	Myers
Ball	Hayden	O'Conor
Barkley	Hill	O'Mahoney
Brewster	Hoey	Pepper
Bricker	Holland	Reed
Bridges	Ives	Revercomb

George	Millikin	Williams
Green	Moore	Wilson
Gurney	Morse	Young
Hatch	Murray

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIAMS in the chair). Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, when the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. McFARLAND] suggested the absence of a quorum I was referring to a survey made by the New York Times of some 22 countries of the world. The results of that survey were published in the New York Times under date of March 3 and March 9. The articles were written by Mr. Russell Porter. The first article to which I refer is captioned "World survey a challenge to free enterprise here," with a subheading, "Highest standards of living found in countries with political and economic liberty." I had not seen fit to comment or to bring to the attention of the Senate the different articles and reports on all 22 of the different countries. I had brought to the attention of the Senate very briefly, largely by use of the headings over the articles, the conditions in a few of the countries.

I had passed over the article or report on Russia. The distinguished Senator from Georgia suggested to me that it might be of interest to know just what the article on Russia relates to, as to private enterprise, monopoly, socialism, nationalization, and cartelization. The article on Russia was written by that very distinguished writer, Mr. Drew Middleton. It was dated Moscow, March 2, special to the New York Times. I do not know whether the editor was being sarcastic, or whether he had his tongue in his cheek, but it is amusing to note that he headed the article on Russia with these words "Private enterprise in Russia." The article written by Mr. Middleton goes on to say:

Private enterprise does not exist on a large scale in a socialist state such as the Soviet Union, although it is tolerated in a minor way on the fringe of the economy.

All industry here is state-owned. A minor type of private enterprise is the work of war invalids and others who belong to cartels or cooperatives and who do piecework at home or who maintain tiny shops where they do repairing or sell furniture they have made themselves.

Somewhat the same situation exists on collective farms. All collective farmers work in the fields of the farms to which they are assigned and are paid for their work on them. In addition each farmer and his family have a private garden for which they pay a very small yearly rental. In these gardens, which vary in size from a half acre to an acre and a quarter, farmers and their families raise vegetables, usually potatoes, for sale in the markets of town and city.

Payment for such goods is usually used by the farmer to buy extra manufactured goods, often in the same market in which he has sold his food.

Moscow is sprinkled with small one-man watch and clock repair shops that are often assumed to be private enterprises. This assumption is not correct. Such shops are given to invalid soldiers and others by the Government, which also supplies material and pays the worker a fixed rate for his finished product.

As the article brings out, today there is really no private enterprise in Russia. I think the distinguished Senator from Georgia, in suggesting that I read the article on Russia, wanted to point out what we were leading to in this country when we took the first big step toward monopoly, cartelization, and the destruction of American free private enterprise. As the Senator from Georgia has wisely commented, no nation ever started on this road that could stop midway or turn back. It continued on to the end of a socialistic, communistic, or Fascist state, and then perhaps out of the ruin and misery wrought by such a state, the people of that country might start back the long, slow, painful, and tortuous way in an effort once more to establish the worth and dignity of the individual, once more to provide liberty for the individual, and once again to strive to attain some degree of the economic well-being, the relatively high standards of living, and welfare, and the general prosperity, which characterize states which enjoy political and economic freedom, as the United States has enjoyed it.

I shall not consume further time in referring to the survey, but I ask unanimous consent to have the article reporting on the survey printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be printed as requested.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, we now have in existence a system of transportation monopoly and cartelization which the bill seeks to protect, and which it would freeze into the American economy. It is the purpose of the bill that this system of monopoly and cartelization shall be protected, approved, ratified, and made lawful, so that the system will not be stricken down by the Supreme Court of the United States under the antitrust laws.

It is interesting to note what has happened since this system came into being in more recent years. As will be recalled, it had its genesis about 1935. Mr. Wiprud, to whom I have previously referred, and from whom I have quoted to some extent, formerly headed the Transportation Section of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice. He there made an earnest study of the subject of transportation monopoly and cartelization under the antitrust laws. In the position he occupied he was the servant of the American people, charged with the duty and responsibility of protecting them in their rights and interests. Mr. Wiprud delivered an address on the 20th of last November before the Metropolitan New York Chapter of the Interstate Commerce Commission Practitioners in New York City. I wish to quote briefly from what he had to say last November about how this monopoly transportation system has worked and is working. He said upon that occasion:

Though the current critical situation in the industry is largely attributable to greatly increased costs of operation that require immediate and forthright treatment by regulatory authorities, the railroad problem, as such, stems first and foremost from past banker domination of the entire railroad industry, which in the case of most railroads still lingers on. It is not necessary for me to relate to this group the sordid history of Morgan and Kuhn-Loeb rule of American railroads, a monopolistic rule which a vigorous application of the antitrust laws decades ago could have nipped in the bud. Think of it, two banking houses with little or no permanent investment in any railroad, ruling the financial destinies of virtually all our railroads, and thereby ruling the destiny of the Nation. Their ruthless exploitations—from the Morgan-created New Haven, Boston & Maine Railroad monopoly, which has cost the stockholders untold millions of dollars, to the financial wrecking of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. by Kuhn, Loeb & Co.—have touched and blighted the entire industry and every community. All this has been recorded for all to read in the investigations of congressional committees, notably the Pujo, Pecora, and Wheeler committees. This is, indeed, the blackest page in American financial history. Some may say that I am "rattling the dry bones of antiquity." But I say to you, though domination by those banking houses has been weakened, and as to some railroads destroyed, through the recent requirement that railroad bonds must be sold at competitive bidding, a requirement which these bankers fought bitterly, that domination lies at the heart of the United States Government's antitrust suit against J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the western railroads, and others, now pending in the United States district court at Lincoln, Nebr.

The whole public-transportation program of the bankers, these rulers of the railroad empire, is restrictive of development of the industry and the Nation. Their program of restricting trucking operations, suppressing air-freight transport, opposing the building of pipe lines, are all familiar to you. I have only this to add on this count. I believe with that able railroad executive, Ralph Budd, when, in 1925, he warned the organized railroad industry that such a destructive program would bring no increased returns to railroad treasuries. He called attention to the great benefits that had accrued to the railroads from the development of the automobile industry, in increased tonnages and earnings. He urged that instead of using vast sums from railroad treasuries to suppress competitors, the railroads turn to a constructive program of utilizing their funds to improve their plants and equipment and increase their efficiency. Then, he said, they need no longer fear competition.

But these rulers of the railroad industry, and their organizations, would not listen. Planned scarcity and monopoly profits has been and is their public transportation program. In their efforts, and they were stupendous, to suppress other forms of transportation, they neglected the improvement of their own facilities and services. Indeed, the backwardness of railroad technology is notorious. The same manufacturers build the same cars, locomotives, and other equipment year after year, with little change in design, efficiency, and price. The whole technology of railroad signaling and communications is an anachronism. Trainmen still go down the track with lantern and flare to protect trains at emergency stops. Radio and the science of electronics have long been effectively used in other forms of transport, where they have contributed greatly to the safety and efficiency of operation. But their possibilities have until recently made no impression on railroad managers.

Why have these unsound conditions persisted? Can it be that railroad managements are bound by agreements or otherwise to preserve an obsolete technology?

I emphasize the word "agreements," because agreements will be the magic key which will unlock the door and open the way for the railroads to obtain protection from the antitrust laws. Can it be that railroad managements are bound by agreements or otherwise to preserve an obsolete technology?

The evidence is in the affirmative. Monopolistic interests have controlled the manufacture of railroad equipment for their own protection, and they have stifled or seriously delayed the development of efficient and economical equipment by progressive manufacturers. The banker-dominated Pullman Co. used its monopoly of the sleeping-car business to suppress competition in that field. As a result, the public was forced to ride in obsolete sleeping cars, averaging 22 years of age, while the Pullman interests enjoyed monopoly profits. The recently successful antitrust suit against this sleeping-car monopoly may correct this situation so detrimental to the railroads and their patrons.

I say by way of interpolation that if the pending bill had been on the statute books the Government might never have brought the suit to break up the Pullman Car Co.'s monopoly. It is because the railroads know that under the antitrust laws the Supreme Court must break up their monopolies—their stifling and paralyzing monopolies—even as it broke up the monopoly of the Pullman Co., that this bill is here today. The railroads for the past 5 or 6 years have been trying to have such legislation as this passed by the Congress.

But one must wonder how the railroad industry under such conditions expects to hold its passenger traffic against the modern airplane and motorbus operated by vigorous, forward-looking managements.

By the terms of the now-famous western agreement, 35 railroads operating west of the Mississippi River agreed to delay improvements in railroad equipment, curtail new transportation service and suppress proposals to speed up freight and passenger schedules. An agreement of similar tenor was entered into between the New York Central and the Pennsylvania Railroads.

Through such monopolistic controls and collusive practices, the equipment of railroads has become deficient both in quantity and quality.

Can anyone imagine any other industry surviving such destructive practices?

Just think, Mr. President. Walk down F Street today, contrast it with what it was when we first came here 15 or 20 years ago, and note the difference. The store windows are different, the lighting is different, everything is different. The merchants have gone forward and have kept pace with the times; they have seized upon modern technology and made use of it, even to the extent of providing air conditioning as my friend from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], knowing the atmospheric conditions on the outside today, suggests. Why have they done these things? Because they knew that under a free enterprise system they could not survive unless they progressed and improved their facilities. But the railroads have done no such thing. What have they done? They have conspired together to make sure that no one of them would act except in concert with the others so that there would not be such progress and advancement as would afford the American people the benefit of a modern, more up-to-date, more expeditious, and more comfortable service.

I continue reading:

Can anyone imagine any other industry surviving such destructive practices?

I want the Senate to listen to this, please. They are knocking on the door of the United States Senate and coming right into the Chamber.

Nor could many railroads continue operations except for financial aid from the Government through RFC loans. The disastrous effect upon the industry is further attested to by the many recurring railroad bankruptcies, with the investor paying the bill through loss of his investment. The bankers, however, who rule but incur no risk, are not removed.

There is an interesting thing. I am sure the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], who was on the committee and who has studied this question, knows to what I am referring.

They, or their nominees, usually become the reorganization managers (for a substantial fee), and the bankrupt railroad invariably emerges burdened with a financial structure similar to the one that forced it into bankruptcy, and a set-up which continues banker rule. A new angle to this old story is the comparatively recent success of the larger insurance companies and savings banks in securing control of numerous reorganized railroads. The working relationship between these insurance companies and the Morgan and Kuhn, Loeb firms has been conclusively shown in a congressional report.

That is the report of the Wheeler committee which was made after former Senator Wheeler and former Senator Truman, now the President of the United States, investigated the matter. They brought out those things.

I have dealt with these conditions in broad outline for time does not permit detailed, case-by-case, discussion. I must move on as rapidly as I can to the role of regulation, the more important antitrust cases now pending in this field, the current program of the organized railroad industry, and, finally, what the future holds for private enterprise in the industry as a whole.

But I do believe, from what has been said, that we are beginning to understand some of the major causes of the railroad problem, and the impelling need of vigorous application of the antitrust laws to transportation companies and their bankers, not only to protect the public interest, but to save the industry for private enterprise.

Mr. President, what does he mean by "save the industry for private enterprise?" Senators know there is just one step beyond private enterprise, and that is Government ownership, operation, and control.

Earlier in my remarks, as may be recalled, I spoke about this trend, and I stated that of 22 leading countries in the world surveyed by the New York Times, only one—Canada—today enjoys private enterprise such as we have it in the United States.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. If I correctly recall, the Canadian Government itself owns one great railroad line which runs to the Pacific coast.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Florida is correct about that.

Mr. President, in speaking of the modernization of railroads, let me say there is a railroad president named Young. That is rather a good name for him, for he has some young ideas. We may not agree with everything he does or says, but certainly he is young in some of his ideas and some of his thoughts. He has been most insistent in his efforts to induce the railroads to meet modern conditions and has recognized the soundness of the statements I have just quoted from Mr. Wiprud; in other words, that the railroads cannot survive unless they are willing to go forward, take advantage of modern technology, make use of modern equipment, and provide the service which invention makes it so inviting for them to give. I spoke about the fact that people were riding in Pullman cars which were 22 years old. Nearly a year ago—on July 29, 1946—Mr. Young's lines, the Chesapeake & Ohio, carried a large advertisement approximately four columns wide and extending almost the full length of the newspaper page. I hold a copy of that advertisement in my hand. It appeared in the Washington Post, and I am sure it also appeared in many other leading newspapers, periodicals, and other publications throughout the country. The advertisement is headed:

Why must sleeping-car passengers put up with "rolling tenements"?

Mr. President, those are not my words; those words appear in the heading of an advertisement published by the head of a great railroad system; the head of that great railroad system is speaking. He says further in the advertisement:

NINE OUT OF EVERY TEN SLEEPING CARS NOW IN SERVICE BELONG IN MUSEUMS! WHAT CAN BE DONE ABOUT IT?

Anyone who ever takes an overnight train trip owes it to himself to read these facts:

The average age of the 6,800 sleeping cars now in operation is almost 22 years. Nearly 25 percent of them were built before the First World War. (Would you expect a comfortable ride in an automobile built between 1910 and 1915?)

Compared to really modern sleepers, these old cars are as out of date as high button shoes! And to ride in these jittering tenements on wheels—

Mr. President, those are not my words; they are the words of Mr. Young, the president of the Chesapeake & Ohio—

25 to 35 years of age, the traveler pays a premium fare.

Of course, we know that the fare which has to be paid by those who ride in pullman cars is much higher than the fare which is charged for riding in the coaches.

Mr. Young further says in the advertisement:

Is it any wonder railroads are losing business to the airways and the highways?

WHAT'S THE REASON?

Don't think this situation is due to the war. It existed long before the war. Only 900 sleeping cars—a mere 13 percent of those now on the rails—were built in the last 16 years, and less than 9 percent are of modern lightweight design.

With over 6,000 new sleepers needed, only 764 had been ordered as of June 1. These were ordered in small lots of varied design by 25 big railroads for their own use. (More than 30 other roads that operate sleeper service did not have a single sleeping car on order.)

Not only does this piecemeal method of buying mean that the new cars will be ill-fitted for through service; it is one of the principal reasons why they will cost four times as much per pound to build as an automobile.

Mr. President, do you appreciate the economic significance of the last sentence I have read from the advertisement? It is obvious that sleeping cars could be purchased at a much lower price if they were built by mass-production methods.

I read further from the advertisement:

Since last September, the C. & O. has tried in vain to get other railroads to agree on sleepers of standardized designs and to place sufficient orders so that all railroads can gain the economies of mass production.

Our efforts have been given no encouragement. We are tired of waiting and so are the travelers we serve.

In other words, Mr. Young was feeling like some of us who have slept in the old "tenement on wheels" sleeping cars to which he alludes in the advertisement. He further says:

Apparently, the only way the C. & O. can get modern sleepers is to have its own built.

Then he states what they are going to do, as follows:

THE C. & O. REPEATS ITS OFFER

The present situation is plain bad business. People want modern equipment. They have shown themselves eager to travel on the railroads that provide it. Even before the war, new lightweight streamliners were packed to capacity on routes where their old-fashioned predecessors had traveled half empty.

The demand for travel accommodations has never been greater than it is today. Yet ancient sleeping cars still clutter up the rails while the airways and highways shine with new models. It doesn't make sense.

The need is self-evident for an efficient, new sleeping car operating company which can and will buy modern cars competitively in quantity and service them economically.

Mr. President, it was a year ago that Mr. Young was appealing to the railroads to get rid of these "rolling tenements" and to do something which would benefit the railroads, make it possible for them to meet the competition of the other carriers and methods of transportation, and put them on a sound economic and financial basis. But instead of doing that, instead of meeting the needs, the demands, and the compulsions of the situation, they come to Congress and say, "Let us set up our own private government so that we can do just as we please, and have all the monopoly we want; kill competition; stifle development of different sections of the country; and retard the growth of America's economy and business. Let us run everything to suit ourselves."

Mr. President, Mr. Young is a persistent man, as well as the president of the Chesapeake & Ohio, and he evidently did not give up because he got no response to his advertisement of a year ago. As late as Tuesday, May 27, last, only a few days ago, he inserted some new advertisements in the newspapers, one of which appeared in the Washington Post on the morning of May 27, still carrying on his effort to induce the railroads to modernize, to meet new conditions, to put themselves on a sound financial and economic basis. The advertisement of the 27th of May was a full page advertisement, and Mr. Young made this statement at the beginning:

WHY THE RAILROADS CANNOT AFFORD NOT TO MODERNIZE—A DOLLARS-AND-CENTS EXAMPLE THAT WILL INTEREST TRAVELERS, LABOR, AND INVESTORS

For a long time the C. & O. has been saying that America's railroads must modernize their passenger equipment—or forfeit a great opportunity.

In print and in private, we have lampooned the "rolling tenements" that still pass for sleeping cars. We have stumped for modern streamlined trains to replace tired, creaking old day coaches. And over and over we have stated the conviction that, given attractive equipment, and new comforts and services, the railroads could open the door on a new era of travel.

Think what a marvelous thing it would be if the railroads would do what Mr. Young wants them to do, instead of spending their money to send their lobbyists and lawyers and other representatives to Washington to try to fasten this gigantic monopoly cartel upon the American people, upon American industry, and upon American economic life. Think of the result if they would use the same ingenuity, expend the same number of dollars, employ the same time, and make the same effort to modernize their railroads and make it possible, because of the reduction of rates, which could then, no doubt, be put into effect, for more of our people to travel, to see and understand our country, to travel abroad, for that matter, and thus to enjoy greater educational opportunities. What a challenge, what an opportunity, as Mr. Young declares it to be.

In his advertisement Mr. Young proceeds to say:

As an earnest of that conviction—

That is, the conviction that a great, new era lies ahead for the railroads if they are only willing to lift their eyes and see it—

As an earnest of that conviction C. & O. is replacing every old sleeping car, day coach, and diner on all our main lines, with modern streamlined cars. The orders have all been placed. If every railroad were doing as much, there would now be 21,000 new passenger cars on order instead of a mere 3,000.

If Mr. Young, of the Chesapeake & Ohio, can do it, why cannot the other railroads do it?

His next observation is:

But is it practical?

He proceeds to say:

The stand-patters in industry are still shaking their heads.

They are the doubting Thomases.

And lately more reasonable people have been asking, "How can the large-scale replacement of old trains be practical?"

They point out that several of our largest systems had serious deficits in 1946. And everyone knows that the railroads are caught between rocketing costs and lagging rates. "How," they ask, "can such an industry afford large outlays for new equipment?"

The answer is that the railroads can't afford not to make these outlays, and here is a dollar-and-cents example.

He captions the example:

The investment that is fast returning its cost.

He says:

Last August one of the C. & O. lines, the Pere Marquette, installed two ultra-modern trains on its run between Detroit and Grand Rapids. These new daytime streamliners were the last word in passenger attractiveness.

Since they have been in operation the new trains have carried 86 percent more passengers than old trains carried over the same route during the same period of the previous year—when traffic was still swollen by war emergencies.

Mr. President, that is the initiative of the great free American enterprise system at work. That is the answer. The answer is to make use of our great rail transportation system, not to destroy it, not to turn from it to monopoly, to cartelization, to socialism, to fascism, or some other ism.

Mr. Young continues:

And here is the proof of the pudding: In less than 4 years, at the present rate, the increase in passenger receipts will equal the total cost of the trains.

Modern equipment is not a luxury that only a few fortunate systems, like the C. & O., can afford. Even a bankrupt railroad can borrow money today to buy such equipment at 2 percent interest. Since that is the fact, it is almost incredible that less than 100 new passenger cars have been ordered this year.

"Which way do we go?" is his next subhead.

Where do we go? That is the question.

To investors, the labor brotherhoods and the traveling public, the C. & O. repeats its conviction—that our railroads face one of the most critical choices in their history.

If pessimist thinking, old-line practices, and Toonerville equipment continue to be tolerated, then, regardless of rate relief, further deficits and bankruptcies are certain.

There it is, Senators.

But if, on the other hand, these liabilities—

That is, the Toonerville equipment and the old-line practices—are replaced by modern ideas and modern trains our railroads can again be a credit to our country. They can also be a bulwark of our national defense, which, as every citizen knows, depends on a flourishing transportation system.

I repeat:

In less than 4 years, at the present rate, the increase in passenger receipts will equal the total cost of the trains.

There is the answer to the railroad problem—modernize, make use of that great boon, the American free enterprise system; do not strike it down; do not undermine it; do not torpedo it; do not kill it. All history proves that, whatever its shortcomings, whatever its failures, it is the best system ever devised by the mind of man. It offers the most, it brings the most in happiness, in good things, in high standards of living, in general welfare of the people.

Mr. President, we have been talking about what has happened under the monopoly cartel system, which the pending bill would now freeze and make permanent, giving protection and granting exemption from antitrust laws. Mr. Wiprud, representing the Department of Justice, testifying on behalf of the Department, as the servant of the people, before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, on the last Bulwinkle bill, H. R. 2536, told of the investigation which he and other attorneys in the Transportation Section of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice made before the suit was brought at Lincoln, Nebr. The Department of Justice wanted the facts. It wanted to know just what the situation was; first, as to whether or not antitrust laws were being violated; second, what damage had resulted to the people of the West, and to the economic life and welfare of the Nation because of the action of the railroads of the West as embodied in the western agreement. Mr. Wiprud, before the committee, said:

The Government also established by documentary evidence the Nation-wide activities of the Association of American Railroads in the rate-making field and the control over rates in the western United States by eastern interests under the now notorious western agreement.

It is called the "western agreement," but the purpose of the agreement was not to enable the western railroads to control their own fortunates, not to enable them to work out their own destiny, under their own authority and control; not to aid them to take steps to advance the growth, the development, and the progress of the great West. On the contrary, the agreement was intended to make more powerful and more complete the control, by eastern bankers and railroad magnates, of the western railroads and the economy of the West. Mr. Wiprud says:

I shall not attempt to go over the facts introduced by the Government under my direction at these hearings.

He had charge of the Government case, as senior counsel, representing all the people of the United States. I have quoted from a good many persons today, but I have not quoted from anybody who was representing a selfish interest, or who was the spokesman for any particular group. I have based my case on the facts furnished by representatives of the people, servants of the people, paid to protect and preserve the rights and the interests of the people. I have not even quoted from a single chamber of commerce. If time permits, I shall have something to say about chambers of commerce, and, in that connection, I shall perhaps refer to lobbyists and lobbying. I think it may fairly be said that many of them "Know not what they do." Down through 2,000 years those words have come ringing in our ears. I think they might well be applied to many who think they favor the pending bill, but who do not know the bill; who do not understand it; who do not appreciate its implications and ramifications, or where the bill would inevitably and inexorably lead us, or the abyss into which it would plunge us.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. STEWART. Has the Senator studied the probable effect that the passage of the pending legislation might have on the recent Supreme Court decision upholding the Interstate Commerce Commission in its edict, which directed the adjustment of certain inequities in freight rates between the Southern and Western Territories and the Eastern or Official Territory?

Mr. HILL. I would say to the Senator I cannot state that I have studied the decision in connection with the pending bill as carefully as I should have liked to do, but if the pending bill passes it will be a very positive and definite step in opposition to the very remedy which the action by the Interstate Commerce Commission in that case sought to afford and which I well know the Senator has earnestly advocated for many years.

Mr. STEWART. I fought side by side with the Senator from Alabama in several battles in the years gone by to reach the very point that we thought we had reached the other day, when the Supreme Court decision was rendered. But what I have in mind is whether or not this bill, if passed, might at least be considered to be an implied repeal of that portion of the Transportation Act of 1940 on which the Supreme Court decision of a few days ago in the freight-rate case was based.

Mr. HILL. It might seriously endanger that provision of the Transportation Act.

Mr. Wiprud continues:

The Government's investigation up to that time (1943) established these basic facts:

First, that conference rate making, which had become a common practice in the railroad field, is being adopted in the inland water-carrier field.

Just what I had suggested to my friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Florida, earlier in the afternoon.

Second, that rate bureaus and rate-making conferences in the railroad field and in the motor-carrier field have jointly agreed upon rates which resulted in whole groups of motor carrier rates being gradually forced upward to the full level of railroad rates.

Third, that water-carrier rates through water-carrier rate bureaus are being artificially related to railroad rates.

Fourth, that air express rates were being fixed by the railroads at an arbitrary level over railroad rates.

Fifth, that by this process of private rate making and control, transportation rates have been forced to an artificially high level without regard to the carriers' cost or to the value of the service rendered.

In other words, without any regard to what it costs the carrier to move the freight, or what the value of the freight moved may be, the rates have been artificially raised to a high level.

The conclusion was that the evolution of these private bureaus, associations, and conferences into the present intricate private rate-making machinery for the entire transportation industry is one of impelling public significance. The machinery of the Interstate Commerce Commission—

Mr. President, in view of the question he just asked me, I call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to this language:

The machinery of the Interstate Commerce Commission for supervising rates is dwarfed in comparison.

That is, in comparison to this private government the railroads have set up. The Association of American Railroads and the western agreement constitute the private government the railroads have set up. Have Senators had time to look at the chart in the hearings showing what this private government is? The chart will be found opposite page 109. There will be found that private railroad government, the Association of American Railroads. We talk a great deal about bureaucracy, about bureaus in Government, but this set-up makes any bureau in government seem, by comparison, to be a cracker. One might as well compare an alley cat to a Bengal tiger as to compare a Government Bureau with the Association of American Railroads. I believe it was Senator Blaine on the Senate floor who used the Bengal tiger as an example. Opposite page 109 Senators will find a picture, a chart, a pattern of that great association. All I can say is, may the Lord help the West and the South if Congress ever passes the pending bill and turns this Bengal tiger loose to raid those two sections of the country.

Mr. Wiprud goes on to say:

It was testified by Government witnesses that adherence to conference rates has been compelled not only by coercive means inherent in rate-bureau and rate-association machinery but also (and this applied particularly to motor carriers) by flagrantly coercive practices such as refusal to interchange traffic with nonconforming carriers, boycotts, intimidation, fomenting of strikes, and the like. By such means, individual rate making is successfully eliminated and transportation rates artificially fixed and maintained. And, finally, as to the bill, S. 942, I testified for the Department of Justice, as follows:

"At this time, we—

Meaning the Department of Justice—

"can only state that this bill, S. 942, or any bill similarly designed to legalize rate-making conferences, would vest in the transportation industry a power greater than that ever heretofore delegated by the Congress to any industry. It has been said that these private rate-making conferences exercise power coextensive with that of the Interstate Commerce Commission; but, as we have seen"—

I call attention of the Senator from Tennessee to this language, in view of his deep interest in this matter and his great work in behalf of the removal of freight rate discriminations—

"they have in fact even greater power, for they determine, with few exceptions, what rates for public transportation shall, or shall not, be filed with the Commission and thus become the 'lawful' rates. And of the rates so determined and filed, the Commission reviews about 1 percent. Clearly such extraordinary powers should not be lightly given. The assertion that the shippers are able to police the results of this private rate-making machinery fails to carry conviction, in view of the record and of the widespread and continuing complaints of private shippers and public officials of excessive and discriminatory transportation charges."

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator has directed my attention to the language he has just read. What the Senator means to emphasize is that in the end the railroads themselves make the rates.

Mr. HILL. Surely they make the rates. Of course, they do.

Mr. STEWART. The process by which that is done is one of the so-called secrets. It is one of these very difficult problems which only the railroads can solve. Oftentimes when those interested in the subject discuss rate making and discriminatory rates affecting the South and the West, as we have done many times, we are told, "Well, that is a very, very difficult problem. It is one that should be left to the experts." One must be an expert in order to understand how freight rates are made. One almost has to be an expert in order to make them. So many experts have been connected with rate making that throughout the years one section of the country has been built up to a high state of industrial development, and it has become so powerful that it is difficult to deal with. Of course, I am not an expert rate maker; my knowledge is comparatively smattering and fragmentary; but I have been given to understand that it has long since become a custom—whether justified by law, frankly I do not know, because there have been opinions both ways—for a railroad, when it desires to make a tariff or rate between Butte, Mont., for example, and Montgomery, Ala., on shoes, overalls, shirts, women's dresses, or some manufactured product made in either one of the cities, to file the rate with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and if no one objects to it in a certain period of time, perhaps 30 days, it then becomes a fixed rate, and that must be paid by shippers. Does not the Senator from Alabama understand that to be substantially correct?

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Tennessee is correct.

Mr. STEWART. Who could know when the rate was applied for? Perhaps it would be tacked on a little board in a remote room in one of the larger Government buildings in the city of Washington, in close proximity to where the Interstate Commerce Commission held its meetings. So the notice would be so meager as not to be sufficient to those who might be affected.

To digress for a moment, to show what an absurd thing has happened as a result of the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, I remember reading a few years ago a portion of the debate on the floor of the Senate when the Interstate Commerce Commission was being created. Senator Cullom, of Illinois, in his zeal and enthusiasm for the establishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the passage of the act creating it, said:

> This will become the poor man's court. The shipper will be protected if this Commission is created.

Many times I have thought what a distance we have come since Senator Cullum, of Illinois, expressed what was undoubtedly his honest opinion. He believed that it would become a poor man's court for the protection of small shippers and others. We have reached the point where the railroads have practically dominated the Commission. As I understand, the Commission is helpless to change a rate unless someone objects to it. Who knows about it?

I did not mean to take so much of the Senator's time.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, as I stated in the beginning, no one has been more diligent or persistent in his efforts to remove these unfair and unjust discriminations against the great western section of our country, as well as the South, than has the distinguished Senator from Tennessee. He has studied this question. He has worked on it. He has been most diligent in his efforts to fight this battle, and I am delighted to have him here today, to interrupt me and make any observation he may see fit to make.

Mr. STEWART. I appreciate the Senator's very courteous remarks. I can return the compliment ten-fold. I know of the Senator's work in this same field. I recall the work which he did in 1939 and 1940 as chairman of a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce in effecting the passage of the so-called Transportation Act of 1940. The Senator will recall that after laboring many months the House passed one version of the bill and the Senate another. We almost gave up hope in the closing weeks of the session, when the conference committee finally got together and ironed out the differences, and incidentally did a little legislating of its own. I remember the fine work which the Senator from Alabama did on that occasion. If it had not been for the passage of the act of 1940, and the insertion of words prohibiting discrimination against any region, territory, or zone, the victory which was won in the Supreme Court the other day would not have been possible. In years gone by the lack of that single provision was responsible for the refusal to correct a discriminatory condition. It must be said to the credit of the Senator from Alabama that he is more responsible for that provision than anyone else.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. Just a moment before the Senator from South Carolina interposes.

I was not a member of the subcommittee, but I attended the hearings rather regularly. Hearings were held until everyone was pretty well worn down at the heels. They had been going on for 2 or 3 months, almost daily. Finally a group from Arkansas came forward to testify, and a very excellent witness, whose name I thought I had on the tip of my tongue when I started to relate this incident, appeared with a large map of the United States on a cardboard 3 or 4 feet square. On it was the picture of a cow with her head in Arkansas, grazing, and she was being milked in New York. That put new life into the committee. That single incident created considerable newspaper comment, and we took a fresh start after the milking cartoon was exhibited.

Before I take my seat, I call attention to the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission has not functioned as a poor man's court, as was hoped by Senator Cullum, of Illinois, during the debates. Perhaps we have been responsible. Perhaps we have been derelict in our duty toward that body, by not giving it the power it should have.

During a period of 3 or 4 years I was chairman of the transportation subcommittee of the Small Business Committee of the Senate, of which the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] was chairman. Other Senators, including the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] were members of the subcommittee. The Senator from Montana appointed me to the chairmanship of the transportation subcommittee. We went into the freight-rate question. We procured the advice and assistance of experts. Last year, before the committee folded up, in about September of 1946, we filed a report which is Senate subcommittee print No. 14. I distributed copies of that report among Members of both Houses of Congress.

Among other things recommended in that report, I invite the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the following recommendation:

> That an Office of Public Transportation Counsel be created in the Department of Justice, with the duty of presenting, under the direction and with the assistance of the Federal Transportation Authority—
> Which was also recommended—
> representing the general public interest in appropriate proceedings before agencies regulating transportation and the courts, matters pertinent to the effectuation of a national transportation policy.

The purpose was to aid small shippers who are absolutely unrepresented in all these matters. In the past the situation has been most pathetic. Sometimes I feel that the Congress of the United States should hang its head in shame because of the fact that we have overlooked our duty of protecting small business interests and small shippers.

I thank the Senator from Alabama for permitting this interruption.

Mr. HILL. I thank the Senator from Tennessee for his splendid and timely contribution. He speaks of the recommendation of his committee for an Office of Public Transportation Counsel representing the public interest. According to my information many State commissions have such a counsel to represent the people. Oftentimes when we attend a hearing to witness the presentation of some case, the railroads, water carriers, and motor carriers have their counsel there. Every selfish interest has a representative, but there is no one there to represent the people.

The Senator suggests that we have a counsel whose duty and business shall be to represent the people in these matters. But instead of having before us a bill to provide such a counsel, we have before us a bill to take from the Attorney General his right to go into court and ask for our protection under the antitrust laws. We have a bill which would reduce the Attorney General and the Department of Justice to the status of an ordinary complainant before the Interstate Commerce Commission. The bill moves entirely in the opposite direction from the recommendation of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

Referring to the rules and regulations under the present-day monopoly system of the Association of American Railroads, let me say that among other rules and regulations the Association of American Railroads promulgated a resolution dated May 17, 1935, which was in the early days of the association. That resolution provided that no rail carrier should ask the Interstate Commerce Commission to suspend rates of another rail carrier until representatives of both parties had first conferred with representatives of the Association of American Railroads, and that where one group of lines knew of contemplated publication of rates of another group believed to be harmful to it there must be a conference with the representatives of the Association of American Railroads in advance of filing such tariffs. The tariffs are the requests for new rates to be put into being. As a result of the means and methods adopted to effectuate the unlawful purpose of this combination in violation of the antitrust laws, a private government has been established by the railroad industry. The words "private government," which I use now and have used frequently in my speech today, are based on written statements of those who acted in creating the Association of American Railroads—an organization, a process of administration, a system of police all unknown to our laws, which has been endowed with the power of self-regulation comparable with the United States Government itself.

Every important carrier as a practical matter must have membership in the Association of American Railroads. Every member of the association as a condition of membership agrees to submit to control by the association, and in all its rates and other activities conform to the procedures and to employ the bureaus and associations established by concerted action under the Association of American Railroads.

To obtain and maintain its membership, an individual railroad must, in respect to all that has to do with rate making and services, surrender its liberty of individual action. Mr. Pelley, of the Association of American Railroads, in effect has admitted this much. A railroad thus surrenders to the government of the industry practically all the privileges in respect to the initiation and revision of its rates and other matters and all the privileges in respect to protesting to the Commission against rates proposed by other carriers, which privileges are accorded to the railroads by the Interstate Commerce Act. A railroad surrenders the privileges accorded to it by the law of the land. It surrenders even the right to complain to the Interstate Commerce Commission against the rates of other carriers and against the veto imposed on its proposals somewhere in the hierarchy to which I referred a short time ago—this superduper bureaucracy in the government of the railroads.

The Bangor & Aroostook Railroad and the Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad tried to join the Association of American Railroads with a reservation of the right to act independently of the association in rate matters. Their membership was not accepted on such a basis.

It is thus through a private rate-making policy and rate-making process unknown to the law that a decision is made as to what rates are to be filed and what are to be withheld from the official regulatory authorities. Such a concert of action constituting an unlawful conspiracy in restraint of trade interferes with and disrupts the regulatory scheme established by Congress. Such conspiracy restrains, prevents, and hinders the initiation and maintenance of rates, services, and facilities which are just and reasonable and leaves the interests of the States and the people of the States without the protection the law was designed to afford them. The railroads, in creating and employing this process of rate and policy determination, violated the antitrust laws and flouted the procedures provided in the Interstate Commerce Act. Rate bureaus were not so arranged and were not intended to be so arranged as to give economic power into the hands of the carriers of any one territory—that is, the eastern territory—and to accord a relative advantage to the shippers and the economic interests of the eastern, or official, territory, and to discriminate against the West and the South, their ports and their people.

Rate bureaus were intended to be so arranged as not to be used to impair the power of individual carriers or of connecting carriers acting independently and in competition to propose single or joint rates to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to protest to the Commission against rates proposed by other carriers which would deny to some of the States and to their people the use of due process established by law through which their interests were to be served and protected in the making of rates.

Documents of record in connection with the Bulwinkle bill show that the railroads wilfully and with full knowledge of the consequences of their acts organized and utilized a system of rate making and private government by which power over rates and other matters was lodged with conspirators, and rates and policies fixed by them were intended to serve and did serve the paramount interest of the eastern, or official, territory, to the injury and detriment of the West, the South, and other sections of the Nation.

For instance, documents in the hearings on the Bulwinkle bill show that any controversy arising out of the failure to adjust to the satisfaction of the carriers in official, or eastern, territory any rate dispute affecting the carriage of freight between the South and the North or between the West and the East, or official territory, may be referred to the Joint Conference of Contact Committees.

In this conference there are seven votes, one of which is controlled by the railroads operating in southern territory, four of which are controlled by railroads operating in northern, eastern, or official, territory, and two of which are controlled by railroads operating in western territory.

In this conference the eastern territory has absolute power to coerce decisions affecting freight rates to, from, and within the States of the West and the South in whatever fashion the conspirators determine.

The plans of the underlying bureaus, organizations, and the Association of American Railroads taken together further provide for an appeal to the Association of American Railroads in the event that some one or more of the interested carriers should desire to take such a course.

What about this appeal? Here, again, the voting privileges are so distributed that the South is completely dominated by the carriers in eastern, or official, territory. The articles of the Association of American Railroads provide that a majority vote of the board of directors is required for decision. Any member of the board, however, may declare a question controversial, in which case a vote of three-fourths of the board is necessary for a decision. Of 18 votes on the board of directors only 4—less than one-fourth—are controlled by the South, although the rate or other question may be applicable within the South alone. It may be a rate that is applicable only in the South, not applicable at all in the eastern territory. Nevertheless, the eastern territory officials control that rate and, under this monopoly set-up, have within their own hands, the power to control it.

Mr. RUSSELL. The same thing is true with respect to the West.

Mr. HILL. Yes, Mr. President; I am delighted that the Senator from Georgia has made that point, because earlier in my remarks I stated that the same thing is true with respect to the West, except, as I shall show in a few moments, they have been a little more merciful, shall I say, to the South than they have been to the West in the matter of freight rates. In regard to freight rates they have stifled and strangled and choked the West to an even greater and more outrageous degree than they have the South, badly and outrageously as they have treated the South.

Mr. President, let me give an illustration of what the result is. Congress has said in effect that the rates should be calculated or worked out in such fashion as to preserve the inherent advantages of water transportation. That specific provision was written into the law by Congress in 1940, when the Congress put the water carriers under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. There is now in the Supreme Court a case which previously has been on appeal; and in that case it is shown with respect to two carloads of grain which went to Chicago from the West, one by rail and one by inland waterway, the two carloads subsequently leaving Chicago on the same train, going to New York by rail, that the charges on the carload which came to Chicago by barge were higher than the charges on the car which came to Chicago from the West by rail, in fact, just enough higher to cancel the advantage which the western farmer would have received from the low rate for transportation by water into Chicago from the western farm. In other words the private government of these railroads took the few cents of benefit flowing from the cheap water transportation on each hundredweight of grain from the pocket of the western farmer and gave it, not to the western railroad which had lost the business to the western inland waterways, but to the dominant railroads in the highly industrialized East. The western farmer received no benefit from the cheaper waterway transportation. He did not get any of that benefit, because by the time his grain arrived at New York, the transportation charges were just as much on his grain, although he had used the cheaper waterway transportation, as they were on the grain that had gone all the way by the higher-cost railroad.

Mr. PEPPER. And that was so, despite the fact that the farmer helped to pay for the waterway.

Mr. HILL. Yes; as the distinguished Senator from Florida has suggested, the farmer helped to pay, out of his own pocket, for the waterway. Nevertheless, after he helped to pay for it, he was denied any benefit from it, and not even the western railroad received the benefit, because the benefit went to the large eastern railroads. Yet we are asked to give our blessings to and to approve and ratify and to become a party to that sort of thing.

Mr. President, I note that the hour grows late. I could continue indefinitely. The Senate will not be surprised to know the results of this system and what it has done.

Let me refer to the Georgia case now pending in the Supreme Court. As I commented in my remarks in the Senate yesterday—and I do not want Senators to forget this point—the men who framed our Constitution, whom we like to think of and pay tribute to, because they deserve tribute, were so much interested in the right of the sovereign States to defend the rights and protect the welfare of their people that they accorded to the States the right to take cases directly into the Supreme Court. They provided that sovereign States would not have to go into a district court or into a circuit court of appeals or into some other lower court; they were so concerned about the right of the States to protect their people and they were so anxious and eager to strengthen and to fortify that right of the States that in the Constitution of the United States they provided that the States could go directly into the Supreme Court of the United States to protect those rights.

That is exactly what the State of Georgia did. Here is what the record in that case shows in regard to what Georgia and other Southern States have suffered under this monopoly, cartelized, private government of the railroads, owned and controlled by Wall Street bankers and the railroad magnates of the East. At page 548 of the hearings on the Bulwinkle bill before the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, we find a table captioned "II. Comparison of first-class rate scales within eastern (official) territory and within southern territory—intraterritorial rates—rates stated in cents per 100 pounds."

Mr. President, from the table it appears that to transport 100 pounds by railroad for a distance of 50 miles the cost in the northern and in the eastern sections of the country is 47 cents; in southern territory the cost is 57 cents. In other words, the percentage of the southern rate to the eastern rate is 121.3 percent.

We also find that to transport 100 pounds a distance of a thousand miles cost $1.82 under the eastern rate, and cost $2.49 under the southern rate, or a percentage of the southern rate as compared to the eastern rate of 136.8.

I shall not read all of the table, but at this time I ask unanimous consent to have it printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

II. COMPARISON OF FIRST-CLASS RATE SCALES WITHIN EASTERN (OFFICIAL) TERRITORY AND WITHIN SOUTHERN TERRITORY

Intraterritorial rates

[Rates stated in cents per 100 pounds]

Distance	Eastern scale rate	Southern scale
		Rate	Percentage of eastern
50 miles	47	57	121.3
100 miles	62	79	127.4
150 miles	73	96	131.5
200 miles	80	112	140.0
300 miles	96	134	139.6
400 miles	109	156	143.1
500 miles	122	173	141.8
600 miles	135	189	140.0
700 miles	149	206	138.3
800 miles	160	222	138.8
900 miles	171	235	137.4
1,000 miles	182	249	136.8
Average			137.7

On a movement of 800 miles within official territory, the table above shows that a rate of $1.60 per 100 pounds applies on first-class traffic, while for the same distance in southern territory, the rate is $2.22. If the 800 miles are divided, 600 in official and 200 in southern, the rate is $2, or 40 cents higher than the normal official rate and 22 cents lower than the all-southern.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on the same page of the hearings we find a table with the following heading: "III. Interterritorial rate comparison—Interterritorial rates—Rates stated in cents per 100 pounds."

From that table it appears that from Atlanta, Ga., to Elmira, N. Y., a distance of 931 miles, the first-class rate was $2.35, whereas from Chicago, Ill., to Worcester, Mass., a distance of 933 miles—2 miles farther—the rate was not $2.35 but only $1.69. In other words, the disadvantage of the southern territory as compared with the official, or eastern, territory was 66 cents, or 39 percent.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that table may be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

III. INTERTERRITORIAL RATE COMPARISON

Interterritorial rates

[Rates stated in cents per 100 pounds]

From—	To—	Miles	First-class rates	Disadvantage of southern territory compared with official
				In cents	In percent

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, a few minutes ago I stated that, badly and outrageously as the South has been treated by this monopoly cartel and this private government of the railroads, operating in violation and in defiance of the antitrust laws of the United States, yet the West has been treated even worse and even more outrageously. I turn to a little volume entitled "Justice in Transportation," written by Arne C. Wiprud, special assistant to the Attorney General in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Before I speak of the bill particularly, I wish to read just a brief quotation from Mr. Wiprud which sums up the result of these unfair and unjust rate discriminations under this evil thing, this monopoly, cartel, private government. I read from page 71:

The colonial system in our national economy—whereby the West and the South produce basic raw materials and do little manufacturing, and the East emphasizes the production of high-unit-value manufactures—condemns the country to an unbalanced economy and a lower level of income than would result from the full use of all productive resources. The concentration of manufacture in the North and East is the most obvious characteristic of our economy. More than half of the population of the country is located in eastern territory, where 65 percent of the national income is produced. The resources of the South and West are largely undeveloped. Although these two regions embrace five-sixths of the country's area, they produce only 35 percent of the national income.

He proceeds then to speak about the disparity in per capita income, and says:

Whatever the historic origins of this colonial economy, it is now clear that its perpetuation is preeminently the result of freight-rate handicaps and that a balanced development of regional economies within a national economy demands a thoroughgoing reorganization of the entire freight rate-structure.

What are the territorial differences in freight rates? On the average, goods subject to class rates, so important to industrial developments, must pay rates 37 percent higher in the South than for a comparable service in the East, and in the West these rates are 46 to 71 percent higher than in the East. The differences in rate-making territories of the West as compared with the East are as follows:

Class rates on the average are 46 percent higher in western trunk line territory than in eastern territory; 61 percent higher in southwestern territory—

That is Arizona and Texas, as I recall—and 71 percent higher in mountain-Pacific territory.

And this condition exists despite the fact that the unit cost of railroad operation is approximately the same in the South and in the East and only a little higher in the West than in the East.

In other words, the cost of operation, the cost of service, does not in any way warrant or give any excuse for these outrageous discriminations in the matter of freight rates.

Mr. President, there are many features of the bill which time will not permit me to discuss now. One feature I had desired to discuss—and I hope the distinguished senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] will cover it in his address tomorrow, since I do not find the time to do it this afternoon—is the matter of terminal delays under the monopoly bill. A manufacturer in Montana sought to establish a plant for the manufacture of furniture, and tried for a year and a half to get a rate on moving the furniture toward the East. At the end of the year and a half nothing had been done. I hope the Senator from Montana will go into that tomorrow. I shall not discuss it further. There are many matters of that kind which should be brought out in this debate.

Mr. MURRAY. That is the case of the Yellowstone Cabinet Co., of Billings, Mont.

Mr. HILL. Yes. There are many cases of that kind, cases dealing with lumber, cases dealing with turpentine and other naval-stores products, cases dealing with many different products.

Mr. MURRAY. Including wheat and flour.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Montana suggests cases dealing with wheat and flour. There are many of those cases which should be covered in the debate, in order that Senators may know what is happening under the railroad monopoly, this cartelization, in order that they may know what the effects of the monopoly are.

I had hoped to address myself to the question of who is for this bill. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] put into the RECORD on Monday, I believe it was, a list of a number of organizations. Does the Senator from Montana recall how many there were, or can the Senator from Kansas advise me as to the number?

Mr. REED. The number of organizations?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. REED. Nine hundred and fifty-six.

Mr. HILL. I wish I had the time to discuss the list; but I shall make this suggestion: There used to be a famous engine known as No. 97. I suppose every railroad in the country, if this bill passes, will have one of its engines numbered 956.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. If the Senator wants me to go into that, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. REED. I am not anxious to have the Senator do so.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator wants me to yield, I shall be glad to do so, but I was seeking to come to a conclusion of my remarks.

I should like to discuss these organizations somewhat, but, as I have said, time does not permit. Senators might turn to the hearings on H. R. 2536, particularly to the testimony of Gov. Ellis Arnall of Georgia, beginning at page 417, where he very kindly and wisely reviewed for the committee some of the facts, some of the exposures which had been made before other Senate committees regarding lobbying, the pressures which had been exerted, and the efforts which had been made. Many things he told as to the financial contributions of the railroads to chambers of commerce, which really indicated that at least some of the chambers of commerce, when they endorsed the bill, were endorsing this good fairy godfather who had dropped gold into their treasury.

I shall not have time to go into that. If the debate proceeds at some length, I may take a day to do so. It would take a day to cover that subject, and probably a night, or perhaps the whole night.

At this time I wish to call attention to a survey made by an organization known as Home Town Opinions, Atlanta, Ga.-Washington, D. C., from area headquarters.

They made a poll among independent businessmen on the question of the pending bill. That poll showed that independent businessmen voted 46 percent in favor of the bill, 54 percent against the bill. That was for the Nation as a whole. In my State of Alabama the result was 44 percent for, 56 percent against. I am sure, however, that the businessmen who voted for the bill, if they had time to study it—we realize very well they did not have the time—if they had had an opportunity to go into the merits of the bill, to realize its effects, its meaning, its results, and what it contemplates; to know what would be done by the monopoly cartel which it would freeze into our economic life and into our American way of life, in my opinion there would not have been many of them who would have supported the bill. The fact is, I have had communications from businessmen asking me to support the bill. When I have, in reply, advised them what would be the effect of the passage of the bill, they have written again saying, "I want to ask you to oppose the bill; do not let the bill pass."

Mr. President, on page 401 of the hearings before the Committee on Interstate Commerce on H. R. 2536, there is a letter from the Western Growers' Association, and there are other letters, which show that certain Senators in the beginning looked on the bill with a certain degree of favor. When they began to study it and to see what it would do and what it would mean, they soon found themselves strongly opposing it. It is impossible for me to think that the bill can or will ever become a law. It is difficult to think that Congress would pass such a bill. If Congress should pass the bill, fortunately for the people of the United States there is in the White House at the present time a man who knows this subject. He spent many months as a Member of the Senate, and, more than that, as a member of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, studying the subject. He and the then distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, former Senator Wheeler, of Montana, spent many days, many months, long periods of time, studying the subject, exposing practices and procedures of the railroads under the monopoly-cartelized system, exposing the evils and the dangers to our economy and to our country, under this system.

The present President of the United States, while a Member of this body, after concluding his studies, characterized the so-called system under the Association of American Railroads as "cartel monopolies." I quote the words, "cartel monopolies." They are the words of the present President of the United States.

He went on to say:

> Even if we limit this number to the present number of class I railroads—137—still we would be freezing the status quo and departing from a fundamental American freedom, the freedom of opportunity.

He added:

> I believe that the proposal is fundamentally based upon the concept that a permanent level or pattern of transpotration has been achieved, and it is now simply a question of organizing its structure and distributing its fruits.

Those were the words of the present President of the United States. Commenting on those words, the author of the book had this to say:

> The railroad program seeks to protect the railroads' investments, regardless of the economic cost to the Nation. It is being advocated in the name of "free enterprise" and under the slogan "preserve the enterprise system," but there is no freedom and there is no enterprise in it. * * *
> And as a final bow to competition, the sponsors of the plan conclude that there shall be no competition in rates and charges but only in services.

But I have given Senators the words of the President of the United States. He has not forgotten what he learned while he was a Member of the Senate. He has not forgotten the effects of the railroad monopoly. He has not forgotten the evils and the ills of that monopoly, its harm to the country, its dangers to the American free-enterprise system.

In Mexico, on March 4, 1947, no doubt remembering these things, he uttered these words:

> There is one thing that Americans value even more than peace. It is freedom—freedom of worship, freedom of speech, and freedom of enterprise. It must be true that the first two of these freedoms are related to the third.

That, of course, Senators, is freedom of enterprise.

> For, throughout history, freedom of worship and freedom of speech have been most frequently enjoyed in those societies that have accorded a considerable measure of freedom to individual enterprise. Freedom has flourished where power has been dispersed. It has languished where power has been too highly centralized. So our devotion to freedom of enterprise, in the United States, has deeper roots than a desire to protect the profits of ownership. It is part and parcel of what we call American.

And so, Mr. President, we who stand here today in opposition to the pending bill are fighting the battle for America as we know it, for the American free-enterprise system, for the freedoms of America, freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom of enterprise. We fight the battle that we may maintain freedom, that we may preserve our American democracy.

FUTURE OF FREE ENTERPRISE IN WORLD FOUND UNCERTAIN—TIMES' SURVEY SHOWS NATIONALIZATION TREND GROWING OUTSIDE WESTERN HEMISPHERE—MIXED ECONOMY IN MANY LANDS

(By Russell Porter)

Of 22 nations surveyed by correspondents of the New York Times, Canada appears to be the only one in which private enterprise can be said to be functioning today with anything like the freedom from government controls that obtains in the United States.

The prospects for the survival of the competitive free enterprise system outside the Western Hemisphere seem covered with uncertainty in view of the growth of nationalization under various forms of socialism and communism.

The tendency is apparently toward moderate exercise of government controls in Britain, the western areas of the continent, and the Pacific, and toward extreme application of government control in the Soviet Union and its satellites in eastern Europe.

Since the end of the war, Canadian business and industry have been restored to virtually their prewar condition, without fundamental changes; price controls have been removed from everything but food and rent.

Britain's nationalization program is planned to leave 90 percent of the economic system in private hands, but hedged about with government restrictions, especially on the use of raw materials and credits and the right to hire and fire.

France has had a mixed economy since the end of the war. Nationalization is written into the new constitution, but the Government is going slow on the elimination of free enterprise.

The trend is away from private enterprise toward some form of state control in Italy. The Spanish Government's declared policy is to encourage private enterprise, but the tendency for 8 years has been increasingly toward controls.

Sweden is following a program of slow but sure absorption of the bulk of big business and industry despite strong opposition from bankers, industrialists, and the cooperative movement. Private enterprise is still active in Belgium, but there are many Government restrictions. Holland has more and stricter restrictions.

The situation in Germany is in a state of flux because of the occupation, the lack of economic unification and the nation's uncertain future.

In Russia private enterprise is, of course, outlawed except for some unimportant activities on the fringe of the totalitarian economy. It is reported to be on the way out in Hungary. In Poland, it has recently been emphasized that limited private industries are officially welcome, but whether this toleration is a stopgap until the nationalization of basic industries is made to work satisfactorily is not clear.

For the time being, private enterprise retains considerable position in Czechoslovakia, although industry is 70 percent nationalized, but the Communist-headed Government is opposed to indefinite continuation of the present mixed system.

Although nationalization laws went into effect in Austria last September, the prospects seem better there for the survival of private enterprise than in the rest of southeastern Europe.

In the Balkan countries of the Russian sphere—Rumania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, and Albania—industry is being completely nationalized; private enterprise is fighting a losing battle there.

Greek businessmen hope for a revival of private enterprise when the country becomes more settled.

The Australian Labor Government owns and controls many major industries. Since the end of the war political pressures have been growing for more socialization.

In Japan the Government opposes nationalization but is increasing controls over production. Although private enterprise there is in a shaky condition, it is expected to survive during the occupation.

Rival Trends in Australia

(By Roy L. Curthoys)

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA, February 25.—Two conflicting trends are manifest in Australia's economy.

One is the strengthening of the capitalist structure by the elimination of weaker groups or units and the consolidation of stronger groups by mergers. The other is the growth of political pressure from the Labor Party for socialization.

In industries like coal, steel, shipping, textiles, food processing, wool, insurance and banking, the tendency in recent years has been toward fewer but bigger corporations. There have also been many amalgamations of enterprise in tobacco, chemicals, cement, glass, rubber manufacture, and breweries, with a general interlocking of widely different industries.

EXAMPLE OF BUSINESS GROWTH

The Broken Hill Proprietary Co., Ltd., has grown from a modest silver and lead mining enterprise into a vast iron and steel concern reaching out through the whole Australian economic structure. It controls 23 major coal mines and went into shipbuilding during the war. Large international corporations like Imperial Chemical Industries, General Motors, Ford Motor Co., Standard Oil and Royal Dutch Shell are now among Australia's biggest profit-makers.

The result of this development has undoubtedly been to strengthen the capitalist structure generally. An economic system under which public companies earn an average profit of 6 percent on the funds employed and the annual earnings of private and public companies rose by $160,000,000 between 1939 and 1946 can hardly be said to be in jeopardy.

Alongside the trend toward the consolidation of capital, however, Labor politicians have insistently demanded political action toward socialization. The Labor Party, at present controlling the Commonwealth Government and five of the six state governments, has as one of its main objectives the socialization of the means of production, distribution, and exchange.

LABOR'S DEMANDS GROW

Since the war the demand for socialization has grown insistently, although the application of this policy is very far from the stage attained in Britain. However, in housing, aviation, banking, insurance, railways, electrical undertakings and shipbuilding government control or ownership is considerable and likely to grow as a result of political pressure. As left-wing influences gain in the industrial wing of the Labor Party, the demand that Labor Government carry out the party's platform on finance, commerce, and industry is certain to increase.

When the Commonwealth Government failed recently to gain exclusive control of interstate civil aviation because airline companies successfully appealed to the high court against the constitutionality of legislation purporting to give the Government a monopoly, pressure from the rank and file of the Labor Party caused the government to establish a rival airline that is now in daily competition against private companies.

Moderate political labor leaders declare this an ideal process of stabilization—healthy competition between private enterprise and Government ownership. "In my opinion, there is room here for both," Prime Minister J. B. Chifley said recently.

Vienna Outlook Vague

(By John MacCormac)

VIENNA, February 27.—The prospects for the continuation of private enterprise in Austria are probably better than elsewhere in southeastern Europe.

Austria is not under complete Russian control and the Volkspartei, which dominates its coalition Government, is a party of business interests as well as peasants. But so many uncertain factors of local and international politics, in addition to economic considerations, help to complicate the present picture that it would be rash to predict how it will look in 5 years' time.

Since the nationalization law went into effect on September 17 last the Austrian Government has become technical owner of 90 percent of the country's commercial banking facilities, about 85 percent of its river navigation, 95 percent of its coal extraction industry, and 50 percent of the nonferrous metal extraction—except aluminum—98 percent of the manufacture of pig iron and steel.

It also owns 35 percent of the iron and steel products—except machinery and structural materials—30 percent of structural iron and steel facilities, 35 percent of the manufacture of machinery other than agricultural and electrical, 25 percent of agricultural machinery manufacture, and 90 percent of the manufacture and repair of railroad equipment, about 50 percent of the manufacture of electric machinery and appliances, and 100 percent of the production and refining of oil.

This, of course, is a formidable installment of socialization.

The chief reason for the passing of so comprehensive a nationalization law, however, is believed to have been a desire to anticipate a Russian claim under the Potsdam agreement to nearly half of Austria's large-scale industry on the ground that it was a German external asset.

NATIONALIZATION DEFERRED

The Volkspartei, although it formally championed the nationalization of some key industries before the election, has no real enthusiasm for it. The application of the nationalization law to the properties of Allied and neutral nationals has been deferred by the Austrian Cabinet until Parliament has passed measures for compensation.

The Russians, who claim about 50 percent of the industries to be nationalized, have refused to admit that these are subject to Austrian law.

Where Austria, in any case, could obtain funds from which compensation could be made is not apparent. She could require foreign interests to accept 20-year or 30-year bonds for their properties. But many of these urgently need rehabilitation or development and funds for this could be obtained only in the United States or Britain.

The political prospects of the Austrian Socialist Party are improving and it is believed possible that it might win the next election. But the election is likely to be too close to permit any other than a new coalition government, which would mean a compromise on socialistic measures.

Those properties which the Austrian Government may buy back from Russia, or take over from former German or collaborationist owners, will certainly be nationalized. Those owned by uncompromised Austrians or western private interests may well remain in private hands.

Belgian Trend Uncertain

(By David Anderson)

BRUSSELS, BELGIUM, February 26.—Those most intimately concerned with private industry in Belgium are in the curious position of not being sure whether the conditions are good, bad, or indifferent. A plausible case can be made out for any one of the three.

The marked gains recorded in most fields of endeavor until last September have been held, but few industrialists can point to any further advance since then. The lack of coal and the scarcity of skilled labor are given as the main factors in the slowdown.

Manufacturers that have surpassed their prewar output include paper, textiles, and many chemical products. For the most part plants suffer from a continued high cost of raw materials, coupled with lower man-hour output.

Private industry in Belgium is still unquestionably very much a private affair, and the well-known ability of the people to resist controls is cited as evidence against nationalization schemes. There is a proposition before Parliament to take over the coal mines but businessmen believe any such program will not be approved for years. The nationalization of the gas and electricity industries also is in the preliminary discussion stage. Government curbs, however, do restrict enterprise.

PRICE CONTROLS IN FORCE

Price controls are laid down for manufactured goods, and the factory owners must observe the regulations even if the middlemen and retailers ignore them. Foreign exchange control is relatively liberal. The 50-percent tax on profits plus the 5-percent capital tax impedes the reequipment and stocking of plants, businessmen contend.

A bitter disappointment to Belgian industry has been the operation of this country's free-trade program, whereby a long list of commodities can be imported or exported without license. It was hoped that the same policy would be adopted elsewhere, but since that is not the case Belgium is glutted with consumer goods while she exports with difficulty.

The prospects for private industry will be uncertain as long as the trade balance remains unfavorable. Last year imports were valued at 52,000,000,000 francs and exports at 29,000,000,000.

It is possible, therefore, that the nation will be forced to try austerity to reduce domestic consumption. This will not be easy because the people are reaching out for their prewar standard of living, which is no longer attainable, according to economists.

DUTCH AWAIT NEW MARKETS

The Netherlands is primarily a trading community, whereas Belgium is industrial. The Dutch tend to underestimate their position, which they say will be fair until the great markets in Germany and the Netherlands Indies are open. Foreign exchange controls are much stricter in the Netherlands than in Belgium. More severe controls also are imposed on domestic industry.

For example, a 5-year permit must be obtained for any new plant, whose operation will be closely watched. Private enterprise in the Netherlands enjoys easier money than does Belgian, the interest rates are lower and taxes are scaled to encourage industrial modernization and restocking.

BRITAIN SOCIALIZING

(By Michael L. Hoffman)

LONDON, February 27.—While nationalization of industry is the heart of the Labor Government's program for post-war Britain, this country will continue to depend on private enterprise for the conduct of most economic activity.

It is becoming increasingly clear, however, that the role of private enterprise in a partly socialized economic system cannot be left to work itself out as a residue of the nationalization program.

When the present program is completed, coal, road, and rail transport, and electric and gas industries will have been transferred to state ownership. The Bank of England and cable and wireless have already been taken over, but they are only single enterprises whose nationalization makes little or no difference to anyone but their own shareholders.

At least as important for the future of private enterprise as the industries actually nationalized is the extensive control over land use and development that the Government will acquire by the town and country planning bill and the agricultural bill now passing through Parliament. Private initiative in determining the use to which either farm or city land may be put will, in effect, be prohibited.

After all this has been done, however, less than 10 percent of the British employed population, not counting the armed forces or civil service, will be working in nationalized industry.

In this "90 percent of the economy" private enterprise will be responsible for the organization of production and the marketing of products. It would be a distortion of terms, however, to call this "capitalism" as either Karl Marx or the average American businessman would understand that term.

On every hand private enterprise is hedged with restrictions. The investment of capital and the acquisition of raw materials are largely under Government control and apparently will continue so. The control of investment is considered by the Labor Government as a necessary adjunct to the nationalization of basic industries, for which the Government now becomes the responsible entrepreneur.

Not everyone would agree with the head of the Austin Motor Co., who said yesterday that industry had been turned over to the shop stewards, whom he called Communists. However, the amount of freedom an employer retains to hire and fire is severely restricted.

BUSINESSMEN RESIGNED

Businessmen in Britain do not favor nationalization. On the other hand, they accept it with remarkably little protest, largely because they feel it is inevitable in industries already tagged by Socialists.

Both business and a growing section of the Labor Party feel that the Government must soon define an area for private enterprise and let it have a little leg room. It is becoming obvious that Britain now has the worst of two worlds, with neither business initiative nor Government direction able to produce the tremendous economic effort that this country must make if it is to feed, clothe, and house its people.

CANADA HOLDS PREWAR IDEAS

(By P. J. Philip)

OTTAWA, February 27.—The Government's control of industry and enterprise in Canada during the war reached such a peak that private business seemed almost inevitably doomed to disappear. The Government built not only airplanes, tanks, and all forms of armament, but also ships and houses.

It directed the chemical industry and research of all kinds; it built plants for the production of essential materials, such as synthetic rubber and optical glass. It seemed that Government had entered the production business to stay.

During the past year, however, the present administration has shown clearly that it has no intention to substitute public for private enterprise. With a very few exceptions, in new industry, it has got rid of all its plants and retired from the whole production field. There has been no fundamental change in the capitalistic structure of the country and no departure from the old political conception of the Liberal Party that the role of government is to encourage private enterprise and private capital to produce and to provide employment while the party confined itself to the field of public enterprise.

No single industry has been nationalized. It was significant that the recent report of the Royal Commission on Coal Production recommended against nationalization on the ground that it would not necessarily increase production.

On the other hand, the policy followed by the administration has been to restore to private eterprise all reasonable liberty just as quickly as goods and services become available in sufficient quantities to prevent any sudden or drastic rise in the cost of living. Price controls have been removed on almost everything except food and rent, and on the latter, restrictions have recently been slightly relaxed.

What has been even more important from the point of view of private enterprise has been that a first measure of tax relief was granted to corporations during the past session. It is confidently expected that a further decrease in the tax rate will be announced when the Finance Minister brings his budget to this session.

QUICK TAX REDUCTIONS ASKED

It has been significant, too, that many of the Government's supporters in Parliament have joined those who have been urging a reduction of taxation on gold mining and other enterprises, and that the National Liberal Federation has asked that further substantial reductions in taxation be made as quickly as possible to stimulate high production and employment.

It must be taken into consideration, however, that the social service program of the Government and the heavy subsidies paid for wheat and coal production will make it unlikely that the taxation burden on private enterprise will ever be restored to the prewar level.

In the political field, the Canadian Socialist Party (CCF), which alone advocates national ownership of essential industries, remains numerically weak. Although it controls the Provincial Government of Saskatchewan it has not been able so far to establish any Nation-wide representation.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA TESTS POLICIES

(By Albion Ross)

PRAGUE, CZECHOSLOVAKIA, February 26.—Private industry in Czechoslovakia retains a respectable position, despite an over-all 70-percent nationalization of industrial capacity.

The major industrial regions of Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia show, according to the Ministry of Industrial Statistics, 2,902 nationalized industries with 657,000 employees and 13,439 private industrial establishments with 416,757 employees.

Competition with the 200 or so state trusts into which the nationalized industries have been organized, is difficult. All the important sources of raw material are either state enterprises or government controlled. All important sources of credit also have become state enterprises.

Labor unions, dominated by the firmly communistic Central Trade Unions Council, are in general hostile to private enterprise. The Trade Unions Council and the Communist Party, which is the strongest political power in the country, are now campaigning for nationalization of the principal jobbing and wholesaling houses. So far their campaign has not been successful.

The present salvation of private industry is the national 2-year plan. The plan lays down schedules of production, based on capacity, which require delivery of raw materials to private industry sufficient to enable it to fulfill its production quotas. Also the plan provides for essential financing to make this production possible.

The same situation applies to exports, with a system being set up for private sectors of industry to sell through their own export channels parallel to the export organization for nationalized industry.

Mining is entirely nationalized and in iron and steel production, power, and heavy industries generally private enterprise is negligible. However, the data of the Ministry of Industrial Statistics for production in January, the first month of the 2-year plan, indicate that in other sectors of industry private enterprise continues to play a considerable role.

Half the volume of wool textiles is produced by private firms. Two-thirds of cotton and rayon textiles are privately produced. Something less than half of cotton thread, one-third of agricultural machines, and one-fifth of electric motors are privately produced.

There is a limited chance for a small operator to get private instead of state financing, despite the nationalization of every important financial institution. Small cooperative and private banks of various sorts still have a total of 10,694 employees, compared to 6,900 in the nationalized banks.

However, the future of private industry in Czechoslovakia depends on whether the Marxists, who now have about half the votes, win future elections. That the Communists and left-wing Socialists will not tolerate indefinitely the present compromises, has been made clear by developments since the present government of Premier Klement Gottwald, a Communist, came to power last summer.

French Economy Mixed

(By Harold Callender)

PARIS, March 2.—Since the war France has lived under a regime of mixed economy, with huge new doses of socialism but without the complete repudiation of private enterprise.

Industrialists and businessmen generally incline to the view that the nationalized industries will be mismanaged and eventually will have to be turned back to private ownership.

Socialists—who include far more than the members of the Socialist party—hope the future holds a gradual increase of nationalization. They agree, however, that at present France has bitten off as much as she can chew and should digest what has been nationalized before extending government ownership to new fields.

It is the policy of the present government to limit nationalization to approximately its present proportions. But the fact that it has been extended rapidly since the war and the fact that the governments and their policies are regarded as far from stable have discouraged capital investment in industries susceptible to nationalization.

The Blum government nationalized the railways and part of armament and aviation industries in 1936.

NATIONALIZATION EXTENDED

Since the liberation the socialistic trend has accelerated and the coal mines of Nord and Pas de Calais, the Renault Motor factories, the Bank of France and business banks, gas and electricity production and some insurance companies have been nationalized.

Now the merchant marine is to be subject to partial nationalization, with government control of all of it.

These measures were taken at a time when the French economy was at a low ebb as a result of the War. This was their justification.

Today's conditions offer a test state management which not only must manage but to some extent rebuild major industries. Hence it is impossible wholly to separate the effects of these new measures from the effects of the war and the impoverishment from which France struggles to emerge.

One result of the impoverishment is the shaky currency. Thus one of foundations of capitalism is lacking. So is the economic freedom associated with capitalism, for the state tries to control prices and wages and to ration many foodstuffs and raw materials.

The nationalized Bank of France serves as a powerful lever for government control of credit, which limits that freedom of investment that is one of the principles of capitalism.

The accepted theory is that there is to be a nationalized sector of economy, including key industries and banks, a state controlled but not nationalized sector and a free sector. This mixed economy is merely in the process of creation.

It is noteworthy, however, that of the three strongest parties, the Communists and Socialists are out-and-out nationalizers, while even the Catholic Popular Republicans espouse the doctrine of the nationalization of key industries.

This doctrine was written into the new constitution, which declares that every property or enterprise constituting a national public service or a monopoly should be owned by the community. The prevalence of this doctrine owes much to the belief that to some extent the downfall of the Third Republic was also the downfall of capitalism as the French had known it.

Allies' Systems Shape Germany

(By Jack Raymond)

BERLIN, March 1.—The lack of economic unification of Germany provides a distorted picture of private industry in the country. One would have to know not only the outcome of the Foreign Ministers meeting in Moscow but also the ultimate political character of a free Germany before predicting any economic trend. Certainly no unfettered tendencies are discernible today.

On paper there are four pertinent factors:

1. The people of greater Hesse in the United States occupation zone recently voted for the socialization of major industries.

2. The British military government is committed by home policy to socialization of the Ruhr and other industries in its zone.

3. The Russians have carried forward vast socialization of industry and agriculture in the eastern zone.

4. The Berlin City Parliament voted last week for the socialization of major industries.

Except for the votes in greater Hesse and Berlin, however, there is little indication that the people want socialism. Whatever reforms have been planned or instituted are a direct result of the policies of the occupying powers, two of which officially have little use for the continuance of completely free enterprise. Even in the two exceptions, a military government official says, the sympathy to socialism is probably due to the typical German willingness to let the state run the people's affairs.

WANT BARRIERS LIFTED

This attitude is believed to be reflected by the vote in Greater Hesse, where socialization was approved by 65 percent of the voters. The vote in the Berlin Parliament was unanimous. However, it was said that with the city split into four sectors, even businessmen ordinarily opposed to socialism would grasp some of the methods by which the economic barriers could be lifted.

Under nazism, capitalism was equally excoriated with socialism, although the latter word found curious use in official party doctrine. The average German in the United States zone would probably express a wish for some form of socialization, but according to economics officials here, this reflects more an indoctrination by a slogan than an understanding of its ramifications.

In the process of breaking up cartels some German state officials have advocated that the state take over the parts of cartels that remained. The United States military government has often disapproved such an attitude. However, the Americans are committed to a policy of letting the Germans decide for themselves. If such a decision were put to voting tests tomorrow, the result, according to experts here, would be affected more by power politics than by the soundness of an economic principle.

Slow Progress in Greece

(By A. C. Sedgwick)

SALONIKA, GREECE, March 1.—Industries in Greece are approaching their prewar levels, but at a rate that is far from satisfactory.

This country, thoroughly devastated by the war and by enemy occupation, still knows no peace. Larger armed forces than the nation can afford must be kept up to cope with rebellious elements and to stand in readiness lest Greece's northern neighbor states, in sympathy with these rebellious elements, make a formal attack.

Greek businessmen express confidence that once the security problem has been solved enterprise will go full speed ahead. Now, however, there are not sufficient raw materials and machinery nor is there enough foreign currency with which to purchase raw materials. Internal communications were broken during the war and are only partly mended. They are now being continually attacked by guerrilla forces. The existing harbor facilities make loading and unloading a complicated and costly affair.

FACTORS IN PRICE RISE

In general there is no cheap transport. All this leads to a rise in prices to the extent that they are out of line with world price levels.

This can be remedied only by large-scale rehabilitation. However, if this were done with capital within the country, financial experts believe that it would lead to immediate inflation.

Industrial workers are comparatively well paid. Trades unions are not developed and are constantly influenced by political considerations. One peculiarity of the Greek industries at present is that, although minimum and maximum wages are fixed by the Government, rates are raised in many cases by the employers to avoid labor troubles and to check the inflationary trend. Individual agreement between the employer and employee takes the place of collective bargaining.

It is considered doubtful if any majority Government could enforce nationalization except by force. Present tendencies indicate the reaffirmation of the belief in free enterprise despite the advocacy by almost all political parties of controls in one form or another.

Apart from textiles, chemical fertilizers, and tobacco, which is not officially recognized as an industry, all the industries are in the hands of individuals or companies content with an unimpressive turn-over. They feel that if security is established and foreign capital is made available to them, they will expand to greater limits.

Greece is mainly agricultural. However, there are no great landowners and the farms rarely exceed seven and a half acres. No capital is invested in land.

Capitalism Lost in Hungary

BUDAPEST, HUNGARY, March 1.—Capitalism and private enterprise are on the way out in Hungary.

They have not received their marching orders because Hungary was a mature economy devastated by trade cycles; nor because Hungary's industries, like those of Czechoslovakia, had been owned largely by collaborators with nazism. Unlike Austria and Czechoslovakia, Hungary is still largely an agricultural country, with industry undeveloped.

But Hungary has fallen within Russia's orbit and is currently exhibiting the preliminary results of a successful drive toward establishment of a proletarian dictatorship.

As Erno Gero, Communist Minister of Communications, recently said in a review of the 3-year plan drawn up by the Communist Party, Hungary's coal mines and power plants are already state owned. Heavy industry is operating under state management, and control of the banks and other credit institutions and the nationalization of mining and state control of agricultural products are in process.

RUSSIANS HAVE MAJOR INTEREST

What he did not mention but is still more to the point, Hungarian industries, such as oil and bauxite and river and air navigation, are now owned and administered by 50–50 Russo-Hungarian companies in which the Russians actually own controlling interest.

All Hungarian trade and industry are subject to decisions of the Supreme Economic Council, whose general secretary and ruling voice is a Communist, Zoltan Vas.

Negotiations also have been under way looking toward the integration of Hungary's 3-year plan with that of Marshal Tito for Yugoslavia. Moscow's puppet Premier of Rumania has been talking tenderly of a trial marriage, of customs union, of 1 year's duration, between Hungary and Rumania.

The Hungarian Government to date has been coy in responding to these overtures, but few doubt that eventually Hungary will find herself in a Danubian customs union, to which Russia also will be a party.

Meanwhile, foreign capital is being cold-shouldered out of Hungary by the same methods that are proving successful in Rumania.

Eventually, under terms of the Hungarian peace treaty, the Soviet Army must leave Hungary. But steps are being taken—with every prospect of success—to install a Communist-Socialist-dominated government in office before the Russian occupation ceases. When that aim has been achieved, private enterprise will have short shrift.

NATIONALIZATION GAINING IN ITALY

(By Arnaldo Cortesi)

ROME, March 2.—As long ago as last August, Dr. Alcide de Gasperi, Italian Premier, declared that "Free capitalism can never rise again in Italy," and events seem to confirm the correctness of his opinion.

Although the Government has not applied or even formulated any extensive program of nationalization it has nevertheless gained a very considerable measure of control over industry and correspondingly has narrowed the field of private enterprise. The trend is therefore most clearly away from traditional forms of capitalism toward some kind or other of state capitalism.

The fall of Mussolini and the restoration of a democratic government was not accompanied by the scrapping of machinery built by fascism to control the Italian economy. It is all still in existence, the only difference being that it is now run rather less efficiently. The Government was, moreover, able to gain a further hold over industry by advancing money to many private firms that were in distress after the cessation of hostilities.

The necessity of avoiding unemployment on an excessive scale obliged the Government to force industry in northern Italy into a standstill arrangement whereby employers were forbidden to dismiss their workers even if there was no work for them. At the same time the Govevrnment came to the employers' assistance, advancing them funds to meet their pay rolls. No clear understanding has yet been reached as to whether this money will have to be repaid and, if so, how. As things now stand it looks as if many industrialists will wake up some day to find that the Government owns a majority interest in their companies.

STATE CONTROL EXERCISED

State control over industry is exercised principally by an organization known as IRI, short for Instituto Ricostruzione Industriale or Industrial Reconstruction Institute. It was founded by fascism soon after the crash of 1928 to succor those industrial enterprises that appeared to be tottering. It has grown so powerful that Premier de Gasperi was able to state last August that it controlled 60 percent of steel industry, 90 percent of ship building, 100 percent of steamship passenger lines, 65 percent of the telephone network, and 35 percent of electric power. Through IRI and other organizations, the state on that date, moreover, controlled 87 percent of savings banks and similar institutions. All other banks were either the property of the state or controlled by it. IRI's power has further increased since then.

The only sector of Italian economy seriously threatened with nationalization is electric power. The Government has changed its mind more than once on this point, alternating between nationalization and stricter controls. Curiously enough, it was the Communist Minister of Finance, Mauro Scoccimarro, who came out most strongly against nationalization, which, however, has not yet been definitely discarded.

In the agricultural field the trend has also been away from private ownership. At one time peasants all over Italy started tumultuously to occupy the lands they tilled, evicting the owners. This has been brought under control, but the Government is making every effort to break up large estates and has promised further reforms aimed mainly at big landowners.

JAPAN'S CHOICES LIMITED

(By Lindesay Parrott)

TOKYO, February 25.—The wreckage of the war and the measures demanded by the Allies to break up the classes accused of causing it have left private industry in Japan in an extremely shaky condition with the question still to be answered whether it eventually will revive or be replaced by a system of nationalization or a sweeping state-planned economy.

Physically, Japanese industry was wrecked by the Allied bombing and currently there is little incentive to its reorganization while the question of reparations still hangs over the nation. In addition, the Allies have taken a series of steps designed to smash the old pattern of capitalism with a few family groups controlling many fields of production.

The Zaibatsu, or family holding company groups, have been dissolved and their securities impounded by the Government for later resale to the public in limited blocks. The managerial class, which operated at a level below the large owners, is largely outlawed from business by purge directives.

GOVERNMENT SUPPORT VITAL

Large estates are being broken up into small owner-operated farms under the new land law. Many key industries that still remain in private hands are forced to rely on the Government for support, since the pools of capital on which they might normally draw are now largely nonexistent.

Under these circumstances the Government is rapidly increasing its grip over production largely because no other method of creating a working economy is available. The Government now allocates such vital commodities as coal and proposes soon to establish public corporations that will have a monopoly of trade in the key fields of silk, coal, fuel, and fertilizer.

The situation is further complicated by the increasing demands of labor, one field in which Government controls have not yet been imposed. In some instances labor has gone so far as to expropriate from the owners, declaring workers' control of production for its own benefit without reference to management.

The present Government is opposed to nationalization, apparently preferring the traditional Japanese system of a private industry closely integrated into the national system. The rapid growth of the Socialist Party, however, makes it doubtful whether the present course can continue. If the April general election ordered by Gen. Douglas MacArthur should be won by the Socialists, considerably greater prospects of nationalization would prevail.

Since the old Japanese system of large concentrations of capital in the hands of a few families apparently is doomed as long as the allies exercise control, the alternative would be continuation of private industry under a much wider system of ownership and probably increasing Government planning and supervision.

POLAND SEEKS INVESTMENTS

(By Sydney Gruson)

WARSAW, March 2.—While Poland is well on the road toward complete socialism, it is not clear how small a role private enterprise will be allowed to play in the country's economic future.

Polish leaders have recently emphasized, for home and foreign consumption, that private enterprise has a distinct place in the economy emerging from the blueprints of the Communist and Socialist planners in charge of the country. By this emphasis the officials hope to pump domestic and foreign capital into the industrial machine.

Certainly, the role assigned to private enterprise has been enlarged in recent months, but no one is sure whether this was a temporary expedient resulting from the Government's preoccupation with the larger nationalization measures now in hand or a decision to make a permanent place in Poland's economy for individual holdings.

EDICT MAY BE RESCINDED

Most foreign observers here believe that the Government will eventually rescind its recent edict listing the number and kind of enterprises that may remain in private hands. Originally, any factory or enterprise employing more than 50 workers on a day shift was booked for nationalization. Now, in some cases, a private factory may employ up to 200 workers a shift.

However, all basic industries are state controlled. What is left in private hands is mainly shops and small furniture, textile, cement, china, glass, and porcelain works. These private establishments work on lines laid down by the Government to fit their output into needs determined by the state.

The building and textile industries provide a good example of the present efforts to make a place for private enterprise alongside state ownership. Private capital will be allowed to invest 50 percent of that needed for rebuilding, and as an inducement the Government has decreed that private persons building houses can dispose of them freely and fix rents at their discretion. In the textile industry the Government has agreed to allocate about 550 tons of all kinds of yarn to private factories in the first quarter of 1947.

While this may seem a small amount, it represents a big advance in the prospects for private factories over what their owners could have foreseen a year ago.

Private industry's future probably depends on the speed with which the huge nationalization program of basic industries is made to work satisfactorily. While the Government is concerned with this larger job it will tolerate private enterprise. The question remains, what will happen when the primary job is finished? Wil' the state then take over all plans of production or will it assign a fair-sized permanent role to individual owners? At the moment no one in Poland is sure. But a good idea of what most Polish businessmen think is reflected in their reluctance to invest.

PRIVATE ENTERPRISE IN RUSSIA

(By Drew Middleton)

Moscow, March 2.—Private enterprise does not exist on a large scale in a Socialist state such as the Soviet Union, although it is tolerated in a minor way on the fringe of the economy.

All industry here is state-owned. A minor type of private enterprise is the work of war invalids and others who belong to cartels or cooperatives and who do piecework at home or who maintain tiny shops where they do repairing or sell furniture they have made themse'ves.

Somewhat the same situation exists on collective farms. All collective farmers work in the fields of the farms to which they are assigned and are paid for their work on them. In addition each farmer and his family have a private garden for which they pay a very small yearly rental. In these gardens, which vary in size from a half acre to an acre and a quarter, farmers and their families raise vegetables, usually potatoes, for sale in the markets of town and city.

Payment for such goods is usually used by the farmer to buy extra manufactured goods, often in the same market in which he has sold his food.

Moscow is sparkled with small one-man watch and clock repair shops that are often assumed to be private enterprises. This assumption is not correct. Such shops are given to invalid soldiers and others by the Government, which also supplies material and pays the worker a fixed rate for his finished product.

Spain Uses the Subtle INI

(By Sam Pope Brewer)

MADRID, SPAIN, March 1.—The declared policy of the Government is to encourage private initiative and private capital to develop industry. Nevertheless, during the 8 years since the end of the Spanish Civil War, the Government has continued to infiltrate into more and more branches of activity, and it shows no signs of withdrawing.

No industry has been nationalized outright, though the railroads are almost completely Government-owned. A more insidious process is used as a rule.

The Government intervenes partly through direct ownership and partly through ownership by the Government's "National Institute of Industry," commonly called by its initials, "INI." In either case, private capital objects strongly and considers that despite repeated disavowals of such intent, the Government is its direct competitor.

Government competition is bound to be unfair competition, from capital's point of view because it is on unequal terms. Under the present regime, the Government can alter laws to suit the interest of any of its industrial offspring, can cancel contracts, or can alter restrictions on private concerns.

SYNDICATES' ROLE PERVASIVE

In addition, every industry feels the hand of Government upon it constantly through the "syndicates."

Syndicates require some explanation. They are not trade-unions. They are vertical syndicates including every phase of each industry—labor unions along with others—from top to bottom. On every plane the election of delegates is controlled and approved by the Falange and through the Falange by Generalissimo Francisco Franco.

Spanish businessmen occasionally talk hopefully of the eventual disappearance of the syndicates through the inefficiency they have produced. They overlook the fact, however, that this is a "national-syndicalist state," and the syndicates are the Falange and probably will disappear only when and if the Falange disappears.

Meanwhile, their grip gets stronger. Direct competition with private capital is embodied in the INI. INI, founded in September 1941, by the present minister of commerce and industry, operates on the basis of his first-hand study of German activities and along the same lines.

Ostensibly, INI is to foster infant industries and bolster up others considered essential to national security, but they are unable to face foreign competition unaided. Once industries are able to stand alone, INI is supposed to withdraw. The complaint is that INI does not, but like the proverbial camel in the Arab's tent, is demanding a constantly greater share.

In addition to INI's advantages already mentioned, all INI imports are duty-free. This gives it a serious edge on private competition, and since INI is owned by the ministry that issues the import permits, INI has none of the private operators' difficulties in getting them.

It is impossible to get accurate and full information on INI's operations and holdings. Nevertheless, although the Government has direct control of the telephone system and various other companies at the moment, it is INI that really casts gloom over private capital. And there is no present prospect of changing the situation.

Sweden Aims at Socialism

(By Peter Hershend)

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN, February 26.—The Swedish Social-Democratic Government's postwar program is one of nationalizing big industries. This program aims at the slow but progressive absorption of the bulk of Swedish big business.

The sale of liquor, wines, and tobacco has been a state monopoly for several years. The iron ore mining industry in northern Sweden is controlled half by the state and half by private enterprise. The bulk of the waterfalls producing electricity are state-owned, and the Government through recent legislation has obtained a state monopoly in the distribution of electricity on long-distance lines.

The state also is the biggest forest owner and controls the most important forest industries. The Swedish railway system—most of it now electrified—is mainly state-owned, and the state is rapidly gobbling up the few remaining lines in private operation.

By introduction of the licensing system the state had moved recently toward control of the building industry and farming.

Several official committees are working on proposals for nationalizing various commercial activities. A so-called oil committee has just handed to the Government its recommendation to nationalize imports and the sale of oil and gasoline and their derivatives. It affirms that distribution would become better and cheaper, and oil and gasoline prices would be reduced.

If the proposal is approved by the Riksdag the Swedish offices of United States oil companies will be seriously affected.

Other committees are closely examining the possibilities of nationalizing banking and insurance and even the shoe industry. This project may not be easy, as Swedish bankers, industrialists, and cooperative members violently oppose nationalizing the country's industrial and commercial life.

In strongest opposition to the Government's nationalizing program stands the Swedish cooperative movement. This body consists of one purchasing and manufacturing organization and 676 distributing associations, with nearly 1,000,000 members.

It is the firmest spokesman for free trade, and is extremely influential. Its annual turn-over amounts to nearly one-fifth of the total turn-over in Sweden, or approximately $280,000,000 of the total $1,400,000,000. Its network is composed of 6,467 stores and 28,482 employees, and is thus a factor to be reckoned with. Its main efforts in the manufacturing line are rubber products and lamps, in which cooperators own the biggest works in Sweden.

But cooperative deals in all kinds of goods—from food to paper products, textiles, and chemicals. It has succeeded in bringing down prices of consumers' goods considerably by centralizing purchases and production, and is able to pay out annual interest to all its customers.

The opponents' two main arguments against nationalization are that the state could not run the industries as efficiently as the experts who have run them for generations, and, too, nationalizing would kill all private initiative. An additional argument is that nationalization would compel many of the most capable Swedes to emigrate for bigger profits abroad.

The Government also is trying an indirect approach to get a grip on Swedish big business. A new proposal for vastly increased death duties is to come before parliament this spring. The measure is seen in Swedish business circles as a camouflaged method of forcing industries to sell out to the state. It is argued by its critics that the tax plan is prohibitive in that few or no privately owned companies can absorb these levies.

Turkey's State Capitalism

ISTANBUL, TURKEY, March 1.—Private industry in Turkey is on an extremely small scale, and it is difficult to appraise it by western European or American standards. It is strictly confined to the lightest industry, such as clothing, cotton goods, leather, and other commodities and small implements.

Turkey has only a semi-industrialized aspect, largely because of lack of mechanical inclination and enterprise. An incompetence of private capital has led to state management in Turkey, the concern of which is to endow the country with adequate equipment through state-owned light, medium, and heavy industries while aiding private enterprises to a moderate extent.

As defined by Kemal Atatürk in 1935, state control in Turkey "is not a system copied from socialist hypotheses since the nineteenth century, but a system proper to Turkey and born of Turkey's needs."

Although in many cases its application has proved to be nothing but state capitalism, the function of statism in Turkey has been and is "to produce through the state what private capital and private initiative cannot achieve."

While the State industry presents a purely mercantile aspect with no apparent trend toward or away from capitalism, private industry in this country with its actual precapitalist status shows an evident trend toward capitalism. There is no contradiction between this rise of private industry and the development of state industry, the latter complementing the former and dealing mainly with basic branches.

Foreign competition with Turkish industry faces high local prices and red tape and widespread postwar corruption. The country needs foreign capital and skilled technicians to train local workers.

A Losing Fight in the Balkans

(By W. H. Lawrence)

BELGRADE, YUGOSLAVIA, February 24.—In the Soviet sphere in southeastern Europe—Rumania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, and Albania—private enterprise steadily if slowly is waging a losing battle, even if there is no plan to try to copy all aspects of the Soviet pattern immediately.

On the surface, it may seem anomalous that whereas private ownership of land is being extended vastly as hundreds of thousands of peasants receive small plots under the agrarian reform laws, industry at the same time is being more and more nationalized and brought under centralized state direction.

The Communist-dominated governments of this region are smart in recognizing the inherent rugged individualism and the long-held desire for land ownership of all peasant classes, but the size of the plots allotted in the long run may work toward collectivization, since most agricultural experts agree they are not big enough for economic, efficient cultivation. At the same time the nationalization of industry is being effected without the trouble one normally might expect. The state is taking over factories after a great war in which property values lost their meaning and the factory-owning class was particularly affected.

It is only fair to take into account the fact that in the former enemy countries of Rumania and Bulgaria, and occupied countries such as Yugoslavia and Albania, people who were among the "haves" before the war are strictly among the "have-nots" at present. If they have fled abroad, they probably have no desire to return to the Communist-dominated political system now practiced in their countries.

The result, therefore, in all countries is that the state has assumed the ownership, control, and management of all important industrial enterprises, and in a not unimportant section of Rumanian industry ownership is being organized jointly by the Russian and Rumanian Governments.

At the same time, all four governments are pressing plans to industrialize their countries more and more during the next 5 to 10 years. Industrialization is needed not only to make the countries more self-sufficient as regards the West, with which they obviously are not going to have the same trade relations as before the war, and as a national defense measure.

Domestically the important fact is that industrialization will aid materially in solving the problem of rural over-population and help increase the national purchasing power, which has been unbelievably low.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a letter just received from the Honorable Josephus Daniels, president of the News and Observer, Raleigh, N. C.; also, an editorial which appeared in that newspaper on June 10. I need not remind the Members of the Senate that Mr. Daniels is a real southerner and a great American, one of the outstanding public servants of his era.

There being no objection, the letter and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NEWS AND OBSERVER,
Raleigh, N. C., June 10, 1947.

Hon. OLIN JOHNSTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am enclosing an editorial appearing in today's News and Observer headed "OLIN JOHNSTON right."

If we exempt railroads, insurance companies, and newspaper associations as asked by this Congress, we might as well not only repeal the antitrust law but pass an act to give monopoly the right to rob the people and repeal what we call American freedom in trade.

With high regards,
Sincerely yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

OLIN JOHNSTON RIGHT

It is good news that Senator OLIN JOHNSTON of South Carolina declares: "I am willing to talk until I fall to block Senate approval of the revived Bulwinkle railroad-rate bill."

It will be recalled that the Bulwinkle bill would repeal the antitrust law as it applies to railroads. Senator JOHNSTON says that it would not only accomplish that wicked thing, but would throw the State of Georgia's railroad-rate suit out of the Supreme Court.

Senator JOHNSTON says and truly:

"I see no necessity for extending special privileges to the railroads. If the antitrust laws are fair for the Nation's other industries, they ought to be fair for the railroads.

"I just don't want to let down the bars. We've suffered enough in the South."

Any Congressman who votes for the revamped Bulwinkle bill now pending in the Senate, whether intentionally or not, is lending his influence to two dangerous and destructive courses:

1. To weaken and destroy the antitrust law. (Instead of weakening that measure Congress ought to strengthen it and demand its enforcement. During the war and since, monopoly has strengthened its strangle hold and given body blows to small industries and virtually, in many instances, submarined the American doctrine of free enterprise.)

2. To approve a 39-percent differential in freight rates and to give a virtual present of 39 percent to eastern industries. (As long as the South and West are penalized by a discrimination against them in freight rates, just so long will they be giving a bonus and a near monopoly to manufacturing to the pampered East.)

The Bulwinkle-Reed bill is so manifestly unfair and unjust that it should not be necessary for any Member of Congress to talk it to death. But, certainly, extended debate on such a bill is justified if there is real danger of the bill being passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION—NOMINATIONS IN THE ARMY AND NAVY

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, yesterday I gave notice to the Senate that there were pending for confirmation the nominations of approximately 9,000 officers—a little more than 9,000—in the Regular Army, most of them majors and below that grade. At that time, there was a discussion among a number of Senators on the floor, and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] queried me on the matter. A little later, certain other Senators wanted a chance to study the list, and the list of nominees was laid on the table overnight. I understand now it is generally agreeable that these nominations be submitted for confirmation at this time. In order that there may be no necessity of printing them in the Executive Calendar, they must be confirmed at the same time they are presented. So I ask at this time unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business; that it consider the nominations I have spoken of, and following that consider a nomination in which I believe the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] is interested, and then return to legislative session.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator include in his unanimous-consent request that the Senate also act upon a nomination from New York.

Mr. HATCH. That, Mr. President, is the nomination of Andrew N. Overby, of New York, to be Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund.

Mr. WHITE. Yes; that is the nomination I have in mind. Will the Senator from South Dakota include that in his unanimous-consent request?

Mr. GURNEY. I understand that at this time the Senate can go into executive session only for a specific purpose and it is understood that after the nominations in question are acted upon, the Senate will return to legislative session.

Mr. WHITE. I think that is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. That is agreeable, Mr. President.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would the Senator have any objection if request were not made that the President be notified? That would give every Senator 2 days' time in which to investigate the matters acted upon by the Senate today.

Mr. GURNEY. Certainly. I shall withhold such request.

Mr. WHITE. I take it the suggestion made by the Senator from Texas applies only to the two nominations proposed to be included in the action taken today?

Mr. CONNALLY. No, as to the nominations which will be presented by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. WHITE. It does not include the other nominations?

Mr. CONNALLY. No. I do not make that request as to them.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, would the Senator from South Dakota object to including in his request consideration of an uncontested nomination which has been on the calendar for some time, which is that of Bryce R. Holt, to be United States attorney for the middle district of North Carolina? There is no objection to that nomination. It would not interfere with the Senator's request.

Mr. GURNEY. I do not know about that nomination. I do not know whether it would interfere with the request. It is not my responsibility.

Mr. HOEY. The nomination has been unanimously reported and has been on the calendar for several weeks, and there is no opposition to it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest that the Senator ask unanimous consent or move that the Senate go into executive session; that as a condition of that request or motion, action shall be confined only to those nominations that have been specified, the nominations in the Army and the Navy, the nomination for United States attorney in North Carolina, in which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY] is interested, the nomination in which the Senator from Montana is especially interested, and the nomination in which the Senator from New Mexico is interested.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably without amendment Executive N, Eightieth Congress, first session, a protocol, amending the agreements, conventions, and protocols on narcotic drugs, concluded at The Hague on January 23, 1912, at Geneva on February 11, and 19, 1925, and July 13, 1931, at Bangkok on November 27, 1931, and at Geneva on June 26, 1936, which was opened for signature at Lake Success, N. Y., on December 11, 1946, and which was signed on behalf of the United States of America on that date, and submitted a report (Ex. Rept. No. 5) thereon.

NOMINATIONS IN THE ARMY AND NAVY

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I now report from the Committee on the Armed Services certain nominations in the Army and Navy, including in the large group 9,212 majors and below for Regular Army commissions.

On Executive Slip No. 253 there are a certain number of transfers to the Regular Navy, without promotions, including lieutenant commanders, liuetenants, ensigns, and 10 warrant officers.

Also on Executive Slip No. 268 there are certain transfers to the Regular Navy, including 4 lieutenants, 63 ensigns, and 21 warrant officers.

On Executive Slip No. 266 there is the nomination of Col. Harris Jones to be the dean of the Academic Board of the Military Academy with the rank of brigadier general.

I submit all these nominations, and ask for their present consideration and confirmation. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations may be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I ask that the nominations which have just been confirmed in this large Army and Navy list be not again printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but that proper reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing the nominations be indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NOMINATIONS ABOVE THE RANK OF COLONEL IN THE ARMY

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, there are some other nominations of officers above the rank of colonel, which I now report from the Committee on Armed Services for the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be received and placed on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I now ask that the three other nominations included in the unanimous-consent request made by the Senator from South Dakota be stated, they being the nominations in which the Senator from Montana, the Senator from North Carolina, and the Senator from New Mexico are interested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be stated.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Bryce R. Holt to be United States attorney for the middle district of North Carolina.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, that nomination has the unanimous recommendation of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Andrew N. Overby, of New York, to be United States Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund for a term of 2 years and until his successor has been appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas M. Robinson to be a collector of internal revenue, district of Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask that the President be notified of the action of the Senate with respect to the nominations other than the military and naval nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be so notified.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed consideration of legislative business.

RECESS

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, June 12, 1947, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 11 (legislative day of April 21), 1947:

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

Andrew N. Overby to be United States Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund for a term of 2 years and until his successor has been appointed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Bryce R. Holt to be United States attorney for the middle district of North Carolina.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE

Thomas M. Robinson to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Montana.

IN THE ARMY

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

The nominations of Ernest C. Oeding and 9,211 other officers for appointment in the Regular Army of the United States, which were received by the Senate on May 29, 1947, and which were printed in full in the Senate proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date under the caption "Nominations," beginning with the name of Ernest C. Oeding appearing on page 6057, and ending with the name of Thomas R. Ostrom appearing on page 6091, were confirmed today.

DEAN OF THE ACADEMIC BOARD OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY WITH RANK OF BRIGADIER GENERAL IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Prof. (Col.) Harris Jones, United States Army.

IN THE NAVY

APPOINTMENTS IN THE UNITED STATES NAVY

The nominations of Louis J. Rauber and 103 other officers, which were received by the Senate on May 15, 1947, and which were printed in full in the Senate proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that date under the caption "Nominations," beginning with the name of Louis J. Rauber appearing on page 5346, were confirmed today.

The nominations of Freeman Cutter and 87 other officers, which were received by the Senate on May 26, 1947, and which were printed in full in the Senate proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that date under the caption "Nominations," beginning with the name of Freeman Cutter appearing on page 5805, were confirmed today.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 11, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Arthur J. Hagan, St. Cecelia's Church, Back Bay, Boston, Mass., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and Eternal God, our Creator and Redeemer, look upon us with compassion and harken to our prayers. Bless the President of these United States and the Members of the Congress with wisdom and understanding in all their actions. Endow them with clearness of vision, fortitude of purpose, justice and charity in their deliberations that they may under Thy inspiration and guidance bring about peace to a war-torn world. Inflame, O Lord, our reins and our hearts with the fire of the Holy Ghost that we may serve Thee with chaste minds, please Thee with clean hearts. We pray that the peoples of all nations will turn to Thee, their Creator and Redeemer, obeying Thy commandments and recognizing Thee as the beginning and the end of all things.

We pray that brotherly love will inflame the hearts of all men with the spirit of tolerance and understanding, and that Christian charity will permeate the atmosphere of the homes of our own country and the nations of the world. O God, from whom holy desires, right counsels, and just works proceed, grant unto Thy servants that peace which the world cannot give, that, both our hearts being disposed to keep Thy commandments and the fear of enemies being removed, our times by Thy protection may be peaceful.

Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SECOND URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

Mr. TABER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 3791) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 557), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RAYBURN reserved all points of order on the bill.

EMMET O'NEAL

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Members of the House join me in extending our congratulations and felicitations to the Honorable Emmet O'Neal, who on yesterday was confirmed by the Senate as Ambassador to the Philippines. Those of us who had the privilege and pleasure of serving in this body with Emmet O'Neal know him to be a man of great character and integrity and of unqualified ability. The Philippines are indeed fortunate to have such a man as he over there representing the United States of America. He served on the Committee on Appropriations, and as a member of that committee became familiar with the problems with which he will have to deal as the Ambassador to the Philippines. Those of us who served with him will always regard it as having been a high privilege.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. RAYBURN. Having known Emmet O'Neal for the many years he served in the House, and his high quality and splendid ability, I join with the gentleman from California in the complimentary things he has said about him. Not only is our country fortunate in having such a man to represent us in the Republic of the Philippines but the Filipinos themselves and their Government are very fortunate that they have among them such a representative of the United States as is Emmet O'Neal, knowing the kind of Ambassador he will make and friend he will be to them.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I thank the gentleman, and certainly agree with him.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PLOESER. I should like to add my little bit to this compliment to our distinguished former colleague. It was my pleasure to serve with him on the Committee on Appropriations. In my experience in the House I have known no man of finer integrity or greater industry, or one who had any more courage in doing the things he thought to be right, than Emmet O'Neal. I think it is a fine tribute to the diplomatic service that such a man can be brought into it. I wish him well, and I am sure the entire House of Representatives does likewise.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I want to add my word of commendation for the fine things Emmet O'Neal stood for and the work he did while he was in the House. I know all of his colleagues had the utmost confidence in him. As an ambassador of good will from this country to the Philippines, he will serve them and serve us, and I feel confident we will all be satisfied with the work he will do, because he is honest, honorable, conscientious, and hard working. He will do a good job for everybody, I am sure.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. I join my colleague in paying tribute to our former colleague from Kentucky, the Honorable Emmet O'Neal, and complimenting him on the fine recognition he has received in being appointed Ambassador to the Philippines. The President of the United States, I think, made a good selection in this appointment. I know from the splendid reputation he had here in the House, the character of man he showed us that he is, his integrity being unquestioned, that he will help to bring this young Republic to its place among the nations of the world. I congratulate him and the Nation. I am sure he will continue to render an outstanding service to his country, and I wish him success in this important call.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. It was my pleasure to serve with Emmet O'Neal from the day he entered the House. I have known him and his lovely family well. He has been an outstanding Member of this House. I know that in him our country will have an able, capable, and sincere representative. I join the gentleman from California in wishing him well. I know that under his initiative our friendship with the Filipinos will grow, and that they will continue to improve their lot and remain always loyal to and appreciative of our country for what we have done for them.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. ANDREWS of Alabama. I had the pleasure of serving on the Committee on Appropriations with the Honorable Emmet O'Neal. He was one of the first men I met when I came to Congress. I always valued his friendship. I concur in the fine things that have been said about him. He is a man of integrity, ability, and dignity. I feel sure he will bring great honor to this country in performing the duties of his new office.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. The gentleman states it well.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FORAND. I thank the gentleman from California for giving me this happy opportunity to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to Emmet O'Neal. I know of no man better qualified for the important post of United States Ambassador to the Philippines. The President of the United States is to be commended for having selected our former colleague for this high and difficult position. I am sure the people of the Philippines as well as the people of the United States will have reason to be proud of the service which our distinguished colleague will render.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, I want to add my tribute to what has been said about Emmet O'Neal. I suppose that I am the one Member of the House who has known Emmet O'Neal longer than anybody else. I have known him since 1907, when we went to college together and played on the same baseball team and had a lot of fun.

There could not be any better man appointed to this job, and I know that he will carry on in the finest traditions of America and in a way that we will be proud.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I am thoroughly in accord with the gentleman.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. I join my colleague from California in complimenting the former Representative from Kentucky, Mr. O'Neal. In the short time that I had the pleasure of knowing him in the House during the Seventy-ninth Congress I found him to be a man possessed of very fine qualities and especially of the temperament and characteristics that will make a good Ambassador for the United States to the Philippine Islands. My best wishes for good health and a successful administration goes with him.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I just want to say that Emmet O'Neal, when he served in the House, was very well thought of. I join with the other Members in congratulating him on his appointment.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield to the distinguished minority whip, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to join in the splendid and much-deserved tribute that the gentleman from California has paid to Hon. Emmet O'Neal, as well as joining with my colleagues.

Emmet O'Neal is a gentleman of understanding and of broadness of mind and character. He is going on an assignment which at this particular time requires a man of his fine, noble outlook on life. I know he will serve in the interests of our country, as well as look after the interests of the Philippines in their relationship to us in an outstanding manner. He will not only be an Ambassador in fact but an Ambassador of good will, which will cement the strong friendship that exists between the people of the United States and the people of the Philippine Islands for many, many generations to come.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I feel that the President could have appointed no better man for this difficult job.

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WORLEY. The fine things that have been said about my good friend and former colleague, Emmet O'Neal, here today are but an indication of the true affection which all Members of the House have for him. His long career as a Member was marked by constant fidelity to duty and an infinite understanding of the complicated processes of government. Although he was and is a Democrat by political faith, his first concern was not of politics, but what was best for the general welfare of the Nation.

There is no doubt that his long experience in government, his uncommon understanding of human nature, and his remarkable ability to make and keep friends will stand him in good stead in his new place.

The new Republic of the Philippines is fortunate in securing such an outstanding statesman and there is no doubt but what, as the distinguished minority whip from Massachusetts, Mr. McCORMACK, has so well said, he "will cement the strong friendship that exists between the people of the United States and the people of the Philippine Islands for many, many generations to come."

We wish him the very best.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, on Friday last our esteemed colleague from Wisconsin, JOHN BYRNES, delivered the keynote address at the national convention of Young Republicans at Milwaukee.

I ask unanimous consent that this addess may be extended in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Public Works, I ask unanimous consent that the committee may sit during general debate this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

HENRY WALLACE

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, Webster's dictionary defines treason as "the offense of attempting by overt acts to overthrow the government of the state to which the offender owes allegiance." Treason against the United States is defined by the Constitution—article III, section 3—to consist "only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving aid and comfort to them."

The Washington Post yesterday, on the front page, carried the following report of the International News Service:

NEWARK, N. J., June 9.—Henry A. Wallace said tonight that "the United States has become the center of world reaction" and "the common man more and more looks to Russia for ideas, help, and inspiration."

The former Cabinet member and Vice President told a Newark audience at a mass meeting sponsored by the New Jersey Independent Citizens League that "in nearly all the countries of the world we are more and more cooperating with the reactionaries against the common man."

Mr. Speaker, when will the Attorney General of the United States do his duty and indict this renegade who has disgraced his citizenship and return him to the oblivion from whence he came so that he can no longer function as the evil tool of those who would destroy America?

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, let it not be forgotten that this Henry Wallace is one of the heritages left us by the late Franklin D. Roosevelt.

MEAT INSPECTORS TO CONTINUE AS FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks, let me say first that, under the provisions of the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill requiring the meat-packing industry to pay the cost of Federal meat inspection, the veterinarians and others engaged in that service will continue to be Federal employees, paid by United States Treasury checks, with their civil-service status and retirement rights preserved intact.

It seems that some person or organization has been spreading an alarm among the employees of the Meat Inspection Service throughout the country that if this provision goes through they will thenceforth be working for the packers instead of for the Government and that they will lose all the rights above referred to. Whether such erroneous reports are being spread from ignorance or for mischievous purposes is not known. However, many Members of the House have received letters from their constituents in this service deploring what they have been led to believe is about to happen to them.

In the interest of the convenience of the Membership of the Congress, as well as of the composure of mind of the corps of splendid workers in this vital service, I append the letter of Mr. W. A. Jump, the Budget officer of the Department of Agriculture, which should clarify the matter.

The letter referred to, together with my letter to Mr. Jump, follow:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS
FOR DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1947.

Mr. WILLIAM A. JUMP,
Director, Budget and Finance,
Department of Agriculture,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JUMP: Word has reached me that some of the veterinarians and inspectors of the Meat Inspection Service have become alarmed over the possibility of their losing their existing status as classified civil service employees, together with loss of retirement rights, in the event the provision in the pending appropriation bill shall become law.

It was my understanding that when the Department, at the request of the committee, submitted language appropriate to the effectuation of the committee's purpose to place the cost of meat inspection upon the packing industry, the question of its effect upon the status of employees of the Meat Inspection Service was taken into consideration and it was determined that the existing status of such employees would be in no wise affected—that they will still be working for the Government and paid by United States Treasury check, that the Secretary of Agriculture will "run the show," in every respect as of now, and that the present civil-service classification, and retirement rights will continue without change.

Will you not please confirm the above impressions by letter?

Also, with a view to quieting the alarm which is apparently spreading among Meat Inspection Service employees, with the loss of efficiency certain to be incurred as the result of any such false rumors, will you not suggest to the chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry that he cause an official communication to be sent at once to all Meat Inspection Service employees, advising them of the facts in reference to the effect of the provision in the bill upon their status as classified, civil-service employees.

Thanking you, and with best personal wishes, I am

Very sincerely yours,
EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
Member of Congress, Chairman.

JUNE 10, 1947.

Hon. EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations, Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. DIRKSEN: In reply to your letter of June 5, with respect to the provision in the Agricultural appropriation bill for 1948, as passed by the House, under which, if enacted, the Department as of July 1, 1947, would be required to collect from the packing industry the cost of furnishing Federal meat inspection, your understanding is correct, that this provision would not change the existing appointment, grade and salary classification, retirement, or other employment status of the veterinarians, meat inspectors, or other employees in the Meat Inspection Service. They would continue to be classified civil-service employees of the Department, under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture. New employees would be appointed through civil-service channels, as at present. As stated in your letter, the meat inspection employees would continue to be paid by United States Treasury checks, their salaries being charged to the "meat inspection fund" which would be established in the United States Treasury, and which would be reimbursed, as provided in the House bill, by the funds collected from the industry.

When you requested that the language in question be drafted we appreciated the importance of this aspect of the matter and gave careful attention to it. Since the receipt of your letter, I have checked the foregoing understanding with Mr. T. Roy Reid, the Director of Personnel, Mr. Carroll Hunter, the Solicitor, and Dr. B. T. Simms, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, of the Department, and these officials agree that it is correct.

As requested, I have sent a copy of your letter of June 5, and of this reply, to the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, with the suggestion that he arrange to advise the employees of the Meat Inspection Service at once with respect to the foregoing matter.

Sincerely,

W. A. JUMP,
Budget Officer.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McGARVEY asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LANE asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a newspaper article and in the other an address.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked and was granted permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from last evening's Star.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD concerning the distinguished Ambassador O'Neal.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, just because a matter is popular is no reason that it is wrong. I agree that sometimes very unpopular matters are the soundest. I shall not hesitate, as a Member of this Congress, to espouse such unpopular matters, even if I stand alone. No; just because a matter is popular does not necessarily means that it is wrong. I realize it is popular at this time to advocate the betterment of our old-age pension program, but it also is sound that we should improve it. It is good horse sense that we should do it. Talk about building a bulwark against communism. In my judgment, there is no better way in the world to do it than to bring about a better old-age pension program. Why? Because the psychology of it is such that it will make the young folk, as well as the old folk, love the old red, white, and blue more, and love our way of life all the more. It will give a feeling of security to all. I hope and I pray that this session of Congress will not adjourn until we have brought about a program that will improve the present old-age pension set-up. I have a petition in my pocket, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] has one, respectfully requesting the Ways and Means Committee to bring out an open bill so that we can better improve our old-age pension program. I hope and trust you will help us with that.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

USE OF WAR PRISONERS AS SLAVES IN EUROPE

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therewith an article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, several times I have spoken about the situation concerning the use of war prisoners as slaves in European areas. The Secretary of State and the War Department cooperated, and I believe the United States has helped to bring practically every European nation under control with respect to that matter, with the exception of the Soviet Union. They refuse to give us any information concerning their prisoners and where they are held.

It has recently come to our attention that they have been holding not only prisoners of war whom they captured but also have actually taken men we released from captivity and have held them in prison camps under the harshest of conditions. Such prisoners have been subject to great indignities which have brought about their deaths. I think an investigation should be made of the matter immediately by our State Department. I am extending herewith a news article concerning the matter.

(The editorial referred to follows:)

GERMAN FREED BY UNITED STATES DIES A SLAVE IN RUSSIAN CAMP—COMRADE REVEALS STORY OF OFFICER'S SEIZURE

(By John Thompson)

FRANKFURT, GERMANY, June 9.—For many months reports from the Soviet zone have told how the Russians make no bones about seizing German war prisoners, discharged and freed by the Americans, and shipping them off to slave labor in the Soviet Union. Today The Tribune authenticated one of these reports.

Such a case was that of Siegfried Borgman, a German army officer. After serving his time in Camp Carson, Colo., Borgman was shipped back to Germany and discharged. Sent to Oranienburg, in the Soviet zone, to be freed so he could go home to Saxony, Borgman was nabbed by the Russians and taken to Russia to work in the new coal mines in the Caucasus. There he contracted pleurisy, on the starvation diet for prisoners, and died in March.

UNABLE TO FIND FAMILY

His story was related by a survivor of the prison mines, Helmut Mayer, 22, German noncommissioned officer who came home today. Mayer penniless after 2 years as a Russion prisoner, brought a check for $196 made out to Borgman, representing the money the United States paid him for his labor as a war prisoner. Before he died Borgman begged Mayer to take the check, find his family and tell the world how hundreds of Germans, released from imprisonment by the Americans, are now working as slaves for Russia.

Mayer has not yet been able to locate Borgman's survivors, but discharged a part of his promise by telling the Tribune of his own life as a Russian war prisoner for 2 years. Needless to say Helmut Mayer is a pseudonym.

ENTERED ARMY IN 1943

A premedical student, Helmut entered the Army in 1943, serving in Army hospitals on the Italian front, where he was wounded, and later on the Russian front, where he was captured shortly before the German capitulation.

Then he weighed 143 pounds. Last September when he was unable to work longer in the mines because of recurrent malaria and hunger edema he weighed 105 pounds. Now he is up to 121.

Twenty men to a tiny cubicle, Helmut lived with more than 1,000 other prisoners in a camp, guarded by regular soldiers, but under the jurisdiction of the MVD.

ROUSED AT 4:30 A. M.

At 4:30 o'clock every morning the men were roused, and by 6 or 7, depending on the distance away, they were at work in the mines after a breakfast of seven-tenths of a quart of lentil soup. At 6 p. m. they were back at camp for another bowl of soup, a few slices of watery bread, and, rarely, a chunk of meat and a pinch of sugar.

On rare occasions a prisoner might escape, and try for the Turkish border, although everyone knew it was well patrolled. The dead Germans were brought back to camp where their bullet riddled corpses were displayed for 2 days as an example.

GENERAL EXTENSION OF REMARKS ON THE APPOINTMENT OF THE NEW AMBASSADOR TO THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the new Ambassador to the Philippines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend remarks I expect to make in the Committee of the Whole today and to include therein a letter from the Ulen Realization Corp. to me, a letter from the same firm addressed to General Marshall, a letter from the J. G. White Engineering Co. addressed to Mr. Eugene R. Black, of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROHRBOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances, to include in one a letter and in the other an editorial.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that during consideration of the bill H. R. 3756 in the Committee of the Whole, the committee handling the bill may have permission to extend in the RECORD certain documentary material pertinent to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS TODAY

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture may sit during the sessions of the House today during general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES TO SIT DURING GENERAL DEBATE TODAY

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures may have permission to sit this afternoon during general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

WHAT IS A FILIBUSTER?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I noticed in the morning press that some of the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations charged certain Members of the House yesterday with a filibuster. That grieves some of us, not me, but some of the other Members have suggested that they were feeling badly about it.

I investigated, I looked up the meaning of filibuster. According to reliable authority a filibuster is a delaying action carried on by a minority to prevent the passage of legislation or the consideration of it. Yesterday I stood down here in the well when we voted on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] to strike out the enacting clause of the bill providing for the Voice of America program, and I noticed that by actual count there were 89 Republicans who voted with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] to strike out the enacting clause and only 57 who voted against him. So if there was a filibuster it was carried on by the majority, who brought in the Mundt bill, and that is impossible. There must be something wrong with the reporters or with those who charged there was a filibuster.

DIFFICULTIES HINDERING REDUCTION OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, a good many Members of Congress wonder why it is so difficult to reduce our regular appropriation bills when they come before us. I think the answer is provided this morning by an editorial which appeared in the Wall Street Journal which I wish to call to the attention of the House.

It reads as follows:

BEATING THE PARTY DRUMS

A reader of this newspaper in a town of the Middle West sends us a copy of a telegram which he says was signed by a prominent officer of the Democratic Party and was addressed to a local Democratic leader. The text of the telegram follows:

"House Agriculture appropriations bill accompanying H. R. 3601 eliminates all funds for price support of all agricultural products, makes 50-percent cut on all soil-conservation practices and school-lunch programs, and reduces appropriations for personnel to point where administration of conservation and school-lunch programs practically impossible. Crop insurance practically eliminated. The bill also entirely eliminates farm ownership loans to veterans and nonveterans. The production and subsistence appropriations necessary to establish veterans in farming are cut one-third, and tenant-loan insurance is cut 98 percent. All administration forces so badly reduced that farm program cannot function efficiently.

"Please immediately contact leading farmers in your county and cooperating with them send wires and petitions at once to Senator ALBEN BARKLEY and Congressman CLARENCE CANNON, Washington, D. C., urging restoration President's budget. Give publicity to this your local communities and advise Associated Press and United Press of your activities."

The reader who sent the above to this office makes this comment:

"Orders seem to be out to beat the drums. A few farmers were in the village because of rain but they did not seem to be interested in the telegram. Certainly our farmers do not need a Federal dole at this time."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN asked and was given permission to extend the remarks he intends to make in the Committee of the Whole today and include certain statistics on the power question.

FILIBUSTERS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] need not feel chagrined if he is accused of conducting a filibuster, one of the most effective operations ever indulged in by a minority to prevent a violation of their rights.

You will likely need the filibuster yourselves some day. The time may come when the ones who now imagine they are in the majority may find themselves in a hopeless minority indulging in a filibuster to save for the American people that great document which our forefathers fought to establish, the Constitution of the United States, which is today being attacked by the subversive elements throughout this Nation and by Communist fronts from one end of the country to the other.

I have no criticism of any man for having the courage to stand on the floor of either House of Congress and fight, or carry on a filibuster when it is to protect the rights of the American people.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is not a filibuster a violation of the rules of the House?

Mr. RANKIN. No; it is usually in the form of extended debate within the rules of the House or the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAINS (at the request of Mr. JONES of Alabama) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 235, making in order H. R. 3756 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3756) making appropriations for Government corporations and independent executive agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes, all points of order against the bill or any provisions contained therein are hereby waived.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, there are now 19 corporations wholly owned by the United States Government. These corporations are, by and large, free from control either by the President or by the Congress, and yet they have the authority to borrow up to $30,000,000,000 from the Treasury.

For a time, these corporations threatened to become an even greater force in our Government than Congress, their creator; and at times, they arrogantly snapped their fingers in the face of Congress. To curb this trend toward Government by Government-owned corporations, Congress passed the Government Corporation Control Act of the Seventy-ninth Congress.

It was the purpose of this law to bring Government corporations into conformity with the general financial program of the Government. Section 104 of that act established a systematic procedure whereby Congress would pass upon all budgets of the Government corporations as it now does for the regular agencies of the Government.

H. R. 3756 merely clarifies and restates the language of section 104 of the Government Corporation Control Act. This, and other language in the bill which would reduce Government expenditures, might be subject to a point of order under section 2 of rule 21 of the House. Thus, a single objection could prevent consideration of this bill which is expected to save the taxpayers many millions of dollars. To allow the bill to be considered on its own merits, the Committee on Rules has protected it from dilatory parliamentary technicalities by waiving points of order against it. We are all interested in reducing Government spending as expeditiously as possible, so I expect little opposition to this rule.

RULE WAIVES POINTS OF ORDER ON BILL REPORTED DAY BEFORE YESTERDAY

Mr. SABATH. Yes, Mr. Speaker, this rule waives points of order against a bill reported only day before yesterday. A rule was hastily granted yesterday, and it is under debate today.

In this instance we will have before us the bill providing appropriations for 33 government corporations and independent agencies. Certainly I have had no time to study this bill carefully, and I doubt if other Members have had.

It is my understanding that all of titles 2 and 3 may be construed as legislation involving 22 pages of limitations, restrictions and changes in existing law.

Mr. Speaker, I am for economy in Government as strongly as any Member of this House; but I cannot stomach this penny-wise, pound-foolish false economy with which these Republican appropriation bills are loaded. It seems to me that the Committee on Appropriations has acted in haste, before the appropriate legislative committees could bring out their bills, to effect what members of this one committee have deemed to be necessary changes in existing law.

There are now pending before legislative committees bills that affect the administration, authority, and functions of 13 of the 33 agencies and Government corporations for which appropriations are provided in this bill. Is all orderly procedure in this House to be abandoned in favor of fiat legislation by a single committee?

EVERY EFFORT TO HELP BUILD HOMES FOR VETERANS AND OTHER AMERICAN CITIZENS SCUTTLED

Every effort to provide decent homes for veterans and other American citizens has been scuttled. The National Housing Agency appropriation has been cut approximately $12,000,000 of the entire reduction of fourteen million from last year's funds.

The Committee on Appropriations states in its report that it is "convinced that the program of trying to expedite the construction of residential housing has not been successful."

But I fail to note in the report any honest reasons given for that failure. I know the answer, and so do all of you who will face the facts. It is due to the secret conspiracy between real-estate operators and speculators, builders, contractors, suppliers, and the unconscionable profiteers in human need who torpedoed the administration's carefully planned program for allocating materials to the categories of greatest urgency, who withheld material from the legal market, who clandestinely supplied the illegal black market, who catered to high profits and selfish interests, diverted critical materials and labor to luxury construction, or who sat on their profits and refused to produce until their demands were satisfied, all with the active and enthusiastic help and applause of the Republican Party.

It has been a triumph of private greed over human need.

The reduction in appropriations for the housing agencies means that the program for expediting housing for veterans will be utterly and entirely abandoned, and so-called private enterprise will be free to gouge the veteran to the extent that he will be in debt the rest of his life for mediocre living accommodations.

PROMISES TO VETERANS UNFULFILLED

The responsibility for this situation rests squarely on the Republican Party, and the people know it.

Where now are those fine promises made so often and so loudly by the swarm of lobbyists who infested the Capital last year, glibly promising that if only all price ceilings and material controls were removed private free enterprise would provide millions of homes for Americans? They are gone—gone with the wind and with other like promises.

Wilson Wyatt was doing a job; but the vast and smooth-working real-estate lobby scuttled his program—and then scuttled out of sight.

HOUSING AGENCIES HAVE DONE SPLENDID JOB

In the face of many difficulties and many obstacles, it is my belief that the housing agencies have done a splendid job. All over the land many wonderful public-housing projects will long be monuments to the imagination and daring and zeal of a distinguished group of administrators.

Last Sunday I was gratified to find in the Washington Post a long and laudatory article describing Greenbelt, and reviewing the turbulent history of that highly successful Government housing project on the tenth anniversary of its founding. I suppose there are many lobbyists in the galleries, and many Members on the floor, who would even like to see that project abandoned and its 8,000 contented residents thrown to the mercy of the real-estate wolves.

It is true that at times political pressure, or the pressure of the war agencies, or merely occasional unfortunate poor judgment, brought public housing into existence in bad locations. The impressive thing is that a start has been made toward providing decent shelter for that teeming one-third of a Nation, ill-fed, ill-clothed, ill-housed. The housing agencies, in peace and in war, proved that the job can be done. The lobby has won this fight; but they should realize that unless they can make good on their promises the program will start over again, bigger and better and with unanimous public support. After all, the real-estate men are glad enough to have a helping hand from the Government for themselves through FHA; they will have to realize that the people deserve a break, too.

Now, by this drastic slash, you have removed every vestige of hope that the Government might directly aid in building homes for the deserving men who served their country so well, and now are being so ill-served here.

BUSINESS LOBBY PROMISED EVERYTHING, DELIVERED NOTHING BUT HIGHER AND HIGHER PRICES

I do not know what other reductions have been made by this bill. It was reported only day before yesterday, as I have said, and the rule was granted yesterday in extreme haste. These few remarks are based only on my hasty reading of the report, which came to me this morning. I do not see how any arguments for economy can justify the unjustifiable and unwarranted cuts in the housing program. I believe that under the President's repeated proposals for permanent reorganization there could have been added efficiency and better results.

It is unfortunate that too often we listen to the reports and persuasions of paid lobbyists and propagandists on legislation, and not to the people.

The same thing happened last year, especially just preceding the 1946 elections, when the National Association of Manufacturers, the American Meat Institute, the National Association of Retail Dry Goods Dealers, and all their accomplices in the murder of OPA promised everything if only the price controls were removed.

They have delivered nothing except higher and higher and ever higher prices, and higher and higher profits for themselves.

They said that with the "freeing" of private enterprise shortages would disappear, the black market would disappear, high prices would disappear.

Well, price ceilings were removed. The black market disappeared because black-market prices were legalized, or made even higher. Shortages have not yet disappeared; but it will not be long now before the customers disappear, and profits with them.

The big business lobbies seem to have the ear of the Republicans, and the Republicans follow that siren song blindly. The only comfort is that in another 18 months they too will disappear.

MEAT PRICES UP AGAIN

I charged at that time that all these promises were only falsehoods and lies intended to fool the people.

As you all remember, as soon as controls were taken off the prices of almost everything doubled, especially on meats, and I do not know of the price of a single article which is lower now than it was a year ago.

Now all the newspapers in the country, even those who were most vicious in the fight against OPA, have carried stories announcing that the prices of meats will advance from 8 to 10 cents a pound again.

I do not believe the American people can ever be fooled again by the false promises of big business.

There is no question in my mind but that OPA served the country well. Prices were held down all through the war. No one went hungry. Of course, housewives did not get all the meat they wanted because the packers went on strike until they could get their pound of flesh. They got what they wanted; the price control law was repealed; and immediately cattle and hogs began their stampede to the markets while the cold-storage plants were emptied, but of course at high prices, and in the face of warning after warning that the supplies of livestock were being exhausted and that the country would face future shortages and still higher prices. Those warnings now are coming true.

Therefore, I hope henceforth any assurances or pledges or promises on the part of these lobbyists that infest the House and infest Washington will be disregarded and that we will act according to our consciences and the wishes of our people back home.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman, as usual, for a question, please.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman is very, very gracious about it.

Mr. SABATH. I always try to be.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, you always are. You always succeed. There is no question about that. What I am wondering about is this meat and the shipping of it abroad by the Federal Government and whether that has anything to do with the price.

Mr. SABATH. It surely does not and cannot tend to reduce the prices.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I would not think so.

Mr. SABATH. I concede that. But the amount that is being shipped abroad is only a small quantity compared to what we are consuming in this country. I hope our country will be able to consume even greater quantities of meat, provided these hold-up people, the packers, will not mulct the American people as they are doing now. If prices were in reach of the average pocketbook we could all buy more meat and other farm products. I wish you would read their financial reports and see the amount of money that is being made by these packers. The largest ones are in my city. Some of the people who live in my district are employed by the packing industry; but, unfortunately, while these packing houses were controlled by pretty honest men like Armour and Swift in years gone by, now they are controlled by Wall Street and they are obliged to take their orders from the Wall Street financiers who now control not only the packing industry but nearly every segment of American private enterprise, and who are interested only in profits, profits, profits, and ignore fair play and the rights and interest of the American people.

Only last night I heard on the American Forum of the Air the Senator from Wyoming, Mr. O'MAHONEY, and our genial friend the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] reciting facts and figures to the NAM spokesman and their Wall Street lawyer on the vast power of the combinations, the huge percentage of industry owned by just a few big corporations as compared to the little fellow, and how the little fellow is being driven out of business by these avaricious financiers.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do you think we should have continued the OPA indefinitely?

Mr. SABATH. No; not indefinitely.

Mr. HOFFMAN. About how long?

Mr. SABATH. Until conditions were adjusted so that the people would have sufficient food and so that the general civilian production would have been sufficient for everyone, and so that there could be genuine competition that would control prices. As it is now, we have repealed the Price Control Act at least 9 months or perhaps a year before it should have been repealed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I want to get your estimate. I value the gentleman's opinion very highly. I want to get your opinion as to the months or years that you think we should have continued the OPA.

Mr. SABATH. I thank the gentleman for the compliment. I repeat what I just said, that I think it should have been continued for another 9 months or 12 months, and by that time I believe conditions would have been adjusted so that the public would not be mulcted by these willful profiteers.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You said that the packers in Chicago, as I understood you, were controlled by Wall Street?

Mr. SABATH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Now, Wall Street is controlled by the international bankers, is it not?

Mr. SABATH. That expression "international bankers" has been used before.

Mr. HOFFMAN. So have the words "Wall Street."

Mr. SABATH. And, also, the House of Morgan and a few others.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And Kuhn, Loeb & Co.?

Mr. SABATH. And Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; yes, sir. I agree with you. Moreover, they are closely affiliated with British finance, as is the Morgan firm, and with other European financiers as well.

Mr. Speaker, I have said what was in my mind in paying my respects to these profiteers and gougers and with reference to the high cost of living that they have brought about and also concerning the promises that you gentlemen on the other side made to the American people when you pledged that you would reduce the cost of living and reduce the outrageous prices saddled on the backs of the people by the trusts and combines which, as I said before, seem to control your actions, with your help.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may require to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. ST. GEORGE], and I ask unanimous consent that she be allowed to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, if our Government is to survive it can only do so through the devotion and sacrifice of our people. By the same token if it is destroyed, we, ourselves, will be responsible for our own downfall.

This Republic can only survive and progress if we have an enlightened and educated electorate, who know and understand the mechanics of Government in a free Republic.

In my home county of Orange, we have a youth in Government project, sponsored by the YMCA and under the supervision of the three district-school superintendents, high-school principals, and county officials.

Under this program the high school pupils organize into two political parties, patterned on our two major parties. They hold conventions, file petitions, write party platforms and then go out and campaign for all the State and county offices.

After they have been duly elected, they each serve one day in the office of the official that they represent.

This year for the first time the two parties nominated candidates for Congress and the young man who won the election is here with me today, also the defeated candidate and two school mates.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, such a project should be inaugurated in every school in our country so that our young people, when they come of age, will be ready to assume their obligations and responsibilities.

I am proud that the young people of Orange County, N. Y., are being given the opportunity of understanding how their Government functions and what their duties as citizens are.

As long as the youth of our Nation knows and accepts its responsibility, so long freedom will endure.

The day that they are too lazy and ignorant to guard and know their rights, that day liberty will perish from the earth.

As far as liberty is concerned, we, today, are the light of the world.

We must make that light shine before men.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER].

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in opposition to the rule which has been proposed today, waiving points of order on this bill. I am vigorously opposed to this rule. What I have to say I wish understood as no personal reflection upon the members of the Rules Committee or of the Appropriations Committee, because I have a high regard for the members of both of those committees. But, Mr.

Speaker, the procedure we are following today in waiving points of order on this bill and approving legislation on an appropriation bill, is soon going to lead to a situation where we might as well abolish all of the other committees of the House of Representatives except the Appropriations Committee.

The dangerous encroachment of assuming the jurisdiction of legislative committees not only in this bill but in other bills we have considered recently, but particularly in this bill, is the worst possible sort of legislative policy. I only received a copy of the bill and the report of the committee on yesterday. It would be humanly impossible within that short length of time to consider all of the matters of legislation on this appropriation bill and be in a position to discuss them intelligently. They deal with and amend laws which have long legislative histories and upon which legislative committees have spent months of consideration.

I do, however, want to call the attention of the House to two particular items which are typical of the kind of legislation we are getting into appropriation bills and thereby depriving the regularly constituted committees of the House of their jurisdiction to consider changes in basic laws that this Congress has passed.

Mr. Speaker, throughout the years the Tennessee Valley Authority has rendered a great service to the Nation both in times of war and in times of peace. It is now so far as its major projects are concerned almost completed. Over a period of years the investment in power facilities of the Tennessee Valley Authority is going to be paid back to the Federal Government and then for hundreds, five hundred, or a thousand years—because these dams that are built there are part of the mountains in which they are located and they will last forever—then for all those years that great investment will belong to the people of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate before the Reorganization Act was passed considered many, many times the amortization, or section 26, of the TVA Act relative to the use of its receipts and the paying back to the United States Treasury. They have worked out various compromises which were satisfactory to the people of the Valley, to the TVA, and to the Members of Congress. Only last year, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments of the House in passing the bill having to do with financial control of governmental corporations, Public Law 248, went into this whole problem and worked out a satisfactory solution. This was also approved by the Senate Banking Committee and approved by the Senate.

But we are now legislating without the Tennessee Valley Authority having an opportunity to be heard; without any representatives of the 7,000,000 people who live in the Tennessee Valley and the 750,000 customers it serves having an opportunity to present their side of the argument. Without any opportunity of the people who are eventually going to pay back this investment in power having an opportunity to appear and present their side of the case.

We have in this bill, beginning on page 7, legislation that is ill-considered, legislation on an appropriation bill that may do much harm to TVA.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. In a moment I will yield.

Legislation that has not been given thorough consideration, has not been thought through; and I am very much afraid of the disastrous results it may have.

I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PLOESER. Certainly no one denies the gentleman the right of expressing his opinion, and my personal regard for the gentleman leads me to believe that his opinion is most interesting; but in observing what the gentleman has said in the statements he has made to the effect that we have done this without any consultation with the Tennessee Valley Authority, the gentleman is assuming something for himself that the committee did not dare to assume for themselves. This, of course, has not been done without consideration, without a year's study, or without consultation with the Tennessee Valley Authority. So if the gentleman proceeds, please get all of the facts so that his statement may be more accurate.

Mr. KEFAUVER. May I ask the gentleman if any of the officials of the Tennessee Valley Authority had any opportunity of testifying before his committee in connection with this amendment of section 26. Did any of the customers or citizens of the Valley have a chance to be heard?

Mr. PLOESER. The gentleman knows, of course, the custom of the House not to hold open hearings before appropriations subcommittees.

Mr. KEFAUVER. That is what I am objecting to.

Mr. PLOESER. There are representatives of the State of Tennessee here in this House. They represent the people or it is presumed that they do.

Mr. KEFAUVER. My point is, Mr. Speaker, that we have large distribution systems in the Tennessee Valley which have cost the cities, the municipalities and the people hundreds of millions of dollars. They entered into contracts with the TVA based upon the fact that section 26 was in the law, that it would give TVA flexibility in operation, and those contractors, obligating the people, the municipalities, and the cities, ought to have the opportunity to come to the Congress itself, to a legislative committee, and present their side of the problem before such a basic change is made in the charter of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Of course we have Representatives in Congress from Tennessee, capable Representatives but they cannot presume to speak for the people of the Valley when there has been no opportunity of expression from the people.

Mr. RAINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. RAINS. The gentleman from Missouri a moment ago stated that the rule in the Appropriations Committee was that there could not be open hearings. Is that not all the better argument why this legislation and this particular bill should have been aired at open hearings?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Exactly.

Mr. RAINS. Before the Public Lands Committee, for instance.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I may say to the gentleman that four legislative committees of the Congress, the Military Affairs Committee of the House, the Agriculture and Forestry Committee of the Senate, the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments of the House, and the Banking Committee of the Senate, have worked this problem out after long and tedious hearings at which everybody had opportunity to be heard and where representatives of the people, the distributors, the Tennessee Valley Authority, and everybody who had an interest in this great project, could come and tell the members of those committees what they thought about it. They reached a satisfactory solution. Now here in executive session without any representative of the distribution systems or the people, they make this radical change, and in looking over the hearings questions on the amortization provision were not asked of any witness of the TVA when they appeared before the committee. There is no discussion on this legislation in this appropriation bill in the hearings that I have been able to find, even before the Committee on Appropriations.

There have been no hearings on the legislative provisions of the bill. A few casual references were made in the hearings to an amortization scheme which has since been abandoned, but there was no opportunity on the part of TVA to explain to the committee the effect that the bill would have upon its operations. Even more important, the people of the region have had no opportunity to present their point of view and to assert their rights not to be prevented by arbitrary fiscal requirements from securing adequate electric service. This is not the way to write sound legislation, and it is therefore no surprise that the legislative provisions of the bill are unsound. It discriminates without basis or justification against a great region of the country, which Congress has pledged itself to help rather than to hurt.

The TVA Act authorized long-term contracts with municipalities and cooperatives, and over 140 such contracts have been signed in reliance on the provisions of section 26, which were designed to provide the means for assurance of adequate electric service. Seven hundred and fifty thousand consumers are entirely dependent for this necessity of modern life upon the ability of TVA to carry out its commitments. Neither the consumers nor the municipalities or cooperatives which serve them would ever have allowed their welfare to become dependent upon TVA power supply were it not for the provisions which Congress established to permit TVA to fulfill its obligations. A change in the rules of the game at this time would be a breach of the trust reposed in Congress by the people of the Tennessee Valley.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. I am sure the gentleman does not want the RECORD to show that the Tennessee Valley Authority did not appear before this subcommittee on several occasions. Mr. Clapp, the Administrator, appeared.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Oh, yes. I have read the hearings, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. JENSEN. We had full and complete hearings with the official body which governs TVA. If the gentleman as a citizen of the Tennessee Valley does not want a few men to run that great TVA, then I would suggest the gentleman introduce legislation to abolish TVA.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I do not see how the remarks of the gentleman are pertinent.

Mr. JENSEN. They certainly are pertinent. The Administrator speaks for TVA, lock, stock, and barrel. If the gentleman does not like that empire within an empire, it is his duty to introduce legislation to abolish that empire which is run by a dictator.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, we in the Tennessee Valley are entirely satisfied and very happy with the management of the Tennesse Valley Authority. What we do object to is that the people, the representatives of TVA and anyone else who is interested have not had an opportunity to be heard on this language which hits at the very heart of the charter of the Tennessee Valley.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I cannot yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JENSEN. I do not blame the gentleman.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I must finish my remarks.

Mr. RANKIN. I was going to say that, instead of being a dictator there, the Tennessee Valley Authority is simply carrying out the law passed by the Congress.

Mr. KEFAUVER. That is right. Let me point to another thing, and I do not know whether many of you have had a chance to read this section or not. Section 104 of this act, page 24, assumes a large part of the authority of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

If section 307 is enacted in the form reported by the committee, it would reconstitute section 104 of the Government Corporation Control Act so as to make that section substantially the same in language and in effect as committee print No. 2 of the original Whittington bill, H. R. 2177, issued June 6, 1945, by the House Committee on Expenditures. The original Whittington bill was not only unalterably opposed by TVA and all those dependent on the TVA power system but was affirmatively rejected by the House committee itself, which reported out H. R. 3660, the present law, as a substitute measure.

The amendment to section 104 proposed by the committee specifically contemplates the enactment of annual legislation limiting the use of corporate funds or other financial resources as Congress may determine, and provides that section 26 of the TVA act shall not be affected thereby except as specified in such legislation. Enactment of such an amendment to section 104 would be akin to an outright repeal of section 26. At the present time TVA is authorized to utilize the revenues from its power system for the operation and maintenance of that system and for the provision of necessary direct power facilities. All of the power commitments made by it in the Tennessee Valley have been predicated on the possession of that authority and on the ability to plan the wisest and best use of its power revenues for power system purposes. If this amendment is made effective, however, TVA and all of its municipal, cooperative, industrial, and other power customers would have to assume that as of July 1 of any year it might be deprived not only of the revenues needed for the provision or replacement of necessary capital items but of those required to meet production costs, pay rolls, and other operating expenses. In ultimate result, therefore, the amended section is open to the same objection as the original Whittington bill, which was so emphatically rejected, namely, that it serves to subject TVA, as well as other Government corporations, to the uncertainties of an annual charter which may or may not be renewed each year in whole or in part in the discretion of a congressional appropriations committee.

By the TVA Act and the various amendments which have been added to it from time to time, Congress has carefully and particularly enunciated the policies by which it is to be guided and the specific powers and duties which it is to exercise and discharge. By that act TVA was given a mandate to accomplish certain specific results in a specified geographical area as part of a long-range continuous program. It has been directed to construct a series of multiple-purpose dams and reservoirs on the Tennessee River and its tributaries, to control the destructive floods on that river system, to provide a 9-foot navigable channel on the Tennessee from Knoxville to its mouth, to generate electric power at those projects, to market that power by means of transmission lines and substations to be constructed and maintained by TVA, and to contract with communities within transmission distance to supply their power requirements over long-term periods. As a part of this interrelated and integrated program Congress expressly authorized the acquisition by TVA of the privately owned generating and transmission properties previously serving large parts of the area.

In imposing this mandate upon TVA as a regional corporation, Congress has made a commitment to the people of the area that TVA's essential function of power supply will continue to be performed efficiently and without interruption. In accepting and executing this congressional mandate, TVA, under long-term contracts entered into over its 14 years of existence as specifically contemplated by the TVA Act, is committed to supply the full power requirements of 139 municipal and cooperative distribution systems, serving 750,000 consumers in an area of 80,000 square miles.

No one will deny that TVA has performed an excellent job in meeting its obligations under the above-mentioned power contracts. But neither will anyone claim that it could have performed such a first-rate job had it not been for the provisions of section 26 of the TVA Act. And this section, it must be remembered, does not confer any superpowers or authority upon that agency. On the contrary, it does nothing more than permit TVA to apply its operating revenues to the operation of its dams and reservoirs, to the operation and maintenance of its power system, and to the replacement of old and the provision of new direct power facilities necessary for the conduct of its power business. This authority is far less than that conferred as a matter of course upon the board of directors of any privately owned and operated utility system in the country. In delegating that authority to TVA, Congress has given it no more than the bare minimum of discretion essential to the efficient operation of a power business.

The Federal Government has invested several hundred million dollars in the multiple-purpose dams which have been build by TVA. The power from those dams is not only being absorbed by 750,000 consumers over an 80,000-square-mile area, but that area is dependent upon the continued and uninterrupted flow of that power for its very life. TVA power operations are now ably and efficiently conducted, and the amount of the Government investment in TVA power facilities is being and will continue to be returned to the Federal Treasury at a rapid rate. All this has been made possible by the relationships which have thus far existed between TVA and the distributors of TVA power, which have presented a splendid example of cooperation on the part of Federal and local agencies. That fine relationship can continue only so long as TVA's power customers are able to retain their confidence in the ability of TVA to carry out its power-supply commitments. It is perfectly apparent that no city in the TVA area can afford to let itself become dependent for electricity on a source of supply on which it cannot rely from year to year. If will destroy existing confidence in the Congress insists on taking action which continued ability of TVA to meet the continuing needs of its power customers, those customers will inevitably seek ways and means of securing another source of power. It is not too much to say that the success or failure of the TVA program hinges on the provisions of this section 307. To enact that section into law would be to cancel out the work of 14 years.

Repeated efforts have been made to deprive TVA of the power to use its revenues to meet the essential requirements of its power system operations as authorized by section 26 of the TVA Act. Each time such proposals have been carefully considered by the Congress, and rejected. Each time Congress has concluded that it is not equipped to determine the operating needs of a power system, the operating expenses of which may vary as much as $15,000,000 between a wet and dry year. Each time Congress has determined that it should not reduce the already irreducible minimum of managerial discretion which it had delegated to the TVA Board of Directors. Each time Congress recognized that it could not wisely decide where or when or what kind of a new substation or transmission line might be needed. Each time Congress concluded that questions in this category do not present the smallest kind of a political or policy issue, but involve pure management decisions for which it should hold the TVA Board of Directors wholly responsible.

When the Corporation Control Act was enacted by the Seventy-ninth Congress, section 26 of the TVA Act was again carefully appraised and its essential character reaffirmed; and section 104 of the Control Act was so worded as to provide that none of its provisions should be construed as affecting the provisions of said section 26 in any way.

In reporting out the Corporation Control Act as it was finally enacted into law, the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, using identical language, had the following to say concerning section 104:

> To insure that such legislation would not be used as a means of destroying any Government corporation or preventing it from carrying out and financing its authorized activities, this section includes a specific provision that it shall not be construed as preventing wholly owned Government corporations from carrying out and financing their activities as authorized by existing law.
> The section also provides specifically that no provision thereof shall be construed as affecting in any way the provisions of section 26 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, as amended. This language preserves intact the right of the Tennessee Valley Authority to utilize its receipts in carrying out certain operations and business activities as authorized under present law. The budget program of the Authority would be prepared and submitted on that basis and the Congress in passing on such program would take no action based on this bill which would interfere with such right or set a limitation on the use of such receipts for those purposes authorized under said section 26. The committee feels that the present arrangement established by law as to the use of the Authority's receipts is working satisfactorily and that if any occasion should arise hereafter for changing such arrangement, this should be done by an amendment to the substantive law.

Here we have two legislative committees of the Congress warning that the removal of the safeguards written into the original section 104 would constitute that section a means of destroying any Government corporation or preventing it from carrying out and financing its authorized activities. Here we have two legislative committees of the Congress stating that the present arrangement established by law as to the use of the Authority's receipts is working satisfactorily and that if any occasion should arise hereafter for changing such arrangements, this should be done by an amendment to the substantive law. In other words, two committees of this Congress to which have been entrusted the responsibility of passing upon the enactment and modification of substantive legislation have warned against any direct or indirect change in the provisions of section 26 of the TWA Act except after full hearings before a legislative committee, which after all is the regular and accepted procedure which Congress by its rules has provided for the accomplishment of such a result. This appropriation bill flies in the face of that warning in many particulars. It does so particularly and most flagrantly in proposing section 307. Certainly this Congress, having enacted important and essential legislation only after the most careful consideration, and after full hearings and debates, and after rejecting numerous similar proposals as unwise and ill-considered, does not intend to gamble the essential results and objectives of that legislation upon recommendations of an appropriations subcommittee, reached on a speculative basis with no hearings whatsoever.

But what happens here, gentlemen? In section 104, the members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments may not have had time to look it over, but the Committee on Appropriations is assuming jurisdiction of the Expenditures Committee by saying that in the future you do not even have to have a closed rule in order to consider any limitation or any arrangement about the retirement of debt or the amortization of power projects; that is, that they shall be germane. They are transferring the jurisdiction of the legislative committee by section 104 directly to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for me to see how the Committee on Appropriations and the Congress can justify, under the watchword of economy, the reduction made in the budget recommendation for fertilizer experimentation and munitions developments at the TVA, Muscle Shoals, Ala., plant. Heretofore, in other appropriation bills we have recognized, as we should, the urgent necessity for research for the military, looking, of course, to the defense of our country. Recognizing, as all of us must, that the first line of defense of this Nation in every war has been the fertility of the soil of the farms of America, how can we now become so short-sighted in the name of economy as to support a reduction in the funds necessary to carry on the experimentation work needed for the preservation and further development of the farm lands of our Nation? This attitude and the action of the Appropriations Committee in reducing the budget estimate for this work is certainly penny-wise and pound-foolish.

It is needless for me to remind the Members of Congress who represent agricultural districts that there is a great hue and cry among farmers today not only for more fertilizer with which to enrich their soil, but better fertilizer. The Muscle Shoals TVA fertilizer plant is dedicated to the development and test of new fertilizer products, in an effort to see whether farmers having materials in concentrated form can work out a program of farm management that will make soil fertility and conservation pay in the farm enterprise. This very worthwhile program is carried on by the Tennessee Valley Authority in test-farm demonstrations in conjunction with, and with the assistance of, county agents of the State extension service.

Mr. Gordon Clapp, Director of the TVA, in his testimony before the subcommittee, states that—

> We use about one-fifth of the plant capacity for distribution through the test demonstration farm program which has been set up in cooperation with the extension services of the States, principally in the valley, but also in a number of States outside the Tennessee Valley.

It has been said that civilization itself depends upon the 6 inches of topsoil on the face of the earth. We have made great progress along the road to soil conservation in this country; however, I am one who believes that we have only begun a fight which must be carried on if we are to preserve the productive capacity of the farms of America. We not only must prevent the erosion of our farm land, but we must find support, and advocate every possible means for the enrichment of our soil. Where, then, Mr. Speaker, is the wisdom of hampering a program of research, in any particular, dedicated to the urgent necessity of finding means for increasing the productivity of the farms of America?

There was a time when the demand for commercial fertilizers was in a large measure localized in the Southern and Southeastern States. This situation no longer exists. The Department of Agriculture states that the average annual consumption of fertilizer in 1935–39 was 7,537,631 tons. There has been an increase in consumption of commercial fertilizer of approximately 1,000,000 tons each year from 1940, when the consumption was 8,249,256 tons. It is interesting to note that the notable increase in consumption has been in the North Central and Western States, where it is two to three times the prewar level. From these figures it is evident that the need and demand for more and better commercial fertilizer is of interest, not only to the farmers of the South, but to those of the Middle West and the far West, as well.

The Department of Agriculture in August 1944, recommended that Government ammonia plants, with a rated capacity of 300,000 tons of nitrogen be converted for the production of nitrate fertilizer and ammonia derivatives as soon as the war conditions would permit. By August 1946, plans for the use of these individual plants were well worked out. The TVA plant at Muscle Shoals, Ala., was supplying a large part of this very needed ingredient for commercial fertilizer. Last spring, in an effort to meet the ever-increasing demand for commercial fertilizer, on the part of the farmers of this country, and at the insistence of the Members of Congress, the Department of Agriculture stated that full cooperation was being given to Government agencies, meaning the TVA, and private producers to obtain the maximum production of fertilizer, and to expand facilities where feasible. And yet, here we are today, in the face of an extreme shortage, failing to recognize the need for further development of research in the commercial-fertilizer field, curtailing the essential expenditures necessary of the one plant which is charged with the duty, by law, of giving to the farmers of this country, the type and kind of fertilizer their soils need.

Mr. SABATH. I have no further requests for time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3756) making appropriations for Government corporations and independent executive agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 2 hours, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3756, with Mr. ANDERSON of California in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, at the outset of my remarks I wish to pay high compliment to the members of this subcommittee on Government Corporations of the Committee on Appropriations, of which I have the honor of being chairman. Last year for the first time this bill was considered by the Congress. The bill, which is known as the Government Corporations Control Act, was passed in 1945. Hence it was necessary for the Congress to name this committee to look into the fiscal functions of these many Government corporations.

Until this year there were only five members of this subcommittee, the able gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON], the able gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], the able gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], the minority members of the committee, with whom it is a pleasure to work, and my right-hand man, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER], a most able and conscientious public servant, and myself. Due to the fact that there was a lot of work to be done in relation to the duties of this committee, at the outset of this Congress I requested that the subcommittee be increased to seven members. We now have with us on the committee our able colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. GEORGE SCHWABE, and our very able colleague, the gentleman from New York, Mr. FRED COUDERT, both of whom have been most diligent and cooperative and have rendered valuable service.

We also have with us this year as clerk of the committee, Mr. Claude Hobbs. Claude has done a great job for the committee. Ken Sprangle also helped us considerably as clerk, although he is clerk of other committees. Then we had our very efficient Chief Clerk, Mr. George Harvey, who is always available on call.

I have the highest regard for the staff which assisted us in this very important job of looking into the Government corporations which have borrowing and lending authority of our taxpayers' dollars in the amount of over $30,000,000,000 and all the power that goes with it over our economy.

We asked for a rule on this bill because we are asking for some additional authority and jurisdiction which we feel Congress needs and must have in order properly to look into the operations and the functions of this widespread program of lending and spending of this huge sum of the people's money, any time we, the people's representatives, see fit to do so. We have asked in this bill for authority to look into not only their administrative functions but also to keep close supervision over their lending and spending authority.

When the Government Control Act was originally passed, the report submitted to the Congress by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments stated that all Government corporations, both fully and partially owned, were to be brought under the jurisdiction of the Congress. But through some fast footwork by spokesmen of some of the partially owned Government corporations they were not included in the bill. So we are asking that several of the partially owned Government corporations also be brought under the jurisdiction of Congress. I cannot imagine that anyone who believes in representative government and in the Constitution of the United States feels that the representatives of the people should not have the authority to look into all the functions of government.

We have in this bill for administrative expenses for these departments $41,649,700, which was a reduction from the budget request of $14,847,550. For other items, including some administrative expenses, as well as construction for the TVA and some other items as set out in the report which I will insert in the RECORD following my remarks, we have allowed $36,097,580, which is $14,039,920 below the budget estimate, a 28-percent reduction in the budget request.

We have purposely made this report quite lengthy. You will note the report consists of 52 pages. Our reason for making the report quite complete and comprehensive is because there are so many things the American people and the Members of Congress would like to know about concerning the activities of these Government agencies, and we felt it right and proper to explain quite in detail in this report just when these corporations were organized; the kind of charter they have; when the charter expires, and also the amount of their borrowing authority, and many other pertinent facts.

Mr. Chairman, I could at this time go through this bill and talk about many things and thus take up the time of the House. But I presume that most of the items will be discussed later. There are some things I wish to call to the attention of the Members of the House and the American people at this time. Those of you who were present heard the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], for whom I have the highest regard, but who, like the rest of us, occasionally is wrong. This is one case where the gentleman from Tennessee is wrong. I know he will tell you that he and I have been in close agreement on a number of bills and that we do respect each other. But the gentleman just stood on this floor and said:

> Why were not many people of the Tennessee Valley and the officials of the municipalities, and so forth, permitted to come before the committee and testify and give their ideas about this, that, and the other?

When the TVA was organized a board of three members was appointed, with almost complete autocratic power over the business of the TVA. I am sure no one will disagree with me on that. They appointed a chairman of that board. The present Chairman is Mr. Gordon Clapp, and I want to say at this time that Mr. Clapp made as good a presentation as any witness that I have heard before a committee of Congress, of which I am or have been a member. He gave testimony willingly and knew what he was talking about; Gordon Clapp knows that I do not approve an authority in any river valley in the United States, because I do not approve of empires within empires, especially in our United States of America. Gordon Clapp knows, as I told the board while in Knoxville last year visiting that great project, that I had gone along with TVA, as most of the other Members of Congress have, and that I did not propose to introduce a bill to abolish TVA, but that I certainly would fight to the last ounce of my strength to stop another authority such as TVA being instituted on any other river valley of America.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman know of another river valley in America which does not have an authority that has developed its water power, promoted navigation, and controlled its floods? If so, I should like to have the gentleman point it out.

Mr. JENSEN. May I remind the gentleman that no river valley in America has had almost $900,000,000 of the American people's money to do that kind of work. You can do a lot of things when you have almost unlimited funds to spend at will.

Mr. RANKIN. I can show you other streams on which hundreds of millions have been spent and they still have not controlled their floods. It will be the high dams on the Tennessee that will prevent a disastrous flood on the lower Mississippi this year, if we escape one.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. PLOESER. I think it is a little early to observe about the control of floods, because the Tennessee Valley Authority themselves say they have not done that. They are seeking new funds and new dams in the hope they will get them under control. So I would not take all the credit for complete control of floods until it is an accomplished fact.

Mr. RANKIN. I did not say complete control; but they are moving in that direction, and they have prevented one or two disastrous overflows on the lower Mississippi, and saved the city of Cairo at one time.

Mr. JENSEN. Some folks who live in the Tennessee Valley say "Yes, of course they have stopped floods because they have inundated most of the land with their lakes that flooded before TVA." Of course, that surely is an exaggeration. The gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Mississippi, who are members of this committee, have counseled with us, yes, compromised with us, until we are in almost complete agreement with the provisions in this bill. I wish to say the feeling of this committee is that the Tennessee Valley has done a good job in the commercial fertilizer field and that it is a national benefit.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. JENNINGS. As the Representative in Congress from the Second District of Tennessee, which is in the heart of this development, I wish to commend the gentleman from Iowa for his fair attitude in this matter and the provisions in this bill with respect to the repayment of the money which the Government used for this power development into the Treasury over a period of 40 years. In my opinion this will be easily met. It is really putting into law what has heretofore been the practice of the Tennessee Valley Authority. I am glad to see that this matter is not before the House in any controversial aspect but that it is the result of a compromise. I believe that as time goes on there will be increased production of power that will augment the income of this authority and that within the period fixed by the gentleman's committee all of this money will be paid back into the Federal Treasury so far as the cost of the power facilities are involved.

Mr. JENSEN. I appreciate the statement by my very fine friend and able colleague from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The gentleman has stated that it is contemplated that the money is to be amortized over a period of 40 years, yet the report on page 12 states that it is contemplated that the Congress approving the Authority's budget each year will specify the amount to be returned to the Treasury during the ensuing year. So as I understand it this does not settle anything on a fixed basis. It says 40 years, but according to the report and according to the bill itself, the Appropriations Committee is given the power to take such an amount of money that they could make them pay it back in 20 or 25 years.

Mr. JENSEN. If the gentleman would read the bill and the report he would not make that statement. The language is very plain and specific. For the edification of the gentleman and for the information of the House I should like to read the language.

Mr. KEFAUVER. May I ask the gentleman the meaning of the language of the third sentence on page 12 reading:

> It is contemplated that the Congress in approving the Authority's budget each year will specify the amount to be returned to the Treasury during the ensuing year.

It does not mean 40 percent. Really, it does not mean anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the Congress of the United States up to the fiscal year 1948 has appropriated the sum of $371,870,759 for power facilities for the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Up to that time the Tennessee Valley had paid back in two payments from power receipts and also in six payments on the bonds which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation holds against them, an amount of $23,631,519, all of which can be found on page 11 of the report, leaving a balance of $348,239,240. That is the amount we have specified in this bill for TVA to pay back into the Treasury of the United States over a period of 40 years under a plan which will not adversely affect the activities of the TVA.

We say that each year they shall pay back 40 percent of their net income on power revenues, which means 40 percent of their net power earnings; that they shall pay in each 10-year period 25 percent of $348,239,240, and that each Congress shall justify an amount which they feel TVA should pay that year. That is because of the fact that dry years may reduce their revenues. We are giving them latitude in which to operate.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I am sure the gentleman and the members of the committee have the best of intentions about the matter. The gentleman said they would have to pay back 40 percent. I call the gentleman's attention to the language in line 9, page 8, that they shall pay back not less than 40 percent. That leaves it in the discretion of the Appropriations Committee to make them pay back 90 or 95 percent.

Mr. JENSEN. If the gentleman has no confidence in the members of the committee or Members of Congress, then I would say he has reason to get up on the floor and argue that way.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I am not expressing any lack of confidence in the members of the committee but I just wondered if that "less than" was an inadvertence, whether it should be in the bill. Other committees may come along years afterward that I would not have confidence in.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. ALBERT GORE, is a member of this committee. I am sure you will accept his judgment.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I would take Mr. GORE's word for any matter, as I would the word of the gentleman from Iowa, for whom I have the very highest respect, as well as the other gentlemen of the committee.

Mr. JENSEN. I can assure the gentleman that this is not snap judgment, that we sat for weeks and weeks working out what we thought was a fair, just, and reasonable pay-back schedule for TVA and on other items in this bill.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Is it the idea of the gentleman that they pay back 40 percent of their net each year, or not less than 40 percent, and it may be considerably over 40 percent as decided upon by the committee from year to year? I want to know which it is.

Mr. PLOESER. If there is no objection I would like to have the privilege of answering that. We had a choice of working out some flexible amortization plan, or we had the choice of a rigid, fixed amortization plan whereby they would pay a fixed charge for 40 years until they amortized the investment. I personaly prefer that type of amortization that can be fixed on operations. I think the plan as proposed is a simple and in some manner an ingenious plan. It divides the 40 years into four periods of 10 years each in which the Tennessee Valley Authority is to seek in that period to make at least a 25-percent amortization. Now, because of climatic conditions, having a great bearing on the operation of these dams and power projects, it was thought that we should make it sufficiently flexible so that there would not be a fixed charge over and above the $2,500,000 bond retirement each year. The way it works, the net income, or what some might call net profits, after all expenses are paid and after the $2,500,000 on bond retirement is paid, that net income is divided, 60 percent retained in the operating fund of the TVA and 40 percent returned to the Treasury. Forty percent is the minimum. There may be years in which this operating income is of sufficient size that it would be easy for TVA to make a greater payment the 40-year amortization program. This is a plan that has been agreed upon by everyone. If the gentleman has anything better that he cares to offer, certainly we are open minded and will be glad to consider it, even though it is a little late in the day.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I may say to the gentleman that I had no opportunity to appear before the subcommittee.

Mr. PLOESER. Neither did the gentleman ask for an opportunity.

Mr. KEFAUVER. You had no open hearings, and we had no way of knowing that you were writing an amendment to section 26. The people of my section would like to have come.

Mr. PLOESER. If the gentleman will read the report on the appropriation bill for 1947, there he will observe that this committee recommended a 40-year amortization program last year and expressed its intent to devise such a program, and all we have done this year is work out that on which we gave you 12 months' notice. I have never seen, in the years I have served on the Committee on Appropriations, any Member of the House denied a hearing. You had 12 months' notice. The hearings proceeded as they normally do, season after season, and you were most welcome. We did not go around and solicit you individually because, very frankly, we are not looking for any more work than we have.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I will say to the gentleman that the House has always refused to put in legislation on section 26 in appropriation bills, and it has always fought down the Senate amendments that were put in by that body from time to time. Certainly, I had no knowledge that they expected to legislate on section 26 in this appropriation bill, and I also know that a good many people down in the valley have been somewhat concerned about not having had a chance to present their point of view about the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] said he had no idea that we were going to operate on section 26. If this operation on section 26 of TVA disturbs the gentleman, I might suggest that the gentleman keep his ears and eyes wide open, because from now on this Congress will operate on a lot of things that need operating on in Government. We are going to cut out a lot of cancers so that they do not destroy the body politic of America. So, I would suggest that the gentleman watch very closely the operations which we are going to perform on the rot that has grown on our body politic in America during the past 14 or 15 years.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. On page 11 of the committee report it appears that there is $371,000,000 invested in the TVA, and it shows $23,631,000 representing bonds, the security for a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Is the $23,631,000 all that interest is being paid on out of this investment for TVA?

Mr. JENSEN. The original bond issue which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation holds draws interest and will continue to draw interest until paid out.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. The bonds held by both the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Treasury, in the total amount of $65,000,000, bear interest.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Is the balance of $348,000,000 represented by direct appropriations to the TVA, on which no interest is paid?

Mr. GORE. The $348,000,000 which is required to be paid under the amortization provisions of this bill is composed of three parts, one, appropriated funds; two, a transfer of facilities, the Muscle Shoals facility, for instance, built in World War I; and, three, the bonds which are now held by the Treasury. Those held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have already been retired.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. In reference to the alleged amortization over a period of 40 years for the TVA, in reality, whether you call it amortization or not, it represents a payment of interest over a 40-year period of 2½ percent annually on the investment, and the United States Treasury is never reimbursed for the capital amount.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. While this bill provides for those payments during the first 40 years, it follows that since this Authority is owned by the Federal Government its earnings thereafter will also belong to the Federal Government.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Then, if this is to take the place of an interest charge of 2½ percent on the capital investment in the TVA, why do you not just say that forever, ad infinitum, you will pay 2½ percent, rather than limit it to 40 years and leave the impression there will be no interest charge after 40 years?

Mr. WHITTEN. I do not know whether there is any particular point in saying what will happen at the end of 40 years, insofar as most of us here today are concerned, but it is a fact that under the basic law the Authority belongs to the Federal Government, and it will belong to it at the end of 40 years. Whatever it may take in belongs to the Federal Government. The then Congress can do what it may see fit to do with regard to the annual income. In other words, it just is not broken down as to what is interest and what is capital stock. We just say, frankly, that they can make this repayment over 40 years, and it is termed here the payment of the original investment. You could term it interest if you saw fit. The point of it is that such of their funds as can be repaid and keep the authority running on a proper basis should be repaid and will be repaid under this. You can extend it beyond the 40 years when that time comes or you can do it here. I do not see any particular reason for interfering with that. The point I call attention to is that this is different from any other project in the country. Once the original investment is liquidated or amortized, this does not belong to someone else, it still belongs to the Federal Government and the income from it belongs to the Federal Government.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. The point I wanted to make was that when the United States makes an investment in a wealth-producing project such as TVA, if we collect only what amounts to 2½ percent interest, and that is what these payments are over a period of 40 years—it would be 2½ percent of the investment per year to make it pay out in 40 years—we are not collecting the amount of the capital investment, and we are never getting repaid the actual capital amount, because for every dollar the United States has invested it must pay its bondholders the long-term rate of interest, which is about 2½ percent.

It seems to me there is no point in the fact that when the 40 years is up the facility still belongs to the Federal Government because all you have paid in on this project is the 2½ percent interest on the Government investment.

Mr. JENSEN. I can really understand your concern about this matter, but I think it is well that the Congress be informed as to the difference between this project and other federally financed electric power generating projects.

For the past 10 or 12 years the Congress of the United States has been appropriating all these millions of dollars to the TVA. Congress said in effect, "Here it is. Take it. Go down there and spend it at will." And so they did. They never were given even the slightest idea that they would have to pay back a penny of interest or a penny of principal. Further, I believe everyone who has investigated and made some study of the activities of the TVA will tell you that they have done a good job in the development of greatly needed commercial fertilizer. That is a national benefit. It benefits every person in America directly and indirectly. At the present time it is benefiting the starving people in many foreign lands where it is being shipped and used. So TVA is in a different category. You cannot treat this program as you treat other hydroelectric projects. It makes no difference in the final analysis whether these payments by TVA as provided in this bill are called interest payments or payments on principal.

The fact is that in this bill we are collecting as much each year and will continue to collect as much each year under the repayment program as the TVA can safely pay and still operate in the best possible manner.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I notice in the TVA audit on page 3 the auditors state that an enterprise is self-supporting only when the revenues are at least equal to the sum of the costs properly chargeable against its revenues.

Some of these costs would be interest charges, amortization of the initial cost, the replacements and depreciation. I congratulate the committee on getting this money back into the Treasury.

Mr. JENSEN. I am sure of that.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. The TVA has been heralded as a yardstick for power rates throughout the United States. Now it develops, if, as the gentleman says, that this is the most that the TVA can bear, then some of these ordinary costs and fixed charges are not included in the proposed pay-back schedule over a 50-year period, such as amortization of initial cost, which would be 1.3 percent; replacements, 1.18 percent; making a total over-all of 4.71 percent, just for amortization and interest alone. So that if it is understood that some of these fixed charges are out of rates and are not returned to the Treasury, then the theory that the TVA is a yardstick is exploded. That is the point I wanted to make, that some of these charges at least are not being provided for in the legislative provision, and the TVA should not be held as a yardstick. As a matter of fact, then, this payment over a 40-year period is at the rate of 2½ percent a year and is really only an interest charge. That would be my understanding of the way this legislative provision attempts to dispose of the property.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr PLOESER. Let me observe again, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] also observed, there is flexibility in the program which gives the Appropriations Committee a new look each year. It is their purpose to take care of these things. If the surplus should be such that they could afford to amortize more rapidly, that is fine. They would not object.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. GORE. The distinguished and able gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES], for whom I have the highest regard and warmest personal affection, as he knows, does not quite have the correct picture with respect to the financial structure. The gentleman will understand that the total earnings of the TVA is considerably in excess of that part which has been returned to the Treasury, either in return of appropriated funds or in return of bonds. That part which has not been returned to the Treasury has been used to make additions to and improvements in the facilities which are owned by the Government, and the fact is that the real value of the Tennessee Valley power program as a going concern has been financed 24 percent by earnings. If the gentleman wants to regard that 24 percent of the present value of a going utility as interest, he may do so. If he wants to regard it as return on investment, he may do so. Likewise, that which goes back to the Treasury.

As it is set up under the TVA Act and as the committee has conceived this action, the principal investment which the Government has made through appropriations and transfers and bonds will be returned in principal. The remainder, which does not come back in the form of net income every year to the Treasury will be used in the improvement of and in the addition of transformers, generators, and transmission lines, to the end that when the principal is returned to the Government, the people of the United States will own a going concern, free of debt, far larger than it is now. So, over-all, the profits which TVA has earned can be regarded both as principal and interest and will be shown to be a sound and lucrative return on the investment. They thereby increase the earning capacity of the TVA. Mind you, all of the net income of the TVA is the property of the Government. That net income has shown a very rapid increase. From 1940 to 1948, the accumulated earnings amounted to $116,000,000. Now, if the gentleman wants to regard that as interest, then it is a very attractive and lucrative rate of interest.

Mr. JENSEN. We are getting a 40 percent interest rate out of their net power profits.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. WHITTEN. I would like to point out that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES], in his statement took it for granted that the maximum payment would be 40 percent of net income. I should like to point out that for the next year itself, of the estimated $20,000,000, ten and one-half million will be repaid. So that the repayment in 40 years is the minimum. Actually, however, they will pay in less than that, but will pay in accordance with their ability to pay. The coming year they will pay $10,500,000 out of an income of $20,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield that I may answer?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. The point I am trying to make is that in this legislation you have not attempted to set up a formula for the pay-out of TVA; that this is a compromise figure for getting all you feel that the traffic will bear from the income of TVA and has no relationship to a fixed formula for pay-out schedules for capital investment in TVA.

Mr. WHITTEN. I might say there has been no effort to work out a formula such as the gentleman might indicate. I say this is all they can pay to keep it a good business, that is, to develop this into a going concern as it should be with increases to the capital plant, that this is good business to repay it. So the committee thought on the basis set out in the bill; but this figure was not arrived at with the thought in mind thereby to fix a standard such as the gentleman mentioned.

Mr. RANKIN and Mr. D'EWART rose.

Mr. JENSEN. Please permit me to yield to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. D'EWART], who has been seeking recognition for some time.

Mr. D'EWART. My question is regarding the 60 percent that is retained by TVA. I understand under this act TVA will retain 60 percent of $348,000,000 to be used as they see fit.

Mr. JENSEN. No, no; not 60 percent of their revenues from power.

Mr. D'EWART. As I understand it they will retain 60 percent of the net to do with as they see fit.

Mr. JENSEN. No; not exactly as they see fit.

Mr. D'EWART. My question is, Is it reappropriated?

Mr. JENSEN. They have to come before the Congress each year to get permission to spend for capital improvement on power facilites if this bill becomes law.

Mr. D'EWART. Will it be reappropriated?

Mr. JENSEN. Yes; their unexpended balance will be reappropriated each year. I may say that I really believe the American people would be quite happy if they knew that all the dollars this Congress has appropriated in all the past years for Federal hydroelectric power plants could be returned to the Treasury of the United States in 40 years under the same plan as we have worked out for TVA. I believe the American people would be pretty happy if they knew they could expect that from every federally financed power producing plant in the country.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to my distinguished friend.

Mr. PLOESER. Even in the light of the gentleman's current statement I think it is proper to say to the gentleman from Ohio that it was not the intent of the subcommittee to define this method which we applied to TVA as a yardstick for any other project.

Mr. JENSEN. No; most definitely not.

Mr. PLOESER. That was not our intent and we would not ask the approval of the House of this bill making it a yardstick.

The committee in drafting the repayments to the general fund of the Treasury from TVA power income did not attempt to set a formula for a pay-out schedule or to establish minimum annual financial requirements for the TVA. We merely attempted to write legislation to capture as much money as we thought TVA could safely pay into the Treasury under their present rate structure. Whether you call this repayment of money over a period of 40 years amor-tization or interest at 2½ percent on the capital investment over a 40 year period is immaterial. The point is that we collect the money. We did not mean to absolve the TVA from setting up fixed charges for their annual operation, such as depreciation, a fund for replacements or interest, as such, separately. All we did was to collect the most money we could by compromise with all the members of the committee without disposing of any of these questions. This action of the committee is not to be regarded as a formula of minimum requirements for Government-owned power projects. This situation is unique—therefore we cannot consider this formula a yardstick.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Ohio spoke of the rate of 2½ percent as interest. We lent money for rural electrification at 2 percent and it is understood—it was testified before the committee, I believe—that the Government got its money at 1½ percent. So that at even the figure given by the gentleman from Ohio it would amortize the amount of the interest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes and I hesitate to consume so much time but I do want to clear up this question, if possible.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman from Iowa has referred to how happy our people would be if they knew certain things. The gentleman has also referred to net power revenues. Let me ask him this simple question: The people in my district would be interested to know whether or not on the proportion of taxes which they pay into the Federal Treasury or the bonds which they buy from the Federal Treasury with which to finance these power projects the money they put up will be refunded plus, say, 2 or 3 percent interest on the amount advanced.

Mr. JENSEN. Under the Reclamation Bureau's plan of repayment, the money going into power facilities is reimbursable, with 3 percent interest; but I may say that about 3 years ago a solicitor of the Interior Department decided it was not necessary to send the interest to the Treasury of the United States, but to just keep it and use it at will. That is the main fight we have had in the Interior Department Appropriations Committee. That interest component should be sent into the Treasury of the United States, according to law. I may say that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. ROCKWELL] has introduced legislation which spells out a directive that this interest component shall be sent to the Treasury of the United States. That bill, however, calls for a rate of interest of 2 percent.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Unless the Government receives back the principal advanced plus interest on the principal which must be gathered together under the rate-making formula which is applied in the sale of the power sold to the people in the particular locality, then the other taxpayers of the Nation do not receive just payment by reason of the fact that they subsidize the electric power rates received by those who are buying from power-producing machinery of the Government?

Mr. JENSEN. I am sure the gentleman has heard me make almost that identical speech at least a dozen times on the floor of this House, and I am very glad to have it reexpressed by my very able colleague from Michigan who is so exceptionally well versed on financial matters of every nature. I am happy that he has spoken.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the Appropriations Committee moving in the direction of accomplishing that very thing, along with the other legislative committees of the House?

Mr. JENSEN. Indeed it is. The Government lent the TVA all of these millions of dollars and said: "We will just let you have it." There was not a word said about paying it back. But in my studied opinion the TVA is in a different category than other projects of similar nature where a pay-out plan was agreed to before the appropriations were made.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That means the taxpayers and the bondholders in the gentleman's district and in the other 434 districts represented in this House will be treated fairly, that it is not socially right or morally just or right from any other standpoint to force one group of taxpayers to subsidize the rate of another group.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, now I will talk about Federal housing, which is a very live question at the present time. Last year when the committee was under Democratic leadership a request was made for a full investigation of the Federal housing program from top to bottom. Mr. Robert E. Lee, an FBI agent, was selected to head this investigation. Every member of the Subcommittee on Government Corporations signed the request for this investigation. It started last July and was finished some 6 months later.

The report was then submitted to the committee shortly before we sat this year and I may say it is a most startling and critical report of many of the activities of the Federal Public Housing Authority in a great many instances. In fact, to such an extent that time will not permit me to go into the matter at this time. However, at a later time soon I shall ask that a comprehensive summary of the report by the investigating staff be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so that all may read. A separate volume of the committee's hearings on all Federal housing is now available in which you find much information contained in the report mentioned.

I gave a release to the newspapers today in which I pointed out a number of things in the investigator's report:

[From the office of Hon. BEN F. JENSEN, chairman of the Subcommittee on Government Operations of the House Appropriations Committee, room 256, Old House Office Building]

A comprehensive, confidential report made for the House Appropriations Committee on Public Housing as administered by the Federal Public Housing Authority made public today shows conclusively that that agency has failed miserably to carry out the provisions of the United States Housing Act.

The report is the result of a 6 months' investigation for the Appropriations Committee, headed by Robert E. Lee, who was loaned to the committee by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

High lighting the report's conclusions was the startling fact that more than 31 percent of all tenants of public housing were totally ineligible for such public assistance, yet the FPHA had taken virtually no action to rectify this situation.

The FPHA also failed to dispose of wartime housing and has instead inaugurated a socialized scheme of disposition to mutual organizations which completely ignore any veterans' preference, unless the veteran was already an occupant, according to the report. As the result of these findings, it was necessary for the Banking and Currency Committee of the House to bring out legislation which has already been introduced and about to come to the floor, which will give the veterans preference for purchase as well as rental.

In addition the FPHA has adopted a policy providing that local authorities build up unreasonable cash reserves at the expense of the Federal subsidy for alleged vacancy and collection losses and other contingencies that may or not materialize. This amount approximates $40,000,000.

Under the United States Housing Act, for every dwelling unit built, there should be one slum dwelling unit eliminated. This has been almost completely ignored and the slums have continued to develop and grow, the report says.

In the face of the terrific housing shortage in the United States, 8,110 new prefabricated housing units were sold to France by the FPHA. This was early in January 1946, just at a time when veterans were returning by the millions and were desperately in need of houses.

Storerooms of FPHA were found to be replete with propaganda material to influence passage of public housing legislation. This, despite the fact that section 201 of title 18, United States Code specifically provides criminal penalties for the use of appropriated funds to influence legislation.

The FPHA records were in such "atrocious condition" that a nationally known accounting firm (Price, Waterhouse & Co.) were retained by the General Accounting Office to make an audit, declined to do so after inspecting the books on the ground that the fiscal facts could not be ascertained from their records. One of the FPHA auditors, in describing the condition of the records, said:

"A great many deficiencies existed in accounts for all programs which were not being corrected because of improper staffing. Postings for current fiscal year have been very incomplete, and in many instances are so inadequate that the accounts failed to convey proper meaning * * * the lack of adequate fund controls has been the cause of a large number of errors and is, in the opinion of the auditors, responsible for the lack of internal control of rental-office fiscal activity.

"The auditors are cognizant of the serious nature of these criticisms regarding the work of the finance and accounts division as reported herein, but when it is realized that virtually every account in the general ledger is either in error, inaccurate, or incomplete, and that after several months of operation the cause of the condition has not been remedied or eliminated, there is no alternative as to the conclusion that may be reached," the auditor declared.

The report also criticized what it termed "extravagant personnel policies resulting in overstaffing and duplication of effort." It urged the closing of all regional offices because they were "wet nursing" the local owners who had adequately demonstrated their ability to carry out the objectives of the act without any Federal paternalism.

The veterans' emergency housing program is a dismal failure by reason of delays, cutbacks, and high costs, necessitating the FPHA coming back to Congress requesting additional funds to carry out commitments to local groups, the report declared. The figures presented have indicated that some 20 percent of appropriated funds are absorbed in administrative costs, while 36 percent of its administration personnel drew over $4,500 a year or more in salaries.

The report continued: "Administrative controls in central and regional offices are practically nil concerning such items as travel, overtime, communications, etc. There has been definite indication that the Agency appears partial and paternal to the United Public Workers of America (CIO)."

This report was ordered by the Seventy-ninth Congress as a result of the dissatisfaction of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee on Government corporations with the justifications presented last year. At that time, of course, the Democrats controlled the committee.

In one instance, in the San Francisco area, allegations were made that building materials were fraudulently given to private builders by FPHA employees; that political contributions were solicited and obtained by FPHA; that regional offices gave lucrative contracts for servicing surplus material to individuals who had no facilities and took no responsibility.

In San Diego, employees of the FPHA use their official position to intimidate the local housing authorities into giving preferred treatment to CIO strikers, the report charged. In one instance, an FPHA desk made available to Mr. Lee was found crammed with copies of the People's World, the local Communist paper.

Many FPHA bulletin boards carry propaganda urging pressure on Congress on behalf of the CIO unions and castigating Congress for its attempts to shackle labor. In some instances, Communists, including one Communist newspaper editor, were found housed in public housing despite the fact that they were not veterans.

Commenting on this situation, the Honorable Charles K. Fletcher, Republican, of California, whose San Diego district embraces the largest directly operated Government housing program, commented on the House floor yesterday: "This is only a small sample of what the Lee report discloses regarding the San Diego area. Get it and read what it says about your congressional district. You will be much surprised and disgusted with the administration of the FPHA. Perhaps then you will know why the House Banking and Currency Committee is reporting a bill to the floor asking us to take the disposal of war housing from the hands of FPHA."

The Honorable BEN F. JENSEN, chairman of the subcommittee on Government corporations of the Appropriations Committee also made a short speech on the floor yesterday calling attention to the fact that this report would be brought to the attention of Congress during discussion of the bill.

We will be fair with every Government agency, but things have been going on that smell mighty bad, and it is the people's business to know and they shall know. I am sure that my good friend and member on this committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] will have something to say about this when he takes the floor today. Is is simply a matter that has to be straightened out sooner or later, and we aim to straighten it out as quickly as we can. In this bill we have made an attempt to straighten out a lot of the difficulties by certain language in the bill and by reducing their requests for funds in order to remove from the pay rolls some fellows who sit around and have so much time to think up a lot of stuff, bad for America.

We have the Inland Waterways Corporation which was instituted shortly after the First World War. It operates from New Orleans up the Mississippi and up the Missouri. It has been losing money most every year since its inception, and so the question was whether we should liquidate it or not. I am happy to say that the committee was very fortunate in having at their service the Small Business Committee of the House, which made a very complete survey and investigation of the Inland Waterways Corporation. They made a report to the committee which contained certain recommendations, and those recommendations and that report will be placed in the RECORD at this point. The committee has adopted the recommendations made in this report which will appear in the RECORD of this date. I want to compliment the Small Business Committee of the House for the good job they did. The chairman of that committee I am pleased to say is our able colleague, a member of this committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER].

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. I did not realize that the gentleman was going to pass by the housing issue so quickly.

Mr. JENSEN. Oh, we will talk about that some more this afternoon. I am sure, but I hope the gentleman will read the hearings also.

Mr. JAVITS. May I bring the gentleman back to that point and ask this question? Did the committee consider two points; one, whether these housing agencies could be equipped to do something about getting more housing, especially for veterans and, second, whether the way in which their appropriations are handled will equip them better toward that end or will it deprive them of any ability to do more than they are doing now about it?

Mr. JENSEN. I might also say that the American people have invested in all kinds of Federal housing schemes over $14,000,000,000 in the past 15 years in addition to the millions spent for administration, yet we have the housing shortage with us today, and it will continue to be with us until the shackles are taken completely off private producers and home builders.

GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. JENSEN, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Appropriations submits the following report in explanation of the accompanying bill making appropriations for Government corporations and certain independent agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes.

ESTIMATES

The budget estimates of appropriations for the objects embraced by the bill are contained in the President's budget message, pages 957–1024, 1093–1190, 1235–1347, and House Documents 219, 228, and 237.

SCOPE OF THE BILL

The Government Corporations Control Act of December 6, 1945, which requires that all wholly owned Government corporations submit annual budgets to the Congress, specifies by name such corporations as were in existence at the time that act became law on December 6, 1945.

The accompanying bill presents to the House the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations, respecting the budgets submitted for the fiscal year 1948, in accordance with the provisions of such act, with certain exceptions.

The budget submitted for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its subsidiaries has not been acted upon inasmuch as the act authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation expires on June 30, and legislation to extend its life is now pending in Congress. Pending determinations on this legislation, it is not possible to estimate accurately the requirements of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This budget will be considered in a subsequent bill to be reported, after the future of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been determined.

The Commodity Credit Corporation and the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation are in the Department of Agriculture and so directly related to the programs of the Department that they have been included in the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill, already passed by the House.

In order to indicate the current status of wholly owned Government corporations with regard to their legal lives as corporate entities and as agencies or instrumentalities of the United States, the following summary tabulation is presented. Those corporations already liquidated are not included in the tabulation. As of the latest date for which available, information has been included regarding pending legislation affecting the corporations with respect to their legal lives. Inasmuch as many of the numerous bills introduced in Congress contain incidental references which may affect Government corporations, the information regarding pending legislation in the table should not be considered as necessarily complete.

[1] These corporations were created under the laws of a State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or under the laws of the District of Columbia, and under sec. 304 (b) of the Government Corporation Control Act, 59 Stat. 602, their status as agencies of the United States expires June 30, 1948, and they are directed to be dissolved.

[2] As an agency of the United States (continued to June 30, 1947, by Public Law 30, approved Apr. 12, 1945, 59 Stat. 30). Delaware charter provides for perpetual existence.

[3] In process of liquidating.

[4] Constituted an independent agency with indefinite life by the act of July 31, 1945, Public Law 173 (59 Stat. 526).

[5] Formerly U. S. Housing Authority. Executive Order No. 9070, Feb. 24, 1942, created the National Housing Agency and consolidated therein the U. S. Housing Authority, to be administered as the Federal Public Housing Authority under the direction and supervision of the National Housing Administrator. Said order is to be in force and effect so long as title I of the First War Powers Act remains in force.

[6] Now in dissolution.

[7] Public Law 656, approved Aug. 7, 1946 (60 Stat. 901) provides for the termination of this Corporation on June 30, 1947.

[8] Certificate of dissolution filed with the secretary of state ,State of Delaware, on date indicated.

The following statement sets forth the net withdrawals from the Treasury, in round figures, of all the wholly owned Government corporations, including Commodity Credit Corporation and Federal Crop Insurance, but excepting the Reconstructing Finance Corporation, as submitted in the budget for 1948 and subsequently amended:

The committee desires to call attention to the total borrowing authority of wholly owned Government corporations, which as of March 31, 1947, was slightly in excess of $30,000,000,000. The amount of outstanding obligations as of the same date, approximately $11,500,000,000, reduces to about eighteen and a half billion the balance of such borrowing authority outstanding as of March 31. It should be noted that the $18,500,000,000 outstanding is subject to possible reduction of approximately $5,700,000,000, as indicated in the footnotes appended to the statement which follows.

While much of the authority of Government corporations to borrow funds is subject to certain restrictions, such as borrowing for specific purposes only, the total amount is staggering nevertheless. The committee feels that the Congress should maintain a vigilant scrutiny over this aspect of our fiscal structure in connection with its watch over the public debt of the Nation and in connection with its consideration of matters related to our national finances in general.

The following tablation was supplied by the United States Treasury Department on the basis of the latest information obtained from the individual Government corporations:

[1] Does not reflect reductions in borrowing authority of an unspecified amount recommended by the President.
[2] In addition, the Corporation has authority to issue bonds for refunding of outstanding bonds. The authority of the HOLC to make new loans expired June 12, 1936.
[3] No amount stated.
[4] Includes indefinite borrowing authority to the amount availed of less cash repayments and notes canceled. Included $7,737,000 authorizations administratively canceled by the Corporation. Reduction of $2,500,000,000 in borrowing authority covered in proposed new charter of RFC.
[5] Indicates outstanding obligations. While the Corporation is authorized in its charter to borrow, the amount of such borrowings is not specified.

Reductions in personnel

Wherever reductions in appropriations require reductions in personnel it should be stated that such reductions in personnel must be undertaken at the earliest possible date. If it is necessary to dismiss any such persons after June 30, 1947, the departments must understand that terminal leave costs will be borne by 1948 appropriation. Dismissals prior to June 30, 1947, will require expenditure of 1947 appropriations for terminal leave.

No deficiency estimate for such purpose for either 1947 or 1948 will be entertained.

Loyalty of employees

The committee has endeavored to advise the heads of the various corporations and agencies which appeared before it that Federal funds are not to be used to pay salaries or expenses of persons antagonistic to our form of government. To that end the committee intends to hold the head of each corporation and agency personally responsible for immediately dismissing and in the future refusing to employ any person who is not completely loyal to our form of government or who belongs to any organization which advocates the overthrow of our Government by force or violence.

War Damage Corporation

Information supplied by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at the request of the committee indicated that as of April 30, 1947, the War Damage Corporation had to its credit $210,751,618.65 representing the excess of its income over expenses. Also, it was stated that such amount would be turned over to the Treasury in due course. The War Damage Corporation has completed the purpose for which it was created, and is no longer engaged in the business of insuring against loss from war damage. Therefore, the bill contains a provision requiring that the amount indicated above be promptly paid into the Treasury and applied to reduction of the national debt.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF WASHINGTON

The Export-Import Bank of Washington was organized as a District of Columbia banking corporation pursuant to Executive Order 6851, dated February 2, 1934, and was continued as an agency of the United States by act approved January 31, 1935, and subsequent acts. The bank was established to stimulate the international trade of the United States. The act of September 26, 1940, increased the bank's lending authority from $200,000,000 to $700,000,000. In a message to Congress in June 1945, the President indicated that, with the slowing down and termination of lend-lease, the bank should be empowered to assist liberated countries during the transition from war to peace. Congress subsequently passed the Export-Import Bank Act of July 31, 1945, increasing the lending authority of the bank from $700,000,000 to $3,500,000,000. The same legislation removed the prohibition on loans by the bank and persons participating with the bank to governments in default to the United States Government; made the bank an independent agency; created a statutory bipartisan Board of Directors; and arranged its financing directly from the Treasury instead of through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Board of Directors consists of the Secretary of State and four full-time members appointed by the President of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one of whom is designated by the President as chairman.

During the fiscal year 1946 loan authorizations totaling $655,000,000 were made to foreign countries to cover the termination of the lend-lease program, although a large part of the disbursements under such authorizations, $279,100,000, were made in fiscal 1947. Credits to provide dollar exchange to foreign countries for immediate reconstruction of damages suffered from the war were also authorized by the bank in 1946 and 1947, although disbursements of such credit will extend into fiscal 1948. As of April 23, 1947, the total unobligated lending authority of the bank amounted to $815,119,550.81. The committee feels that loans in the categories just referred to, which are based largely upon political considerations, are not in keeping with the purpose for which the Export-Import Bank was organized. While there might have been considerations in the national interest for making such loans during the period immediately following the end of hostilities, and before the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development was prepared to transact business, the committee feels very strongly that the Export-Import Bank should forthwith revert to its traditional function of engaging only in such banking activities as directly stimulate the foreign trade of the United States. The World Bank is now a going concern, and major loans for reconstruction and rehabilitation should be referred to that bank rather than be handled by the Export-Import Bank. In any case, where it may appear in the national interest to extend large loans to foreign countries, such should be approved by the Congress in each instance.

As was pointed out in the hearings, the bank seeks to place loans with private lending agencies before making direct loans. It also endeavors to sell outstanding loans from its portfolio without recourse whenever possible. The committee highly endorses such practices and urges that the bank make the greatest effort to avoid competing with private capital.

Condensed statement of sources and application of funds for the fiscal years 1947 and 1948

Decrease in working capital	54, 615, 166
Total funds provided	1, 247, 241, 600	1, 119, 900, 000

[1] Includes administrative expenses estimated at $842,000, and reduced to $800,000 by committee.

Of the item "Acquisition of assets," $904,802,400 represents the amount to be loaned in 1948. The item "Realization of assets" indicates the principal amount of loans to be collected.

In the fiscal year 1948 the total amount to be loaned by the bank will be less than its total new loans in the present fiscal year, since more than half of its lending authority is already being utilized. The fiscal year 1948 marks the beginning of the period when collections of loans will play a large part in the bank's activities. Owing to the importance of protecting the public money already loaned by the bank, the committee has granted on increase of $20,000 over the present year in the bank's administrative expenses. In recommending a total of $800,000 for 1948, however, the committee has reduced the budget estimate of $842,000, which is considered excessive.

PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY

The Panama Railroad Company was incorporated by an act of the Legislature of the State of New York on April 7, 1849, and was operated under private control until 1881, when the original French Canal Company acquired most of the 70,000 shares of its stock. This company and its successor, the New Panama Canal Co., continued to operate the railroad company as a common carrier and also as an adjunct to their attempt to construct a canal, until 1904, when their stock (68,888 shares) passed to the ownership of the United States as a part of the assets of the New Panama Canal Co., which were purchased for the sum of $40,000,000, as authorized by the act of Congress approved June 28, 1902. The remaining 1,112 shares were purchased from private owners in 1905 at an average cost of approximately $140 per share.

The name of the corporation is not descriptive of its functions. Although by name a railroad company, it operates harbor-terminal facilities, a telephone system, two hotels, several commissary stores, a dairy, two coaling plants, and a steamship line. Of these activities, all are in the Canal Zone except the steamship line which operates between the Canal Zone and New York. In 1939 three vessels of 10,000 gross tons each were built at a total cost of $13,200,000. They normally maintain a weekly service between New York and Cristobal, but in 1941 these vessels were requisitioned for use by the Maritime Commission and the War Department in the prosecution of the war.

All three vessels have now been returned to the railroad company. Two are now operating, and the third, which required major realterations, should be back in service very soon.

The railroad, comprising 50 miles of mainline track between the cities of Panama and Colon, was the only means of transshipment of freight or of passengers, inasmuch as the Canal is suitable only for oceangoing commerce, until the construction of the trans-Isthmian highway which was built during the war by the United States Government. What effect truck and bus service over this highway will have on the business of the railroad remains to be seen. The opinion is expressed by the company that development of highway facilities will never entirely replace the services of the railroad, particularly for heavy or bulky shipments. While it is likely that the completion of the new highway will reduce the revenues of the railroad without proportionate reductions in operating expenses the Railroad Company is prohibited by treaty from operating busses and truck lines over the highway, which passes through portions of the Republic of Panama. A company in the Republic of Panama presently is in the process of constructing a hotel in the city of Panama. When this is completed it should be possible for the railroad company to reduce its activities in this field. The hotel business of the Company has not been profitable except during the war years.

Under section 304 of the Government Corporation Control Act (Public Law 238, 79th Cong.) the Panama Railroad Company intends to seek reincorporation in the Eightieth Congress. The present functions of the company as an adjunct to the Panama Canal and as an international common carrier are important and are required by provisions of public treaties and notes accessory thereto to be performed by a public agency of the United States.

Condensed statement of sources and application of funds for the fiscal years 1947 and 1948

Decrease in working capital	218,771	583,100
Total funds provided	47,731,870	42,535,300

[1] Includes administrative expenses estimated at $779,700 and reduced to $750,000 by committee.

The committee has reduced the budget estimate of $779,700 for administrative expenses by $29,700 to $750,000. Total administrative expenses, including deficiencies, in 1947 amounted to $760,000. Thus, the amount provided for 1948 is a slight reduction from that available in 1947.

At the beginning of the 1947 fiscal year, it was estimated that the company would show a net deficit for the year. The committee is happy to note that the picture has now changed so that a net profit of approximately $500,000 will be earned. It is hoped that the estimated profit of $395,760 for 1948 can also be increased.

TENNESSEE VALLEY ASSOCIATED COOPERATIVES, INC.

The Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc., was incorporated January 25, 1934, under the laws of the State of Tennessee, for the purpose of receiving and administering a grant of funds made by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration to the State of Tennessee. The funds were made available to assist in organizing, fostering, and financing a chain of self-help cooperative enterprises needed to improve the economic welfare of the lower-income families in the Tennessee Valley area; to assist in the development of cooperative enterprises in the Tennessee Valley area through educational services to individuals and associations concerning the principles of cooperative enterprise; to determine which of the various types of cooperative organizations could advantageously be created and utilized in the area; and to accumulate data and evaluate the services which might be economically rendered by such organizations as well as other scientific data and information useful and valuable from an economic standpoint. The directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority served as the incorporators of Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc., and as its first board of directors, but in so doing, acted in their private capacity as individuals rather than in their official capacity as Tennessee Valley Authority directors. The present directors of Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc., have no present connection with the Tennessee Valley Authority. No act of Congress or Executive order or Federal statute specifically authorized the creation of the Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc.

This corporation will cease to be an instrumentality of the United States on June 30, 1948, under the provisions of the Corporation Control Act of 1945. The committee has been unable to ascertain any sound reason for continuing this entity as a Government corporation, and has therefor provided administrative expenses only for its liquidation.

The corporation owns preferred stock in local cooperative enterprises to the value of $33,285 and on June 30, 1947, will have loans outstanding to cooperatives to the amount of $238,480. It is estimated that these loans are worth approximately $125,000.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

The Tennessee Valley Authority is a corporation created by act of Congress on May 18, 1933. It was established "to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama, and for other purposes."

To accomplish these purposes the corporation was specifically authorized to construct such dams and reservoirs in the Tennessee River and its tributaries as will provide and maintain a 9-foot channel in the river from Knoxville to its mouth and will best serve to promote navigation on the Tennessee River and its tributaries and control destructive floodwaters in the Tennessee and Mississippi drainage basins. Insofar as may be consistent with these navigation and flood-control objectives, it was directed to provide and operate facilities for the generation and sale of electric energy.

The corporation was also specifically authorized to take over the World War I munitions-plant facilities in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., and to utilize and enlarge these facilities to develop and demonstrate new forms of fertilizer under practical farm conditions and to provide munitions for military purposes. In addition, the President determined, by Executive Order 6161 (June 8, 1933) that the Tennessee Valley Authority should make the surveys, plans, experiments, and demonstrations contemplated by the act to further the proper use and development of the natural resources of the Tennessee River Basin and adjoining territory.

The committee considers that the Tennessee Valley Authority is now substantially complete as a going concern. It is recommended that major additions to its facilities and expansions of its activities in the regions it serves be proposed to and acted upon in the future by the Congress.

In its report on the Government corporations appropriation bill for 1947, the committee stated that the portion of the investments which represent the cost of power-producing plants and facilities in the Tennessee Valley Authority should be amortized over a period of 40 years, and that the Treasury of the United States should be reimbursed insofar as possible for such costs. The goal was, and is, that provision should be made for orderly restoration of the funds provided by the taxpayers of the country as a whole so as to leave a large operating facility owned, free of debt, by all the people. A great deal of study and analysis of relevant considerations has been undertaken, and the committee has included a provision in the accompanying bill to effectuate this goal. Since, owing to variable factors such as volume of stream flow, which affects the amount of electricity generated by water power and sales of electricity, which vary with many factors, including fluctuations in general business activity, it is virtually impossible to know just what the Authority's net income from power operations will be in future years. Also, costs of producing electricity vary, especially when inadequate stream flow requires the purchase of coal for steam-operated generators. Therefore the committee has proposed a plan which requires that a fixed percentage of annual net income from power operations be paid into the Treasury each year. The following figures on the cost of power-producing facilities, prepared by the Tennessee Valley Authority, were used to determine the amount to be paid into the Treasury:

Appropriations for power plant through June 30, 1946	$287,771,841
Transfers of property from War Department	19,026,418
Bonds sold to Treasury and Reconstruction Finance Corporation	65,072,500

[2] Total payment was $10,336,264, including receipts from other than power operations.
[3] Exclusive of bond interest.

The amount of $348,239,240 is to be paid into the Treasury in not to exceed 40 years; $2,500,000 of outstanding bond principal is to be paid and deducted from net income from power operations each year, and not less than 40 percent of the remaining net power income is to be paid each year until a total of $348,239,240 has been paid. But not less than one-fourth of such amount is to be paid in each 10-year period after June 30, 1948. It is contemplated that the Congress, in approving the Authority's budget each year, will specify the amount to be returned to the Treasury during the ensuing year. It is also proposed that new appropriations for power facilities will be repaid to the Treasury on an amortized schedule not to exceed 40 years after such facility comes into operation.

The committee earnestly believes that this provision is a forward and progressive step in the history of the Tennessee Valley Authority. A schedule of repayments is thus provided whereby flexibility permits prosperous years to cushion payments to be made in less profitable years without destroying the basic provisions of section 26 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act. Under this plan it is believed that the public interest will be protected without denying the management of the Authority adequate leeway in proposing what disposition shall be made of a portion of power proceeds.

The Authority's budgetary program for the fiscal year 1948 is presented in the following:

Condensed statement of sources and application of funds for the fiscal years 1947 and 1948

	1947, estimated	1948, estimated
Funds applied:
From appropriated funds:
Acquisition of assets	$20,328,000	[3] $32,585,000
Expenses	9,225,000	[2] 7,850,000

[1] Reduced by committee to $28,365,000.
[2] Limited by committee to $7,156,000.
[3] Reduced by committee to $35,021,000.

The item "Acquisition of assets," from appropriated funds, covers continuation of construction of South Holston and Watauga Dams, and construction and acquisition of additions and replacements to chemical plant. The figure $32,585,000 includes the unexpended balance of $15,484,183 which the bill authorizes to be carried over from 1947 appropriations, and $19,684,479 of the budget estimate for the 1948 appropriation, less $2,583,667 of 1948 unliquidated obligations. The committee has reduced the estimate of $27,057,500 for the 1948 appropriation by $4,914,000. By limitation it has reduced the amount for dam construction by $2,000,000 and the amount for additions to chemical plants by $2,000,000. Expenditures for construction of these dams can be reduced by $2,000,000 in the next fiscal year without interfering with their economical completion. The reduction for additions to chemical plant represents deferment of capital additions but does not require a reduction of research in fertilizer development.

The item "Expenses," from appropriated funds, covers operating costs of navigation operations, flood-control operations, fertilizer and munitions resources and development, and resource development activities. The committee has reduced the amount of $7,850,000, as contained in the budget estimate, by $500,000, and intends that such reduction be applied to resource-development activities. The Authority proposed to devote $1,875,000 to fertilizer used in tests and demonstrations. The committee desires that $375,000 of the $500,000 referred to above be deducted, leaving $1,500,000 for fertilizer used in tests and demonstrations. The practice of furnishing fertilizer to the owner of a test farm for 4, 5, or more years without cost or at nominal cost should be changed. While the test farm serves a useful purpose for the compilation of performance data and for education of other farmers in the neighborhood, the recipient of test fertilizer also derives a direct and measurable increase in crop yields and profits. It is only reasonable that such farmers be required to pay at least part of the cost of the fertilizer. Most farmers would be happy to pay a reasonable cost for test fertilizer, particularly after the first year or two. The committee desires that a scheme be adopted whereby the recipient of test fertilizer would pay perhaps nothing or a nominal amount the first year, perhaps 20 percent of the delivered cost the second year, 50 percent of such cost the third year, etc., and after the fourth year the total cost of the fertilizer used on his farm. Such a scheme can be varied according to particular conditions, but owners of farms used for fertilizer tests and demonstations should be graduated to the paying category as soon as possible. Also, steps should be taken to avoid giving any one farmer the benefits of free or unduly cheap test fertilizer over extended periods to the exclusion of all other farmers in the neighborhood or area. The benefits should be spread from one farm to another.

The $125,000 balance of the $500,000 reduction in resource and development activities is to be applied so as to reduce the amount used for fertilizer demonstrations and farm-management assistance and rural organization and cooperative development activities, thus making the total funds devoted to these two activities not more than $860,000.

The Authority proposed to purchase 421 new automobiles in 1948. The committee has reduced the number to be purchased to 221, and has accordingly reduced the appropriation by $220,000. It is intended that these new cars be only for replacement of vehicles on hand, and that those in the most uneconomical operating condition be disposed of and replaced.

Section 102 of the Government Corporation Control Act requires that the budget program submitted by each wholly owned Government corporation shall include a statement of administrative expenses. Schedule B–6 of the budget program presented by the Authority covers its proposed administrative and general expenses for the fiscal year 1948, in amount of $4,805,000.

This amount should be reduced and a total of not more than $4,105,000 should be used for administrative and general expenses, including all costs of activities set out in schedule B–6 of the budget, except the operation of Norris and Wilson villages. In a statement obtained from the Authority after its budget program had been submitted, it was pointed out that the total estimate of $4,805,000 for administrative and general expenses comprised $1,798,000 of appropriated funds and $3,007,000 of corporate funds. The committee has provided in title I of the bill $1,409,000 of appropriated funds to be used for administrative and general expenses, and it desires that a total of not more than $2,696,000 of corporate funds be used for such expenses.

The bill does not carry a legislative limitation but the intent of the committee is clear that the Tennessee Valley Authority management shall not exceed this amount of $4,105,000 for administrative expenses. This amount is composed of various items as specified in this report. The Tennessee Valley Authority management is directed to conform to such limitations, both as to appropriated and corporate funds (in the aggregate). The reduction in appropriated funds to be used for such expenses was computed approximately in proportion to the deductions applied to funds appropriated for construction and operating costs, except penalty mail costs. The entire reduction of $5,000 from estimated penalty mail costs was made from appropriated funds. The portion of administrative and general expenses applicable to appropriated funds available for construction was reduced $154,000, and the portion for operating costs (resource and development activities) was reduced $35,000, a total of $194,000.

The expense of operating Norris and Wilson villages is not properly an administrative expense, in the opinion of the committee. Since no information was obtainable as to what portion of the expenses of operating Norris and Wilson villages is appropriated funds, an arbitrary determination of one-half, or $195,000, has been made. The expense of operating the villages should be separately presented in future budget programs, with sufficiently detailed data to accurately reveal their financial status, including the sources of funds used and objects of expenses in connection with their operation. The committee can see no justification for maintaining Norris and Wilson villages as an activity of the Authority unless they can be put on a self-sustaining basis. Unless they are put on a self-sustaining basis they should be promptly disposed of by the Authority. The Authority should present a definite proposal to such end at the time its 1949 budget is considered. Apart from excluding the expenses of operating these two villages, the committee expects the administrative and general expenses to be reduced by $310,000. The expense of maintaining an information staff appears to be larger than necessary and, except for the technical library service, is considered to be superfluous to the Authority's activities.

This direction by the committee does not prevent the Authority from allocating its administrative and general expenses to the cost of its various programs and activities for cost-accounting purposes. The statement of administrative expenses in future years should show a detailed break-down of such expenses by projects, programs, and activities and should distinguish appropriated funds from corporate funds.

The following statement showing the application of appropriated and corporate funds for the fiscal year 1948, on the basis of the budget as submitted, was requested by the committee after completion of the hearings:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Federal Prison Industries

Federal Prison Industries, Inc., was created in 1934 to establish and operate industries in the United States penal and correctional institutions for the production of articles and commodities for consumption in the institutions or for sale to the departments and independent establishments of the Federal Government, and not for sale to the public in competition with private enterprise. These industries are required to be diversified so as to minimize competition with private industry and free labor. One of the major purposes of the Corporation is to provide inmates "a maximum opportunity to acquire a knowledge and skill in trades and occupations which will provide them with a means of earning a livelihood upon release." They are paid wages, on a very low scale, for their employment during incarceration and in the case of those who have dependents a large share of their earnings is sent home to assist in the support of such dependents. This payment in many cases greatly relieves the hardship otherwise experienced by families of prisoners.

Net earnings by the Corporation from January 1, 1935, to June 30, 1946, total $18,457,802. It paid a dividend of $4,774,000 to the Treasury during the fiscal year 1946. This amount equals the original capital of the Corporation plus the net value of property transferred from other Government agencies without exchange of funds through June 30, 1945. It is to have paid an additional dividend of $6,225,293 prior to June 30, 1947, and plans to pay another $3,000,000 prior to June 30, 1948.

Condensed statement of sources and application of funds for the fiscal years 1947 and 1948

Decrease in working capital	5,880,293	2,824,081
Total funds provided	15,978,287	12,914,340

[1] Includes administrative expenses, estimated at $240,000, and reduced to $225,000 by committee.

The item "Acquisition of assets" includes construction and improvement of buildings used for the industry's plant and acquisition of machinery and equipment under the Corporation's program of providing diversified employment. The Corporation's estimate of administrative expenses for the fiscal year 1948 have been reduced to $240,000 from $268,826 in 1947. Inasmuch as certain positions have been unfilled for some time, the committee feels that a small additional reduction can be made without jeopardizing the efficiency of the Corporation's operations. Therefore its administrative expenses for 1948 have been limited to $225,000.

The financial statements presented to the committee were very clear and understandable and the committee commends the management for its clarity of presenting financial data. The committee also is of the opinion that the Federal Prison Industries has made a good record in general. It is hoped that this favorable record can be maintained in the future.

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION

The chartering of the Inland Waterways Corporation in 1924 was an outgrowth of needs which became apparent in inland water transportation during the period of the First World War. By the Federal Control Act of March 21, 1918, the Director General of Railroads was authorized to expend necessary funds for the purchase, construction, utilization, and operation of transportation facilities on inland waterways. In accordance with this authority, the Director General commandeered substantially all privately owned vessels on the inland waterways and initiated a construction program of new floating equipment. Under the terms of the Transportation Act of 1920, the functions exercised by the Railroad Administration were transferred to the Secretary of War and operated as the Bureau of Inland and Coastwise Waterways Service. By 1924 it had become evident that this operation could not be effectively carried on by a typical Government administrative bureau. Accordingly, by an act of Congress, June 3, 1924, the Inland Waterways Corporation was created. The Corporation was operated under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of War until 1939, when it was transferred to the Department of Commerce.

The Corporation originally had an authorized capital stock of $5,000,000. In 1928, this was increased to $15,000,000. Of this amount, $12,000,000 actually has been appropriated through the Secretary of the Treasury and made available to the Corporation. In addition to this capital stock of $12,000,000, the Corporation has paid-in surplus in excess of $10,000,000. This paid-in surplus consists of the 1924 appraised value of the equipment and facilities turned over to the Corporation by the War Department at the time of its creation. The Corporation has no authority to issue bonds or other long-term debt obligations.

At the time the budget program for the fiscal year 1947 was under consideration, the question was raised by the Secretary of Commerce as to whether or not the barge line should be sold regardless of the fact that all conditions of the act had not been met. The committee at that time recommended that the Corporation should not be sold until all of the requirements of the law had been met.

Condensed statement of sources and application of funds for the fiscal years 1947 and 1948

	1947, estimated	1948, estimated
Funds applied:
Acquisition of assets	$2,255,000	$2,200,000
Expenses	8,275,538	[1] 8,374,900
Increase in working capital		189,000
Total fund applied	10,530,538	10,763,900
Funds provided:
Realization of assets	2,653,936	1,123,000
Revenue	7,815,400	9,640,900
Decrease in working capital	61,202
Total funds provided	10,530,538	10,763,900

[1] Includes administrative expenses in amount of $418,000.

The item "Acquisition of assets" includes approximately $1,000,000 for the purchase of an articulated unit of a boat and a number of barges. One such unit is to be purchased in 1947. The principal new feature is that the front of the boat and the ends of the barges are square so that they will fit flush together. Basin tests of a model of this articulated unit indicate the possibility of phenomenal increases in efficiency and consequent economies. After the unit to be purchased in the fiscal year 1947 has been tested, and if the tests are successful, an additional unit is to be purchased in 1948. The balance of the $2,200,000 is to be used for further modernization of floating equipment, including acquisition of additional barges and installation of three Diesel engines in operating boats.

Objections have been voiced regarding the Government's continuing to operate a barge line in competition with other carriers. In view of this fact and the fact that the barge line has not been operating at a profit, and since a comparatively large investment in new and improved equipment is proposed, the question of whether the Corporation is to continue its operation has been given consideration by the committee. The Select Committee on Small Business of the House had contemplated making a study of this question. Therefore this committee requested the Small Business Committee to expedite its consideration of the matter. After conducting hearings in various cities affected by the operations of the barge line, the Small Business Committee furnished to this committee a report with recommendations. A copy of that report is to be found on pages 54–58 of part 3 of the hearings. This committee concurs in principle in the recommendations expressed in the report of the Small Business Committee. On the assumption that the barge line will be continued as a going concern for at least several years, whether under Government or private management, the committee has approved the Corporation's budget program without change. It is refreshing to note that although the barge line is handling an increased volume of business it has at the same time reduced its administrative expenses from a total of $640,000 in the fiscal year 1947 to $418,000 in 1948. The management of the Corporation at present is in the hands of an alert and able person, Mr. A. C. Ingersoll, Jr., and the committee is hopeful that the Inland Waterways will set an excellent example for other Government corporations to follow. If the Government must remain in business there is no good reason why its commercial activities should not be conducted on a sound and profitable basis.

Warrior River Terminal Company

The Warrior River Terminal Company was incorporated January 18, 1926, under the laws of the State of Alabama, as the Port Birmingham Railway Company. By amendment to its charter February 12, 1926, the name was changed to Warrior River Terminal Company. Since June 19, 1926, all capital stock of this Corporation has been owned by the Inland Waterways Corporation.

This company was formed for the purpose of acquiring the standard-gage switching line extending from the river bank at Port Birmingham to Ensley, Ala. This facility was acquired on May 1, 1926. The purchase of the stock of this company by the Inland Waterways Corporation was necessitated by the unsatisfactory interchange relations between Warrior River barge-line operators and the railroad, this road being the only means available to river operators for receiving freight from and delivering freight to the Birmingham district.

The company originally had an authorized capital stock of $150,000. Only $100,000 of this amount had been paid in at the time the Inland Waterways Corporation acquired ownership of the outstanding stock. By amendment to the company's charter the capital stock was increased to $1,250,000 in 1931, all of which was issued and purchased by the Inland Waterways Corporation. Both of the purchases of stock made by the Inland Waterways Corporation were approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. In addition to its capital stock, the Corporation also has paid-in surplus in the amount of approximately $100,000. This paid-in surplus represents a grant from the Federal Emergency Relief Administration of Federal Works for replacement of trestles with steel spans. The company has no outstanding bonds or other long-term debt obligations.

The item "Acquisition of assets" for 1948 covers the purchase of 50 coal cars. The Company has paid a dividend of $75,000 per annum each year to and including 1946. However, due to reduced net earnings during the war years and subsequently, it is not anticipated that a dividend will be declared in 1948.

The report of the Small Business Committee with respect to the Inland Waterways Corporation also makes recommendations regarding the disposition of the Warrior River Terminal Company. The committee concurs in the recommendations of the Small Business Committee as made in its report.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Virgin Islands Company

The Virgin Islands Company was established in 1934 to aid in effecting the economic rehabilitation of the Virgin Islands and to promote the general welfare of the people. The United States Government purchased a number of properties, including sugar plantations, two sugar mills, a distillery, a short railroad, and other properties, and formed the Virgin Islands Company, which was incorporated by an ordinance of the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John. An operating agreement between the Secretary of the Interior and the Virgin Islands Company provides for the operation of the various properties for the benefit of the people of the Virgin Islands. The distress of the people on the island of St. Croix was without compare at the time the company was established, and there is little doubt but that the situation has been greatly improved by the activities of the company which is the backbone of the economy of the island. The Company has never paid an actual profit, and the only activity which appears to be profitable is the rum distillery. The company has no Federal charter, and under section 304 (b) must either secure legislative authorization for its continuance after June 30, 1948, or go out of business.

A bill has been introduced in the House (H. R. 3108) for incorporating the Virgin Islands Corporation, the proposed successor to the present company. The Corporation would have a capital stock of $2,000,000 subscribed by the United States. It is proposed that this Corporation would make every effort to place the Virgin Islands on a self-supporting basis and enable the inhabitants to maintain an adequate standard of living. Development of tourist trade is one of the projects being planned to this end. In view of the ideal climate it is not impossible under proper management that a substantial volume of tourist trade could be built up over a period of several years. The committee is gratified to note that the Department of the Interior is seeking to find a solution for the economic plight of these island people.

The committee desires to reiterate the stand of the committee a year ago that "it is to be hoped that some means can be found to meet the needs of these people other than the operation of a distillery," and to express the hope that in the consideration of the pending legislation the whole question of the economy of the islands will be studied with this in view.

Relatively minor expansion of the plant and equipment of the company is contemplated in 1948, as evidenced by the item "Acquisition of assets."

During the fiscal year 1946, programs carried on by the Company resulted in a net loss of $78,509. For the fiscal years 1947 and 1948, the profit is estimated to be $199,300 and $268,400, respectively, before providing for income taxes which are estimated to be $60,000 and $85,000, respectively. This increase in profits results from the estimated increase in sales of sugar and rum. The operations of miscellaneous programs are expected to continue at a loss during 1947 and 1948. The sales from electricity are expected to produce enough revenue in 1948 to cover the cost of sales and provide a small profit. The net from the sale of rum, if realized as estimated, will finance the losses on the miscellaneous programs, plus other expenses.

During 1946 the income almost equaled the expenditures on the sugar program, and it is expected that the income will at least equal the expenditures in 1947 and 1948. However, inadequate rainfall is an ever-present contingency and adverse weather conditions may easily result in the loss of an entire year's crop.

The budget program has been approved as submitted, including $20,000 for administrative expenses in 1948, the same amount provided for the fiscal year 1947.

NATIONAL HOUSING AGENCY

Office of the Administrator

The National Housing Agency was created by Executive Order 9070, issued February 24, 1942, and represented a consolidation of the civilian housing programs previously vested in 16 Government agencies.

The Agency consists of: The Office of the Administrator, which is responsible for assisting in the formulation of Federal housing programs, for supervising the execution of national housing policy, and for over-all coordination of the Agency's activities; the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, with responsibilities for the supervision of building and loan and similar financial institutions and the establishment of credit facilities to protect their liquidity; the Federal Housing Administration, with statutory powers to insure mortgage loans made by private financial institutions on privately constructed and owned dwellings; and the Federal Public Housing Authority, which provides financial assistance, pursuant to the United States Housing Act of 1937, in the construction and maintenance of low-rent, slum-clearance housing projects and supervision in varying degrees over their management, and is also engaged in reerection, management, and disposition of temporary emergency housing under the veterans' housing and the public war-housing programs.

The Agency includes several activities which have been defined by section 101 of the Government Corporation Control Act as wholly owned Government corporations subject to the provisions of that act; namely, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and the United States Housing Corporation, which are administered within the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration; the Defense Homes Corporation; and the Federal Public Housing Authority (or U. S. Housing Authority).

During the first phase of the veterans' emergency housing program—from February 8, 1946, until the President revised the program in December—the Office of the Administrator carried out the major functions of the Housing Expediter, during a period when the same individual was both Administrator and Expediter. When the veterans' emergency housing program entered its second phase, the President made separate appointments to the post of Administrator and Expediter.

The budget estimate submitted for the Office of the Administrator amounted to a total of $1,215,000 of obligations for the fiscal year 1948. The amount for comparable activities during the 5½ months from January 11, 1947, was $745,500. The estimate for 1948 reflected the new organization pattern of the Office of the Administrator subsequent to the separation of the function of the Housing Expediter from the National Housing Agency by Executive Order 9820, effective January 11, 1947. The following summary statement was included in the justification presented by the Administrator of the proposed 1948 budget program:

"The Office of the Administrator has a responsibility under Executive Order 9070 for the basic research and fact finding which is necessary to discharge the responsibilities of the Federal Government in the field of housing as vested by law in the National Housing Agency. It exercises general supervision over the programs and general administration of constituents of the Agency. It is performing a broader coordinating function of all major activities of the Federal Government relating to housing through the work of the Coordinating Council which was established by the National Housing Administrator and meets with him at regular intervals.

"The Administrator has, under provisions of the Lanham Act, primary responsibility for all funds appropriated for public war housing and veterans' housing, and for supervising the management and disposition of all such housing. In keeping with the functional allocation of activities within the National Housing Agency, the execution of this responsibility has been largely delegated to the Federal Public Housing Authority. Ultimate responsibility for this program remains, nevertheless, with the National Housing Administrator.

"The Office of the Administrator serves as a point of contact on matters concerning or affecting housing activities of the Federal Government for the Congress, other Federal agencies, State and local governmental units, the building and construction industry, the general public, and foreign governments."

The means of financing the budget proposed for 1948 was presented by the Administrator as follows:

Transfers from constituents of NHA:
Federal Home Loan Bank Administration	$67,500
Federal Housing Administration	180,000
Federal Public Housing Authority	202,500
Total from constituents	450,000
Lanham Act, title V appropriation	100,000
Operation, management, and disposition, public war housing	665,000
Total	1,215,000

The separate functions and programs are carried out by the various constituent units of the Agency, yet it proposes to use $1,215,000 to superimpose a kind of master planning entity on top of these constituents each of which maintains its own planning, coordinating, and administrative staff. While it is true that these constituent units are all concerned with a common element, housing, the activities of each is quite different from the others. The Federal Home Loan Bank Administration and its constituent units perform essentially a program of banking and extension and protection of credit. The Federal Housing Administration is an insurer. The Federal Public Housing Authority carries out what fundamentally is a social program. These activities are unrelated in more ways than they are similar.

The committee is unable to justify to the House the program presented for the Office of the Administrator, and accordingly has effected a drastic reduction in the funds available for 1948. The entire structure of Government corporations and independent agencies is today so confused with interagency borrowing, lending, and transfers of funds that the most able of financiers and accountants are hard put to comprehend the over-all picture. In order that at least one segment of this confused situation may be clarified, the committee has provided that all the funds available to the Office of the Administrator, $100,000 for the fiscal year 1948, shall be in the form of a direct appropriation from the Treasury, and from no other source. Such amount is adequate to preserve the administrative and policy supervision of the Office of the Administrator, and the committee proposes that unless legislative provision is made to authorize and specify the duties and functions of the Office of the Administrator, the fiscal year 1948 is to be the last year of its existence.

Office of the Housing Expediter

The position of Housing Expediter was created in the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion on December 12, 1945, primarily for the purpose of developing emergency measures to deal with the acute housing shortage as it affected veterans of World War II. The first Expediter was appointed on that same date. By Executive Order 9686, issued January 26, 1946, the President set forth in detail the functions and powers of the Housing Expediter including a direction that he formulate an emergency program and recommend necessary legislation. The Veterans' Emergency Housing Act, approved May 22, 1946, created the Office of the Housing Expediter, and included authorization for allocations and priorities, the use of premium payments to stimulate production of building materials, and the guaranty of markets for prefabricated houses and new type building materials. The same person, as authorized by the act referred to, was appointed to serve in the dual capacity of Housing Expediter and Administrator of the National Housing Agency. By Executive Order 9820, issued January 11, 1947, these two functions were separated. By Executive Order 9836, issued March 22, 1947, all housing functions previously carried on by the Civilian Production Administration were transferred to the Office of the Housing Expediter. These include all of the administrative duties with respect to the limitations on nonessential and deferrable construction, the allocation and channeling of raw materials, and granting of priorities assistance to producers. In addition, the Office of Housing Expediter is charged with administering the compliance with all its regulations and orders.

The original estimate of salaries and expenses for the Housing Expediter, presented by the Budget Bureau, for the fiscal year 1948 amounted to $12,450,000. This was subsequently revised downward to $7,765,000, as shown on page 465 of part 1 of the hearings. This revision anticipated substantial relaxation and elimination of controls for the remainder of the calendar year 1947, and liquidation of the agency by January 1, 1948 was contemplated under the revised budget program. The committee is convinced that the program of trying to expedite the construction of residential housing has not been successful. It is doubtful that the funds expended have expedited construction at all, and more doubtful that the public has received real value for its funds so used. Reports are prevalent that building materials have become available in a volume that is beginning to saturate the market, and that price reductions in many lines are in the offing because supply is beginning to exceed demand. For these reasons, and because strong sentiment has been expressed in the Congress to the effect that this function should be terminated, the committee requested the Expediter to prepare an estimate of the cost of liquidating that office as of June 30, 1947. The estimate appears on page 474 of part 1 of the hearings. The exact amount of this estimate, $3,539,080 is provided in the accompanying bill.

Federal Home Loan Bank Administration

The Federal Home Loan Bank Administration was created by Executive Order 9070 to administer the functions, powers, and duties of (1) the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, created by the Federal Home Loan Bank Act of 1932, and of its members; (2) the Board of Trustees of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation; (3) the Board of Directors of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation; and (4) certain functions, powers, and duties with respect to the United States Housing Corporation which was established to provide housing in World War I, and which is now fully liquidated.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Administration is administered by the Federal Home Loan Bank Commissioner. Under the Commissioner, the operations of the Federal Home Loan Bank System are directed by a governor and those of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation are each directed by a general manager.

Federal Home Loan Bank System

The Federal Home Loan Bank System is composed of 11 Federal home-loan banks, which are mixed-ownership corporations and therefore not required to submit budgets under the Corporation Control Act, and various building and loan associations, savings and loan associations, cooperative banks, homestead associations, insurance companies, and savings banks. There were formerly 12 such banks, but 2 were combined on March 29, 1946, reducing the number to 11. This system performs substantially the same function in the field of home-mortgage credit which the Federal Reserve System performs as a credit reserve for commercial banks and the Federal land banks perform in the field of farm finance. The only item related to this system which is carried in the bill is the limitation on administrative expenses, estimated at $1,965,000, and reduced by the committee to $1,250,000.

Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation

The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation was established under title IV of the National Housing Act of June 27, 1934, as a means of restoring and maintaining confidence in the thrift and home-financing institutions of the savings and loan type. Recognizing the importance of available credit for purposes of stimulating recovery from heavy depression and of providing a permanent and reliable source of funds for economical home financing, the Congress provided the safety of insurance up to $5,000 for each account of investors in approved institutions.

The authorized and paid-in capital stock of the Corporation amounts to $100,000,000 and is held by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in accordance with an act of Congress. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation is entitled to dividends on this stock at a rate equal to the interest rate on the bonds received in payment therefor, such dividends to be cumulative. Dividends were paid from June 27, 1934, to June 30, 1935, since which time they have been accumulated at the rate of $3,000,000 per year. Deferment of dividend payments was for the purpose of accelerating the building of loss reserves with resulting strengthening of the insurance program. Because of the dividend obligation as well as the basic insurance liability of $5,771,876,000 on 2,490 insured savings and loan associations as of June 30, 1946, the Corporation does not contemplate the return of any Government capital during 1948.

While the Corporation has authority to borrow money on notes, bonds, and debentures, there were no such obligations outstanding as of June 30, 1946. In addition to the capital stock, surplus reserves amounted to $67,350,194 on June 30, 1946, and will reach a total of $74,869,000 by June 30, 1948.

The committee wishes to point out that the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation acts as insurer for savings in institutions whose assets total approximately $5,750,000,000. The home mortgage debt of the country at the beginning of the current calendar year was in excess of $24,000,000,000, an all-time high. It is common knowledge that home prices are highly inflated. Competition between institutions for making loans contributes to inflating home values, and officials of mortgage-lending institutions too often supplement their salaries by commissions received in placing fire insurance on the homes covered by their mortgage loans.

In view of the period of time which has elapsed since premium rates and the ratio of reserves to cover losses was established for insuring deposits in savings and loan institutions, and the factors set out above, the proper legislative committee should undertake a thorough study of the insurance extended by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. The officials of the Corporation should exercise their full discretion under the law to refuse to insure any institutions whose officials sell insurance or receive other fees (which thereby may directly or indirectly influence loan judgment) in addition to their salaries.

Condensed statement of sources and application of funds for the fiscal years 1947 and 1948

	1947, estimated	1948, estimated
Funds applied:
Acquisition of assets	$10,893,000	$17,787,000
Expenses	2,111,500	[1] 2,655,000
Total funds applied	13,004,500	20,442,000
Funds provided:
Realization of assets	1,002,200	7,978,000
Revenue	11,230,600	12,046,800
Decrease in working capital	771,700	417,200
Total funds provided	13,004,500	20,442,000

[1] Included administrative expenses estimated at $670,000, and reduced to $532,000 by committee.

The Corporation has purchased $3,500,000 worth of Government securities in 1947, and estimates that it will purchase an additional $6,000,000 in 1948. Insurance premiums amounted to $7,263,000 in 1947 and are estimated at $8,090,000 in 1948. Contributions to insured institutions amounted to $1,501,000 in 1947 and are estimated at $1,929,000 in 1948. The estimate for administrative expenses in 1948 was $670,000, which has been limited by the committee to $532,000.

Home Owners' Loan Corporation

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation was established under the act of June 13, 1933, as an emergency instrumentality of the Federal Government for the purpose of refinancing the mortgages of distressed urban home owners and to stem the flood of foreclosures resulting from the unprecedented economic collapse of the early thirties, and charged with the responsibility of taking over mortgages on small nonfarm homes, the owners of which were in actual default and who could not otherwise escape foreclosure.

The authority of the Corporation to acquire mortgages of distressed home owners and other obligations and liens secured by real estate in exchange for cash or bonds of the Corporation expired June 12, 1936. Since that time the principal function of the Corporation has been to service the loans and to take over properties where necessary and dispose of them to the best interests of the Corporation. Through this process the Corporation is, and has been, proceeding with the liquidation of its assets.

The total amount of the Corporation's authorized capital—$200,000,000—was subscribed and paid for by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Corporation has authority to issue $4,750,000,000 in bonds, and on June 30, 1946, $743,111,625 of such bonds were outstanding. It is expected that by June 30, 1948, the total bonds outstanding will have been reduced to $300,999,625.

It was originally anticipated that this Corporation would suffer considerable loss, but it now appears that the actual loss eventually to be taken will be only a fraction of the amount loaned. The total obligations of the Corporation at one time exceeded $3,400,000,000, and it is now estimated that the deficit as of June 30, 1948, will be $50,620,300.

[1] Includes administrative expenses estimated at $3,723,000, and reduced to $3,000,000 by committee.

The Corporation has had no authority to make new loans except on resale of property to which title has been acquired through foreclosure for 11 years and exists only for the purpose of servicing those loans still outstanding. This task lessens as the years pass and the administrative expenses should be progressively reduced. The committee has reduced the estimate of $3,723,000, by $723,000, to $3,000,000. The committee is of the opinion that it is possible to sell all of the outstanding loans on the books at the present time at not less than face value without recourse. It should be possible to make such sales by areas or States, selling en bloc all the mortgages in a given area. The loans are for the most part paid down to where they are backed by sound mortgage collateral, and should be readily salable in large lots. Every effort should be made to expedite the liquidation of these loans without waiting for them to mature.

FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

The Federal Housing Administration was established June 27, 1934, under the provisions of the National Housing Act, to encourage improvement in housing standards and conditions, to promote a stable home mortgage market, and to stimulate the flow of private capital into the field of home financing through the insurance of mortgages on dwellings. During the present year, the Federal Housing Administration has operated under three titles of the National Housing Act. These are title I, which authorizes partial insurance by the Federal Housing Administration of character loans made for renovation improvement, and within certain limitations, construction of both residential and nonresidential properties; title II, which provides for insurance of home mortgages up to 80 to 90 percent of the appraised long-term value of both new and existing small homes and new rental housing projects; and title VI, which parallels title II, but provides for appraisals on a current cost basis and higher coverage for emergency housing. Title VI was used during the years 1941–45 for insurance of privately financed war housing and was reinstated by the Congress in the spring of 1946 (Public Law 388, 79th Cong.) for insurance of veterans' housing. During normal times the Federal Housing Administration operates exclusively under titles I and II. The authority to insure new business under both titles VI and I, will expire on June 30, 1947, unless legislation extends such authority beyond that date. This will restrict insurance of new construction to title II, but will permit some refinancing under title VI and the usual insurance of existing construction under title II. None of the titles of the National Housing Act contemplates that the Federal Housing Administration either build houses or lend money.

All operating expenditures of the Federal Housing Administration in connection with the programs authorized by titles I, II, and VI of the National Housing Act are financed from the resources of the four insurance funds, namely, the title I insurance fund, the mutual mortgage insurance fund, the housing insurance fund, and the war housing insurance fund. Expenditures of the Federal Housing Administration include: (1) Payment of claims for insurance under the modernization and property-improvement program authorized by title I of the act; (2) payment of charges to the several housing insurance funds resulting from the acquisition, management, and disposal of foreclosed properties acquired under the mortgage-insurance programs; and (3) administrative expenses of the departmental field staffs of the Federal Housing Administration. The net worth of all the various insurance funds on December 31, 1946, was $134,000,000, of which all but an initial contribution of $15,000,000, from funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, has accrued from insurance operations. It is estimated that this net worth will increase to approximately $160,000,000 by June 30, 1948.

Through December 31, 1946, a total of $4,000,000 in dividends had been paid out to members of mutual insurance groups who have paid their mortgages in full. The annual rate of these dividends at the present time is $1,500,000. This so-called mutuality under which dividends are paid is, in the opinion of the committee, a misnomer, since those entitled to receive dividends are not liable for a pro rata share of losses. The committee recommends that legislation be enacted to correct such a situation.

During its 12½ years of operation the Federal Housing Administration had insured loans amounting to nearly $10,000,000,000. As of June 30, 1946, $4,203,000,000 of these loans were outstanding. In view of the fact that this agency has been in existence during a period when the trend of real property values has been almost constantly rising, and fortunately has never been confronted with a period of declining residential prices, it is recommended that the appropriate legislative committee undertake a reexamination of the ratio of reserves maintained against loss contingencies.

The estimate presented for administrative expenses in the fiscal year 1948 was $24,000,000. The amount for 1946 was $11,416,543; and for 1947, $17,624,000. The committee has limited such expenses in 1948 to the same amount as for 1947.

FEDERAL PUBLIC HOUSING AUTHORITY

The Federal Public Housing Authority is one of the three constituent units of the National Housing Agency provided for by Executive Order 9070, issued February 24, 1942, under authority contained in title I of the First War Powers Act, 1941. Under the Executive order, the functions of a number of agencies concerned with defense and low-rent housing were consolidated into the Federal Public Housing Authority, with responsibility for the development and management of housing built with public funds.

The agencies and activities included in the consolidation were:

The United States Housing Authority.

The slum-clearance projects of the Public Works Administration.

Defense housing of the United States Housing Authority.

The Division of Defense Housing of the Federal Works Agency.

The Division of Mutual Ownership of the Federal Works Agency.

The defense-housing program of the Public Buildings Administration.

The housing of the War and Navy Departments (except projects on military and naval reservations).

The nonfarm housing of the Farm Security Administration.

Defense housing of the Farm Security Administration.

The Defense Homes Corporation.

The functions of the Authority are divided into 6 major groups which are presented separately.

After the hearing on this bill last year, the committee had an investigation conducted with respect to the activities and budgetary requirements of local housing authorities and, in general, to make a thorough check of the need for payment of rent subsidies with a view to keeping at a minimum the amount of Federal expenditures. The services of a small staff of trained and competent investigators were utilized for a period of more than 6 months. In the course of such investigation much light was thrown upon the activities of the central and regional offices of the Federal Public Housing Authority, which does not speak well for the manner in which this agency of Government has been managed and operated. The chief of the investigative staff and his assistant were called before the committee during the course of its hearings for interrogation with respect to their findings, and the testimony can be found beginning at page 314 of part 2 of the hearings. The Commissioner of the Federal Public Housing Authority was also interrogated regarding the questionable conditions and practices existent in the operations of the Authority.

The hearings are replete with instances of poor administration in the past and with questionable policies and practices at present.

The General Accounting Office made arrangements for an outstanding commercial accounting firm to undertake an audit survey of the books of FPHA. The report made to the General Accounting Office revealed on the part of FPHA an accounting situation so badly confused that a true audit could not be undertaken. It has been stated that virtually every account in the general ledger is either in error, inaccurate, or incomplete, and that after several months of operation, because the conditions have not been remedied or eliminated, there is no alternative to the conclusions that may be reached.

It was brought out in the hearings that steps are presently being taken to correct this inexcusably bad accounting situation.

Instances of embezzlement of the funds of local housing projects by employees thereof came to the committee's attention. While in each of such known instances restitution of losses was effected and no Federal funds were lost, the Commissioner of FPHA insisted that it was incumbent upon him to determine whether any Federal criminal statute had been violated. The committee is of the opinion that such determination should properly be made only by the Attorney General and has requested him to investigate the embezzlements in question.

There are indications that labor unions are exercising an undue influence in at least some of the personnel actions taken by officials of FPHA. A case in point is cited on page 328 of part 2 of the hearings. A female employee of the Authority at San Diego, Calif., published a pamphlet on behalf of a labor union of Government employees attacking the management and publicizing her victory in an efficiency-rating appeal.

There are indications that travel performed at Government expense by employees of FPHA has been very loosely controlled and that the making of long-distance-telephone calls at Government expense has been subjected to abuse. The letting of construction contracts by FPHA officials has been shown to be questionable in some instances. Reports of inefficiency and incompetence in FPHA regional offices have reached the committee from several reliable sources.

The proportion of high-salaried personnel on the rolls of the FPHA is much higher than the over-all average for the Government as a whole and is much higher than that existent in any other Government agency which has come to the attention of the committee. Thirty-six percent of the total personnel of FPHA receive salaries above $4,500 per annum, and the list of titles of the so-called specialists employed is startling. This, in connection with other considerations enumerated, has motivated the committee to effect a substantial reduction in the administrative expenses of FPHA. By reducing its percentage of high-salaried personnel, this agency can maintain an adequate and efficient staff for carrying out its proper functions. The committee has included a provision in the bill limiting the number of persons paid in excess of $4,500 per annum to 20 percent of the total in order to bring the number of higher-paid personnel in line with sound business practices.

In its hearings, which are published, the committee has sought to obtain and point out the facts regarding what appears to be in many respects a deplorable condition in a Government agency. The present Commissioner of FPHA cannot be held responsible for errors or irregularities which occurred prior to his incumbency in that position. Being apprised of such matters, the Commissioner is expected to institute such changes as may be necessary to put the FPHA house in order during the fiscal year 1948.

The estimate of administrative expenses of the Authority for the fiscal year 1948 was $15,600,000. This has been reduced by the committee to $10,400,000, an amount more nearly in keeping with the work the Authority is required to perform, and this sum is more than adequate to support all activities of FPHA in 1948 which are necessary in the public interest. The committee expects all reductions in personnel to be made in relation to activities other than those necessary to the proper handling and accounting for the public funds and property entrusted to the FPHA.

Public war-housing program

In order to sustain the defense-production program, the Congress during 1940 enacted the following legislation authorizing the provision of housing for defense workers: The Second Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1941, Public Law 781, approved September 9, 1940; and the Lanham Act, Public Law 849, approved October 14, 1940. Subsequently, authorizations and appropriations for temporary shelter for defense workers and in-migrant war workers were provided by Public Laws 9, 73, 140, 375, and 353. These acts provided for financing the required emergency housing entirely from Federal funds in localities in which an acute shortage of housing existed or impended and where such housing would not be provided by private capital.

Titles I and IV of the Lanham Act, as amended, authorized $1,515,000,000 for the development of war housing, and additional authorizations of $320,000,000 were made under Public Law 9, as amended. As of June 30, 1946, allotments amounting to $1,560,000,000 had been made to the Federal Public Housing Authority from appropriations under these authorizations.

Section 303 of the Lanham Act, as amended, authorized the use of income derived from project operations to pay expenses for project operation and maintenance. It also provided for the establishment of a $25,000,000 reserve for expenses in connection with the disposition operations of projects constructed with Lanham Act funds. This reserve has been established from the net income from project operations and sales proceeds from the disposition of terminated war housing. Of this reserve $24,000,000 has been allocated to this program and $1,000,000 to the homes conversion program.

Condensed statement of sources and application of funds for the fiscal years 1947 and 1948

	1947, estimated	1948, estimated
Funds applied:
Acquisition of assets	$37,440,924	$52,142,470
Expenses	55,291,200	50,210,200
Retirement of borrowings and capital	33,441,970	74,824,332
Increase in working capital	23,109,242
Total funds applied	152,283,336	177,177,002
Funds provided:
Realization of assets	71,065,636	109,841,830
Revenues	81,217,700	65,669,800
Decrease in working capital		1,665,372
Total funds provided	152,283,336	177,177,002

Project revenues are estimated in gross for 1948 at $65,669,800, which amount is partly offset by $23,797,800 estimated as direct operating expenses of the projects.

The committee feels that the policies and methods which have been followed by FPHA in disposing of war housing, and especially sales of such housing to mutual ownership groups, are not in the public interest. Legislation is now pending (H. R. 3492) to transfer the entire function of disposing of this housing to another Government agency. The committee endorses the provisions of H. R. 3492 and urges that it be enacted by the Congress at the earliest possible date.

Homes conversion program

The homes conversion program was originated in calendar year 1942, under the provisions of the Lanham Act, and initiated by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Development activities were largely completed prior to the transfer of this program to the Federal Public Housing Authority. Management responsibility was so transferred on August 1, 1944, the concluding development responsibility on July 1, 1945.

The purpose of the program was to provide urgently needed additional housing for war workers by remodeling existing structures, such as large single-family residences, warehouses, factory buildings, and similar structures, into multiple-unit family dwellings, with a minimum expenditure of critical war materials and manpower.

The program was financed in the development stage entirely from war-housing appropriations, at a cost of approximately $90,000,000. Since physical development activities have been completed, there will be no further use of war-housing appropriations except to settle existing obligations. Section 303 of the Lanham Act, as amended, authorizes the use of operating income to meet all operating expenses and to establish a reserve for disposition. Of the total reserve of $25,000,000 so authorized, $1,000,000 has been apportioned to this program. Operating income is adequate to meet all operating expenses and to return to the Treasury a substantial portion of the Government's initial outlay.

Decrease in working capital		298,494
Total funds provided	26,050,300	21,325,394

At the end of the fiscal year 1946 there were 48,296 housing units under management and this figure will probably be reduced to 21,352 at the end of fiscal year 1948.

It is the policy of the Federal Public Housing Authority to negotiate cancellations of leases as rapidly as possible, when—

(1) the property cannot be made to produce a net profit before charges for amortization of capitalized cost; or

(2) the owner desires to obtain cancellation and is willing to purchase the unexpired lease term at a price satisfactory to the Government.

Wherever cancellations are negotiated, a stipulation is made which requires continued occupancy preference for veterans.

It is estimated that from revenue receipts and operating balances $10,263,694 from fiscal year 1947 operations will be returned to the Treasury in 1948, and $9,242,530 from 1948 operations should be returned in 1949.

Veterans' reuse housing program

The acute housing shortage, which became a grave national emergency with the return of millions of men from the armed forces, created severe hardship for veterans and their families unable to obtain shelter. It also caused distress to families of servicemen, and to veterans unable to secure the educational benefits provided by law because of the lack of housing at schools and colleges. The Congress therefore added title V to the Lanham Act on June 23, 1945, and amended that title December 31, 1945. An additional authorization to provide temporary housing for veterans was granted in Public Law 336, approved March 28, 1946. Under the authority contained in title V, the Federal Public Housing Authority is providing temporary housing for veterans and servicemen to local governments, educational institutions, local public agencies, and nonprofit organizations. This is accomplished by relocation or conversion of existing federally owned structures, including Federal Public Housing Authority temporary war housing and surplus facilities, such as barracks and quonset huts obtained from other Federal agencies without reimbursement. Re-use makes temporary housing available quickly and at a minimum cost, and conserves new building materials for permanent residential construction. Reimbursement is made under title V to local bodies that had incurred relocation expenses in providing temporary housing for veterans' re-use prior to the act of December 31, 1945, and for those local bodies desiring to develop their entire projects.

On December 28, 1945, the Congress appropriated $191,900,000 to the National Housing Agency to carry out the purposes of title V and supplemented this by an additional appropriation of $253,727,000 on April 22, 1946, making a total of $445,627,000. A total of $436,697,814 is to be transferred to the Federal Public Housing Authority to provide temporary dwellings for veterans.

It is hoped to provide through Federal financing and within the available funds, approximately 180,800 temporary dwelling accommodations through the re-use of federally owned structures. About 9,600 accommodations were provided by local bodies, which undertook removal and re-use prior to the appropriation of funds for this program and the local bodies will be reimbursed. Local bodies desiring to develop their entire programs on a reimbursable basis are expected to provide approximately 700 accommodations. The balance of 170,500 federally financed accommodations are being developed by the Federal Public Housing Authority under contracts with local bodies.

After giving effect to anticipated project net income, projected operations result in net program losses amounting to $360,645,142 and $54,340,626 respectively for the fiscal years 1947 and 1948. The bulk of the direct program costs are incurred during the fiscal year 1947. Project costs are carried on the books of account as assets until title to the projects is transferred to the local bodies, at which time the assets are written off and the loss is recorded.

Completion of the program has been seriously retarded by shortages of the materials and equipment required to place the reused structures in livable condition. Costs have risen substantially over original estimates as the result of: (1) Inability to secure the contemplated number of surplus temporary war-housing structures, because of continued high occupancy, thus leading to a greater use of surplus military structures, (2) delays in delivery of materials and equipment and lack of adequate labor supply, and (3) increase in labor rates and in costs of materials and equipment.

Defense Homes Corporation

The Defense Homes Corporation was incorporated under the laws of the State of Maryland on October 23, 1940, by direction of the President. Executive Order 9070 transferred the Corporation and its capital stock to the National Housing Agency to be administered by the Federal Public Housing Authority. The purpose of this organization was to provide housing accommodations of a permanent nature in defense areas for use by defense workers during the emergency, such housing to be disposed of subsequent to the emergency at prevailing market prices.

The Corporation is expected to have accomplished total liquidation of its assets by June 30, 1947. The Federal Public Housing Authority informed the committee that the Corporation would probably return to the Treasury as profits from operations and disposition of assets an amount in excess of $5,000,000. However, the committee has been informed that sales of some of the larger housing units of the Corporation were not made for cash, but on the basis of the Corporation's receiving a relatively small cash payment and notes covered by purchase money mortgages. These notes extend for many years, and in view of the type of construction involved it is felt that any computation of profits should be deferred until the notes are paid or sold. Inasmuch as the Corporation owes a substantial sum in the form of notes to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and since the Reconstruction Finance as principal creditor has a claim against the assets of the Corporation, the committee has provided in the bill that all the capital stock of the Defense Homes Corporation shall be transferred to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Provision has also been made for the transfer to the RFC of all assets, liabilities, and records of the Corporation. The RFC is to have full charge of the liquidation, including selection of personnel to be used for that purpose. This should result in the taxpayers getting an accurate picture of the net results of the Defense Homes Corporation when it is completely liquidated.

Instead of the budget estimate of $12,300 for administrative expenses in 1948, the committee has provided an amount not to exceed $3,000 which is to be available for payment of terminal leave only.

United States Housing Act program

The United States Housing Authority, which was transferred to the Federal Public Housing Authority under Executive Order 9070, was created on September 1, 1937, by Public Law 412 to provide low-rent housing for families of low income who could not otherwise afford decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings. This basic act, known as the United States Housing Act of 1937, authorized the authority to make loans to local public housing agencies to aid in financing slum clearance and the development of low-rent housing projects. To bring rents in the completed dwellings within financial reach of families in the lowest income groups, the Authority was empowered to make limited annual contributions, provided that the community would also make contributions toward the operation of the projects.

An important amendment to this act was added by Public Law 671, approved June 28, 1940. Under this amendment the unused portion of the borrowing authorization provided in the United States Housing Act of 1937 was made available for the construction of permanent housing to be used primarily for housing war workers for the duration of the war. In accordance with this purpose, the projects initiated under Public Law 671 have been occupied chiefly by war workers who pay prevailing rents for comparable accommodations. On a Presidential finding that such projects are no longer needed for housing war workers, however, the projects are required to be converted to low-rent use. Most of these projects have already received Presidential approval for conversion. As private housing becomes available for occupants whose incomes exceed the maximum allowable for tenants in low-rent projects, these occupants will be replaced by low-income families. These projects will then be on a basis of operation comparable to that of Public Law 412 projects.

An addition to the locally owned low-rent program is possible through the sale of federally owned permanent war-housing projects developed under the Lanham Act, Public Law 849, approved October 14, 1940. The Lanham Act requires the disposition of all war-housing projects but permits transfers for low-rent use only when specifically authorized by Congress. In keeping with this provision of the act, it is the intention of the Federal Public Housing Authority to request authority of Congress for such transfers in those cases in which a community, through its local housing authority, desires to take over a project suitable for low-rent housing and the local government approves and supports the request.

Besides the locally owned projects which constitute the greater part of the low-rent program, the Federal Public Housing Authority has under management some federally owned projects. The main group of federally owned housing projects consists of those developed by the Public Works Administration Housing Division, which were subsequently transferred to the Authority by the President under a provision of the United States Housing Act. This transfer was effected under Executive Order 7732, dated October 27, 1937. The Public Works Administration projects were constructed by the Federal Government with appropriated funds, and consequently the capital cost of these projects is not repayable. They are operated in the same manner as locally owned low-rent projects, except that they are not eligible for annual contribution subsidies nor are any necessary since no debt service is required.

Another group of federally owned housing projects consists of Public Law 412 projects in Ohio. The Federal Government had to take title to these projects as a result of a decision by the Ohio Supreme Court, which denied tax exemption and eliminated the local contributions required under the United States Housing Act. These projects will return to local ownership when State legislative action is taken to permit their operation in accordance with the Housing Act.

Federally owned projects also include a small group of Public Law 671 projects. In order to expedite construction of housing urgently needed during the war, it was necessary for the Federal Government to engage in some direct construction under Public Law 671. These projects will be sold to local housing authorities for low-rent use, but it is not possible to finance the sale of the entire group of projects because of the legislative limitation on the amount of annual contributions that may be committed. As long as the Public Law 412 Ohio projects and the Public Law 671 projects remain under Federal ownership, they are not eligible for annual contributions.

The Authority was created as a "body corporate of perpetual duration" with $1,000,000 in capital stock subscribed by the Treasury. The United States Housing Act, as amended, provides a borrowing and a lending power amounting to $800,000,000 and limits the total annual contributions for which the Authority may contract to a maximum of $28,000,000 per year. Funds borrowed by the Federal Public Housing Authority under Public Law 412 were to be used for loans to local housing authorities covering not more than 90 percent of the development cost of individual housing projects. The Public Law 671 war amendment permitted loans to cover 100 percent of the development cost or direct construction by the Federal Government.

By June 30, 1946, the Authority had borrowed $398,000,000, of which $38,000,000 had been repaid, leaving $360,000,000 outstanding. Long-term loans of $348,097,000 had been made to local housing authorities, of which $71,045,000 had been repaid by refunding operations and $1,408,000 by advance repayments. Another $2,507,217 was outstanding on short-term advance loan notes. Thus, the outstanding balance of loans receivable from local housing authorities, as of June 30, 1946, amounted to $278,151,217. An amount of $41,120,540 had been used for direct Federal Public Housing Authority construction of war-housing projects under Public Law 671. From private sources local housing authorities had obtained $376,990,000. This amount is made up of $147,594,000 in bonds and $229,396,000 in temporary-loan notes, secured by a Federal Public Housing Authority pledge to redeem them at maturity, if necessary. The total paid-in capital of $195,596,284, as of June 30, 1946, consists of capital stock amounting to $1,000,000, funds and property transferred from the Public Works Administration Housing Division amounting to $140,746,284, and cumulative appropriations for the payment of annual contributions on low-rent projects in an amount of $53,850,000.

The major activities under the United States Housing Act program may be divided into two groups: (a) Those connected with the development and capital financing of low-rent projects; and (b) those concerned with the management of projects and the payment of subsidies in the form of annual contributions.

Development and capital financing operations

Locally owned project—Public Laws 412 and 671: Under the United States Housing Act, low-rent-housing activities are primarily a subject for local determination and control, the role of the Federal Government being limited chiefly to providing technical and financial assistance. Accordingly, title to locally owned projects and primary responsibility for their operation rests with local housing authorities established under the laws of the political subdivisions in which they are located.

Federal assistance can be provided only under conditions prescribed by the United States Housing Act. The local housing authority is required to establish that the locality has a real need for public low-rent housing; ascertain that at least 10 percent of the development cost can be financed from private capital; provide, by tax exemption, a local subsidy equal to at least one-fifth of the annual contribution to be provided by the Federal Public Housing Authority; assure the elimination of one slum unit for every new dwelling unit built; observe statutory dwelling cost limitations; and provide for an economical system of management operations. The local authority must also select and acquire a suitable site, secure proper zoning, prepare site and architectural plans, award the construction contract to the lowest responsible bidder, and supervise and inspect construction.

In furnishing technical and financial assistance, the Federal Public Housing Authority is responsible for reviewing and inspecting the operations of local authorities to assure compliance with the act. The Authority exercises this responsibility by enforcing the provisions of contracts under which it provides loans and agrees to pay annual contributions. The loans to local authorities bear interest at the rate of one-half of 1 percent above the going Federal rate on long-term bonds. Financial aid in the form of short-term loans is made available to local authorities during the early phases of project development. Permanent financing, which normally occurs after construction is approximately 75 percent complete, is accomplished by the sale of two types of bonds—A bonds sold to private investors on the basis of competitive bids and B bonds sold to the Federal Public Housing Authority for the balance of the development cost. The entire loan and annual contribution authorizations provided in the act have been committed, but actual construction of a number of projects was deferred because of the war.

Approximately 90 percent of the short-term financing requirements during fiscal years 1947 and 1948 will be supplied by private investors at lower interest rates than the Federal Public Housing Authority is required by law to charge. The Authority's participation in short-term financing is estimated to be $2,396,750 in fiscal year 1947 and $3,568,250 in fiscal year 1948.

Refinancing of Public Law 412 projects now permanently financed will have a net effect of reducing the Federal Public Housing Authority's B bond holdings by $21,610,000 in fiscal year 1947 and $2,200,000 in fiscal year 1948. Net refunding operations are expected to decline to $2,200,000 during fiscal year 1948 since the Authority's efforts, insofar as permanent financing operations are concerned, will be directed toward the permanent financing of Public Law 671 projects. By June 30, 1948, it is anticipated that all the Public Law 671 projects with fiscal years beginning October 1 and January 1 will be permanently financed and also 75 percent of those with fiscal years beginning April 1 and July 1. This will result in the purchase of $5,256,000 of B bonds during fiscal year 1947 and $15,036,000 in fiscal year 1948. Emergency corrections of war-caused construction deficiencies will also necessitate the purchase of an estimated $300,000 of B bonds during fiscal year 1947 and $300,000 during fiscal year 1948. It is estimated, further, that there will be permanent financing of reactivated projects in fiscal year 1948 which will result in the purchase of $176,000 of B bonds.

The net effect of all anticipated transactions in B bonds will be a decrease of $16,054,000 as of June 30, 1947, and an increase of $13,312,000 as of June 30, 1948.

Federally owned projects: No new direct development by the Federal Public Housing Authority is contemplated, but there will be an estimated expenditure of funds amounting to $3,575,782 in fiscal year 1947 and $1,437,492 in fiscal year 1948 for the liquidation of outstanding obligations, for final contract settlements, and for emergency corrections of war-caused deficiencies.

Management operations

Locally owned projects—Public Laws 412 and 671: As in the case of development operations, the local housing authority is required in the management of these projects to observe certain rules which are concerned with the eligibility of tenants, with rent-income ratios, with standards of physical operation and maintenance, and with accounting practices. The Federal Public Housing Authority reviews management operations of the local housing authority and audits its books to assure compliance with these rules.

Low-rent projects owned by local authorities have three sources of income: (a) rental income, (b) a contribution by the local community, and (c) a Federal annual contribution. Rental income of the projects depends upon the rent-paying ability of the tenants, since a system of graded rents varying according to family income is generally used. In normal low-rent operation, the rental income is not sufficient to meet the project expenses, including operating costs, payment of interest, and amortization of capital costs. This deficit is met by the local and Federal contributions. The contribution by the local community is in the form of tax remission or exemption and represents the difference between full normal taxes and the actual payment in lieu of taxes made by the project. The remainder of the deficit is met by the Federal Government, with the limitation that the local contribution must be at least 20 percent of the Federal contribution and the limitation that the Federal contribution may not exceed the maximum contribution set in the contract for financial aid. In all cases the maximum Federal contribution that may be paid is an amount equal to the yield at the going Federal rate of interest at the time the contract is made plus 1 percent upon the total development cost of the project.

The Federal annual contribution actually paid equals the operating deficit of a project, after giving effect to the local subsidy. The operating deficit is determined by subtracting the total income from the total expenses. Total expenses consist of operating expenses; amounts reserved in the period for repairs, maintenance, and replacements, and for vacancy and collection losses; and the amounts expended for debt service and payments in lieu of taxes.

Thus an increase in the amount of operating expenses and other items that are deducted from rental income of and local contributions to local housing projects, results in a proportional increase in the amount of contributions which the Federal Government is expected to pay to maintain their low-rent character.

It has been ascertained that there is some laxity in checking on the income of tenants in low-rent projects. (See pp. 314–316 of pt. 2 of the hearings.) Failure to assess every tenant the amount of rent he should pay based on his current income results in raising the amount of the Federal contribution. A large amount of impounded liquid funds is being held by the authorities of local housing projects as reserves which have been built up and continue to increase as charges to operating expenses, thereby increasing the Federal contribution. These reserves aggregate at least $40,000,000. The various categories are working capital reserve, reserve for repairs, maintenance, and replacements, reserve for vacancy and collection losses, debt service reserve, reserve for working capital, reserve for operating improvements, and reserve for contingencies. Statements describing these reserves are to be found beginning on pages 106 and 321 of part 2 of the hearings. While charging these reserves as expenses is permitted under the contracts between FPHA and the various local housing projects, such practice is not expressly authorized by law with respect to locally owned housing projects. Although the general counsel of FPHA has submitted an opinion contending that these reserves are legally authorized (p. 266 of pt. 2 of the hearings) the committee feels that such policy is of doubtful legality. In any event the committee cannot subscribe to the payment of full contributions to local projects holding reserves which are beyond all proportion to the financial requirements for maintaining their low-rent character. Accordingly, a limitation has been imposed upon the appropriation for the payment of contributions in the fiscal year 1948, requiring that no contribution shall be paid to a local project unless the amount otherwise due or payable is reduced by one-half the amount of reserves outstanding on its books. Also, the budget estimate of $7,200,000 for the appropriation for payment of Federal contributions has been reduced by the committee to $2,200,000. The committee recommends that the proper legislative committee undertake a thorough study and review of this entire reserve policy with a view to recommending any legislation which may be necessary to enforce the intent of the Congress in this matter.

Another policy of the FPHA permits local housing projects to make voluntary payments in lieu of taxes in excess of the rate specified in its contract up to 10 percent of what is designated as shelter-rent. This practice, the committee feels to be of doubtful propriety and legality, and it has been provided in the bill that the funds appropriated for contributions cannot be used for payments to local projects making payments in lieu of taxes in excess of the rate specified in the original contract with FPHA. Information regarding payments in lieu of taxes is to be found beginning on pages 202, 232, 252, and 317 of part 2 of the hearings.

Owning to the doubtful legality of the afore-mentioned practices, the committee has imposed a further provision on the funds appropriated for contributions to local housing projects whereby all payments of such funds are subject to audit and final settlement by the Comptroller General of the United States. Heretofore the Comptroller General has not had such power with respect to these contributions and could not hold up payments of doubtful propriety. Any question as to the legality of such payments will now be resolved by the Comptroller General.

SUBSISTENCE HOMESTEAD AND GREENTOWNS PROGRAM

Executive Order 9070 of February 24, 1942, transferred to the National Housing Agency (Federal Public Housing Authority) "all functions, powers, and duties of the Farm Security Administration relating to such housing projects as the Administration determines are for families not deriving their principal income from operating or working on a farm." The Farm Security Administration projects were developed out of funds appropriated by section 208 of the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933, and the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. The original purpose of these projects was threefold, (1) to rehabilitate families in distress by providing them with a homestead on which they could supplement income received by seasonal industrial work, (2) to demonstrate a method of redistributing what was considered an overbalance of population in industrial centers by constructing small suburban communities insulated from encroachments by a Greenbelt of farms and forests, and (3) to provide work relief and to increase employment by providing useful projects.

Thirty-one subsistence homesteads, three greentowns (Greenbelt, Greenhill, and Greendale), and eight undeveloped projects were transferred to the Federal Public Housing Authority under Executive Order 9070. In addition a number of loans to cooperative business enterprises connected with these projects, were transferred from the Farm Security Administration. The eight undeveloped projects were immediately declared surplus and turned over to Public Buildings Administration for disposal. The interest of the Federal Public Housing Authority in 16 of the subsistence homestead projects sold to tenant associations prior to the transfer of these projects pursuant to Executive Order 9070 is represented by mortgage holdings. Through June 30, 1946, 1 project of 50 units and 3 individual units had been declared surplus. In addition, 738 individual unit sales had been negotiated. As of July 1, 1946, 14 subsistence homestead projects and 3 greenbelt towns were under direct operation by the Federal Public Housing Authority.

Development of this program was financed from appropriated funds, and assets representing $65,906,689 of such funds were transferred to the FPHA. Administration of these projects is carried on under the terms of the Bankhead-Black Act of 1936, which provides that operating income may be used for operation and maintenance. These funds have also been used to cover disposition expenses, in accordance with annual acts appropriating these operating revenues.

The Federal Public Housing Authority is now in the process of disposing of all units taken over from the Farm Security Administration. Projects are being sold either as units to individual tenants or in their entirety to tenant homestead associations, depending on whether or not maintenance and operation of community facilities is involved. Sales prices are being determined in conformity with commitments made by the agency of the Federal Government which originally had jurisdiction over these projects, or, in the absence of such commitments, are being based on the fair market value of the property. The terms of the sale provide for repayment of the purchase price over a period not to exceed 40 years, with interest at 3 percent. Advance repayments of the principal are being encouraged. Schools, streets, and other public ways will, where appropriate, be dedicated to local governments. Utility installations and community, commercial, and service facilities now owned by the Federal Government will be disposed of in a manner to assure their continued operation. Land and other properties held in connection with the program and not otherwise being disposed of will be declared surplus to the War Assets Administration as rapidly as possible.

As of June 30, 1946, 3 projects of 605 units had been disposed of, while other projects had been partially disposed of to the extent of 136 units. During fiscal year 1946, lease-purchase contracts were executed for 138 individual units, and 1 project of 50 units, made untenable by floods, was declared surplus. During the fiscal year 1947 it is anticipated that lease and purchase contracts will have been executed for 203 units and 516 units will have been sold. Lease and purchase contracts will be executed for 317 units during the fiscal year 1948, and 46 units will be sold. Dedication of community facilities and public ways is expected to be completed during the fiscal year 1947.

No disposition of housing units of the greentowns is contemplated by the Federal Public Housing Authority during the fiscal year 1948. The committee recommends that the appropriate legislative committee give consideration to reviewing the status of these towns and to possible transfer of the duty of their disposal to another Government agency.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation

Economic conditions in the spring of 1933 were such that the demand for farm mortgage credit far exceeded the funds available. To provide additional farm mortgage credit, Congress passed the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, effective May 12, 1933. Section 32 directed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make available to the Land Bank Commissioner the sum of $200,000,000 for the purpose of making loans to farmers on the security of a first or second lien on real or personal property in an amount which, together with prior encumbrances might not exceed 75 percent of the appraised normal value of the property.

With the progress of the lending program of the Commissioner under section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, and of the Federal land banks for their own account, it became apparent that the fund made available to the Commissioner would not be sufficient to meet demands upon it. To meet this situation, the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation was created on January 31, 1934, and began operations almost immediately. The Corporation is authorized to have succession until dissolved by act of Congress.

The Corporation was created for the following purposes: (1) To provide funds for making loans to farmers by the Land Bank Commissioner; (2) to make funds available to the Federal land banks to assist them in their financing during periods of emergency; and (3) to make loans to joint-stock land banks. To accomplish this, the Corporation is authorized to issue and have outstanding at any one time $2,000,000,000 of bonds fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to principal and interest by the United States. Public Law 505, of July 12, 1946, extended the lending authority of the Corporation to July 1, 1947. New loans to farmers will not be made during the fiscal year 1948 unless the lending authority of the Land Bank Commissioner is extended beyond July 1, 1947 by legislation. It is expected that the activities of the Corporation in 1948 will be restricted to a program of liquidation.

Total funds provided	74,064,000	42,432,600

[1] Includes administrative expenses estimated at $3,235,000, and reduced to $2,750,000 by committee.

Although no new loans to farmers are contemplated in 1948, it may be necessary for the Corporation to refinance some loans closed in the name of the Land Bank Commissioner prior to July 1, 1947. Such contingencies are not provided for in the 1948 budget.

The earned surplus of the Corporation as of July 1, 1947, is estimated to be $102,649,340.

Administrative expenses for the fiscal year 1948 were estimated at $3,235,000. This has been reduced by the committee to $2,750,000.

Federal intermediate-credit banks

The 12 Federal intermediate-credit banks were organized pursuant to the Agricultural Credits Act of 1923. The term of existence of the banks is unlimited.

The intermediate-credit banks serve as banks of discount to provide a permanent source of credit for local lending institutions to supply agriculture with the types of credit needed at reasonable rates of interest and with maturities adapted to the normal liquidating seasons of the industry. The banks do not make loans directly to individuals or accept deposits of funds otherwise than as collateral security.

Each intermediate-credit bank operates under the direction of a district farm credit board of seven members, who are ex officio the directors of the Federal intermediate-credit bank, Federal land bank, district bank for cooperatives, and production credit corporation serving the district. Each unit has a separate staff of executive officers and employees, but a general agent and his staff, employed by the district board, serve as joint officers and employees of all four institutions, to coordinate their activities and furnish such services as legal, information, statistical, personnel administration, etc.

The total capital of the 12 banks, $60,000,000, was subscribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and the capital and unimpaired surpluses on June 30, 1946, totaled $92,376,317. It is expected that this figure will reach $94,286,617 by June 30, 1948.

During the year ended June 30, 1946, the banks made loans and discounted paper amounting to $909,298,726 and received repayments of $877,273,257. For 1947, lending activities are estimated at $961,574,100, with repayments of $922,926,900, and for 1948 at $1,007,341,700, with repayments of $985,485,800.

As of June 30, 1946, the banks had outstanding unmatured debentures and notes amounting to $310,895,000 and it is anticipated that these obligations will total $378,112,000 by June 30, 1948.

Production-credit corporations

The 12 production-credit corporations were chartered in 1933 by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration pursuant to the Farm Credit Act of 1933. Establishment of the production-credit system was an outgrowth of various efforts to cure long-standing weaknesses in the short-term agricultural credit field. Experience had shown that insufficient capital, inadequate supervision, and the dependence on local resources generally for loanable funds for agricultural production were the chief weaknesses. These corporations each serve one farm-credit district.

In each district the farm-credit board elected or appointed as prescribed by law serves as the board of directors of the corporation. The principal functions of these corporations are to organize, partially capitalize, and supervise local cooperative production-credit associations. The active associations, of which there were 505 on June 30, 1946, together with the 12 corporations operating under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration constitute a permament system for making short-term agricultural loans to farmers and stockmen in all parts of the country and Puerto Rico.

The initial capital stock of each corporation was provided in the sum of $7,500,000 to be subscribed by the Governor and held by him on behalf of the United States. Payment for capital stock was made from a revolving fund of $120,000,000 provided for the purpose.

Additions to the initial capital stock were made by the Governor until March 1935 when the full $120,000,000 had been subscribed and subscriptions in that sum were maintained for most of the period from that time to March 1944. During that period a general redistribution of capital stock was made on three occasions while transfers affecting several corporations were made on two other occasions.

The capital of the corporations and most of their surplus is invested in class A stock of production-credit associations and in United States Treasury bonds. The income from the corporations' investments is used to pay expenses and to build reserves.

On June 30, 1946, the surplus of all the corporations aggregated $15,558,370, or 15.4 percent of their paid-in capital. This surplus not only safeguards the paid-in capital against impairment but directly influences the amount of paid-in capital required.

Pursuant to the policy of retiring the capital stock or corporations to the extent feasible, repayments were made to the revolving fund in the United States Treasury in the sum of $5,000,000 in April 1944, $6,700,000 in April 1945, and $7,050,000 in May 1946. On June 30, 1946, the aggregate paid-in capital of the corporations was $101,250,000.

The corporations have no specific borrowing authority and have never had occasion to resort to borrowed funds. Each of the corporations is a separate entity and operates within its own financial structure.

Because of the anticipated continued improvement in the financial condition of the production-credit associations through 1948, it is estimated that associations will retire class A stock owned by the corporations in an amount sufficient to enable the corporations to reduce their capital stock owned by the Government from $95,950,000 to $91,150,000 and thereby return $4,800,000 to the Treasury of the United States.

The local associations have used accumulated reserves to reduce materially the investment of production-credit corporations in their capital stock. As of January 1, 1947, 12 production-credit associations, having $50,000 or less of their stock owned by production-credit corporations, had fully returned such investment. The rapidity with which the total investment of this nature can be eliminated is affected by the volume of farmers' income generally. The estimate of $1,702,000 for administrative expenses in 1948 has been reduced by the committee to $1,600,000.

Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation

Following an extreme credit stringency during 1930–31, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was created January 22, 1932, with authority to make loans to aid in financing agriculture, either directly or by way of discount or rediscount of obligations. The Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932 extended the power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by authorizing it to establish a regional agricultural-credit corportion in any Federal land-bank district (now Farm Credit Administration district) where the need existed. Under that authority 12 regional agricultural-credit corporations, 1 in each Federal land-bank district, were chartered during September and October 1932, to make loans to farmers and stockmen for agricultural purposes.

These corporations were supervised and controlled by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation until May 27, 1933, when such supervision and control was transferred to the Farm Credit Administration.

As a result of the creation of the production-credit system and the reestablishment of lending by commercial banks it became apparent that in some land-bank districts the lending activities of these corporations could be curtailed and in some cases discontinued without detriment to the farmers. Accordingly, the Farm Credit Act of 1937 authorized the consolidation or merger of the regional agricultural-credit corporations. By a series of mergers these corporations were merged into the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation of Washington, D. C., the only regional agricultural-credit corporation now in existence. The last of these mergers occurred on January 31, 1944.

The capital stock of these corporations has varied in amount from $44,500,000 in 1933 to $100,000, the present capital stock outstanding. In addition to this capital stock which is owned by the Treasury, there is a paid-in surplus of $22,00,000, consisting of various amounts paid in by the, United States. There is a current deficit of approximately $7,700,000.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Office of Inter-American Affairs

Five corporations were created by the Office of Inter-American Affairs to assist in carrying out the programs of this war agency. These were created under authority contained in the Third Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1942, the First Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1943, and the National War Agencies Appropriation Act, 1944, and were transferred to the Department of State by Executive order effective May 20, 1946. All of the corporations were incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware. Prior to the fiscal year 1947, funds were provided from appropriations to the Office of Inter-American Affairs. These corporations have not been operated for profit, and losses reflected in the 1948 budgets represent depletion of capital.

Only two of the corporations, the Institute of Inter-American Affairs and the Inter-American Educational Foundation, will be operating actively in 1948 and the programs of both will be completed during the fiscal year 1949.

The committee has approved the budget estimate of funds to be appropriated for 1948, amounting to $7,000,000 for the Institute of Inter-American Affairs and $1,115,000 for the Inter-American Educational Foundation, which funds are for the payment of obligations authorized by law. Administrative expenses have been reduced from the estimate of $788,000 to $550,000 for the Institute of Inter-American Affairs. The estimate of $400,000 for administrative expenses of the Inter-American Educational Foundation, Inc., has been reduced to $250,000 in the bill.

The Institute of Inter-American Transportation and Prencinradio, Inc., are presently in the process of dissolution. The committee has provided that under the head of administrative expenses funds shall be available only for payment of terminal leave. Provision has also been made that such administrative duties and responsibilities as may be necessary during the course of dissolution are to be assumed by such officers and employees of the Department of State as the Secretary of State may designate and that such persons are not to be paid salaries additional to their departmental pay. A provision has also been included in the bill directing that final dissolution and liquidation of these Corporations is to be carried out as rapidly as practicable.

The Inter-American Navigation Corporation is completely liquidated.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 104 OF THE GOVERNMENT CORPORATION CONTROL ACT

Section 104 of the Government Corporation Control Act (Public Law 248, 79th Cong.) reads:

"SEC. 104. The budget programs transmitted by the President to the Congress shall be considered and, if necessary, legislation shall be enacted making available such funds or other financial resources as the Congress may determine. The provisions of this section shall not be construed as preventing wholly owned Government corporations from carrying out and financing their activities as authorized by existing law, nor shall any provisions of this section be construed as affecting in any way the provisions of section 26 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, as amended. The provisions of this section shall not be construed as affecting the existing authority of any wholly owned Government corporation to make contracts or other commitments without reference to fiscal-year limitations."

In reporting H. R. 3660, which became Public Law 248, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments made the following statement (H. Rept. 856, 79th Cong., p., 12) in explaining the procedure to be followed under section 104:

"It is contemplated that the budget programs as transmitted by the President to the Congress would include, as in the case of estimates of appropriations, language suitable for enactment as the authorizing legislation. Such programs, would be referred to the House Committee on Appropriations and, after hearings, be reported to the House, in the form of (1) simple authorizing legislation, showing that the Congress had considered and approved by the budget program but not setting a limitation on the corporate financial activities other than that provided by substantive law, or (2) legislation incorporating such specific limitations as necessary to enforce the will of Congress in the carrying out of the corporate financial activities or to conform such activities to the general financial program of the Government."

The Senate committee in reporting the same bill after its passage by the House (S. Rept. 694, 79th Cong., p. 5) made the following statement:

"The Congress will consider these budget programs and enact legislation making available such funds or other financial resources, with such directives and limitations, as it may deem necessary. In this manner Congress will for the first time have a systematic procedure for annually scrutinizing and passing upon the budgets of the Government corporations as it now does for the regular agencies of the Government."

The language of section 104, as it has been interpreted, leaves substantial doubt of the authority of the Committee on Appropriations to report to the House limitations on the activities and programs of the Government corporations, so the committee has included in the bill, for consideration by the House, a redraft of section 104 which will clarify the situation and put the Congress, in consideration of the annual budgets of the corporations, in position to place such limitations on the use of corporate funds as may be necessary to carry out the will of the Congress. It is not the committee's purpose or desire to go beyond the intention of the committees which wrote the original legislation as expressed in their reports quoted above. The committee does believe, however, that in view of the interpretations which have been placed on section 104, it is necessary to amend the section if it is to give effect to the intention of the act. Consideration of two annual budgets of the corporations brings the Committee on Appropriations to the conclusion that an annual review of the fiscal activities of the corporations is just as important as an annual review of the fiscal activities of administrative agencies. To clothe a Government corporation with broad powers extending over a long period of years is to place that corporation in position to carry on activities to a degree and in a manner not consonant with the general condition of the Federal finances and which may be entirely out of tune with the policies of the Congress. The Congress is the policy-making branch of the Government and, as such, cannot delegate that power unrestricted over a long period of time without surrendering an important function necessary to be retained if the Congress is to give the kind of attention to the people's business which the Constitution contemplates.

The Federal Treasury is no bottomless pit, and the present staggering debt, $258,000,000,000, makes it imperative that the Congress keep within its immediate control on a year-to-year basis all possible drains on the Treasury. To distinguish between administrative agencies for which direct appropriations are made annually and the corporations which are said to operate on their own funds but which in reality acquire those funds by drawing on the Treasury of the United States and to permit such corporations to draw on the public purse ad libitum is, in the judgment of the committee, somewhat illogical. A Government corporation is a Government agency, and if Government agencies should be restricted in their use of Federal funds, then the corporations cannot be left out of control.

MIXED-OWNERSHIP GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS

The requirements of the Government Corporations Control Act for the submission of annual budgets are applicable to wholly owned Government corporations only. There are certain of the so-called mixed-ownership Government corporations (that is, corporations the stock of which is partially owned by the Government and partially owned by other interests) which, in the judgment of the committee, should be subjected to the same degree of control as the wholly owned Government corporations. The Government's financial stake in them is such that to leave them free of this control is to leave a large segment of the Government's business interests (which could result in heavy drains on the public purse) without the close supervision of the Congress, which can only be obtained through annual budget review.

Therefore the committee has included, as section 308 of the bill, an amendment to section 101 of the Government Corporations Control Act to provide for the submission of annual budgets by (1) the Central Bank for Cooperatives and the Regional Banks for Cooperatives, (2) Federal Home Loan banks, and (3) the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Compliance with clause 2a of rule xiii

The following is submitted in compliance with clause 2a of rule XIII:

EXISTING LAW	IN PENDING BILL
Section 104 of Public Law 248, Seventy-ninth Congress (the Government Corporations Control Act): "SEC. 104. The budget programs transmitted by the President to the Congress shall be considered and, if necessary, legislation shall be enacted making available such funds or other financial resources as the Congress may determine. The provisions of this section shall not be construed as preventing wholly owned Government corporations from carrying out and financing their activities as authorized by existing law, nor shall any provisions of this section be construed as affecting in any way the provisions of section 26 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, as amended. The provisions of this section shall not be construed as affecting the existing authority of any wholly owned Government corporation to make contracts or other commitments without reference to fiscal - year limitations."	Section 307 of the accompanying bill: "SEC. 307. Section 104 of the Government Corporations Control Act (Public Law 248, 79th Cong.) is hereby amended to read as follows: "'SEC. 104. The budget programs transmitted by the President to the Congress shall be considered and legislation shall be enacted making necessary appropriations, as may be authorized by law, making available for use such corporate funds or other financial resources or limiting the use thereof as the Congress may determine and providing for repayment of capital funds and the payment of dividends. Except as provided in such legislation, the provisions of this section shall not be construed as preventing wholly owned Government corporations from carrying out and financing their activities as authorized by existing law, nor as affecting the provisions of section 26 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, as amended. The provisions of this section shall not be construed as affecting the existing authority of any wholly owned Government corporation to make contracts or other commitments without reference to fiscal-year limitations, as such authority may be necessary to the execution of an approved budget program'."

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman's remarks, but I had hoped to ask the gentleman who immediately preceded the gentleman from Mississippi just what recommendation the committee is making on the Inland Waterways Corporation.

Mr. WHITTEN. It is following the report of the Committee on Small Business, which made the investigation. In effect, it amounts to this: The committee declares that the Inland Waterways Corporation should be operated by the Government but only so long as it may be necessary to get private interests to take it over and give assurance that they will carry on in the same way and give the same service as the Federal Government has done. As far as I know, there is no opposition from any side to that position. All of us would prefer that private enterprise rather than the Federal Government operate it, but if the Federal Government does have to operate it to insure the same service, then I do not know of anyone who is opposed to a continuance of its operation by the Federal Government.

Mr. Chairman, much discussion has been had here today with regard to the Tennessee Valley Authority. Sometimes being on a committee charges you with lots of responsibility you would not have if you were not on the committee. Frankly, I do not think there is anyone in the Congress who has any more interest in the operations of the Tennessee Valley Authority than I have. I know of no one who has any higher regard for the splendid job the people who are running it have done in its operation. I realize there are others in the Congress who are not believers in this Authority or that method of meeting the problems of the people of the Nation. There are members of this committee who are opposed to the creation of such authorities, but be it said for the members of the committee who are opposed to this type of approach that they have recognized that it is in operation and that it is a creature of law, that it has authority under the basic law, the legislative act which set it up. Recognizing that, they have cooperated with those others of us on the committee in an effort to work out a plan whereby the TVA could carry out its real responsibility in the Tennessee Valley area and continue to be the great organization it is.

This repayment plan that is provided in this bill, frankly is legislation. I doubt that I would have written it into the basic law. It is an amendment to the Tennessee Valley Act. There are many things in this bill that, if left to me, would not be as they are in the bill, but there are many things that except for the efforts of the majority and the minority to formulate a plan on a workable basis for the continued operations of these corporations would have been much worse than they are under this bill.

The Tennessee Valley Authority recognizes that it is to its interest and to the interest of those in other great river valleys of the country that the TVA amortize the investment in it and that the money be returned to the Federal Government on a workable, satisfactory basis. The bill provides that the TVA shall repay to the Federal Government each year $2,500,000, which it owes on its bonds, and in addition thereto shall pay annually not less than 40 percent of its net profit thereafter. The remainder, as authorized under the basic law creating the TVA, can be used for the improvement of its capital plant. This means that at the end of any period the Federal Government will have a more valuable plant. It also means that so far as the money that was put up by the Federal Government is concerned, it will be returned.

I should like to point out that each year the Tennessee Valley Authority will submit to the Congress its budget, it will show its net earnings, it will show to this committee and through the committee to the Congress how much money it has in its hands and can repay. May I point out also that next year they are repaying under the budget estimate $10,500,000 out of an estimated net profit of $20,000,000. May I also point out that as a protective feature, to see that the TVA is not crippled in any one year, it is provided that these funds must be paid by July 1, 1948, which means that if they should have a dry year and should not be able to make a sufficient profit, to maintain its operations and make payments, which we are glad to say they have made through the years up to this point, it would carry them to the point where the Congress would be in session and relief could be granted if need be.

We have tried, as friends of the TVA, to work out a plan with the majority of the committee. They yielded to that extent. At first some members thought that there should be a minimum payment each year. You can recognize that in some years of drought when the TVA would have to buy large quantities of coal that in such years they might not be able to make any certain definite payment. So the plan of a percentage payment was worked out.

To those Members of the Congress who do not believe in the TVA approach to meeting national problems and who are opposed to the creation of such authorities, I point out that this is an authority which is created by law and is now in operation. It is a stupendous operation. You should be for this repayment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Does my colleague think that this bill is in any way injurious to the Tennessee Valley Authority?

Mr. WHITTEN. I certainly do not. I believe it is also to the interests of those who believe in this type of operation because if we handle this on a sound basis and if they do repay to the Federal Government as they indicate they should and would like to and carry this on a business basis, there is a much better chance for the same type of operation to spread over the great river valleys of this country. To those who are opposed to this type of operation I would say that certainly you cannot be opposed to what the committee has done here, which is to provide for the repayment of the money that the Government has spent, which is that much more than is set out in basic legislation setting up the authority.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Did the committee take into consideration the fact that the TVA and other Government organizations that now own property might have to pay a greater amount of money than they now pay in lieu of taxes and that, therefore, they might not be able to meet this repayment program that has been set up?

Mr. WHITTEN. The repayment program, if you will read it, provides for a minimum charge based on net profit. So if they have no net profit, you can immediately see that they are not required to meet the payments. But for each year of their operation they have had profits, and we can easily anticipate that they will continue to have them, and having it on the basis of their net earnings, in my judgment, would not cripple the TVA.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. The reason I say that is the Committee on Public Lands is holding hearings on how much money Government agencies should pay in lieu of taxes. The gentleman from North Carolina testified before our committee to the effect that the TVA was paying in lieu of taxes on property which it owned in the State of North Carolina at the rate of 12 cents per $100, while taxation on other property was at the rate of $1.32 per $100, and if they were paying the same rate as other groups were paying in lieu of taxes, perhaps they would not have sufficient funds to make the repayments as provided by the committee.

Mr. WHITTEN. I am sorry I cannot answer the gentleman in detail with reference to that matter for the reason that we have not gone into that subject matter. I would like to point out again that this is an appropriation bill. Those who spoke against the rule rather complained about the fact that we were going beyond the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations and to some extent we are. But I am vitally interested in the point the gentleman raises. I believe the Federal Government owns entirely too much land throughout the country and some relief should be granted. But this committee, with regard to the repayment of funds invested thought it was to the interest of the TVA and of the Nation to work this out on a workable basis and insofar as that provision is concerned there is an encroachment on the jurisdiction of the legislative committee.

When you get into all these related and kindred problems, certainly they should go to the legislative committees rather than to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Is it not a fact that the subject matter under consideration, namely, the amortization of the investment in TVA power, was taken up with the TVA authorities, and we attempted to work out a program so that it would not cripple TVA in its functions and operations?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] has expired.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

I may say in that regard that this repayment provision as set out here was not sponsored by the TVA. Last year, at that time the committee—incidentally, under Democratic control—requested in its report that the TVA submit a plan for repayment. The particular plan that is evolved here, I would not want to charge as having been offered by the TVA. But I say, in all fairness to the majority members of this committee, that every effort was made to handle this matter in such a way as not to cripple the operations of the TVA. This action indicates that. While I would not want to take the responsibility for saying it has been approved by TVA, certain modifications were made in the original suggestion of majority members to eliminate what was thought by the TVA to possibly be crippling in effect.

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. But with the full knowledge of the TVA and to the extent that the committee thought they had obtained from the TVA authorities their judgment that it would not cripple the functions of the TVA?

Mr. WHITTEN. That is correct.

Now, again I would like to say that when you get the Federal Government operating through corporations, the very fact of having corporations is so that they can operate in a corporate way. There are many provisions in this bill which, if my judgment had been prevailing in the committee, I would not have made. But when the majority members agreed to go along and protect the right of the corporation to operate in a corporate way, it was my judgment that then I could agree, even though there might be some difference of opinion as to certain cuts in administrative expenses.

This bill is the composite judgment of the members of the committee. There are numerous other subjects carried in the bill. Time will not permit me to discuss them in detail.

With regard to the various corporations operating in the South American and Central American republics, all of the appropriations here are required under prior commitments. The committee only carried on those activities which the Government was committed to, and we provide the funds to carry out those essential activities. The Panama Railroad operates a business. We tried to give them sufficient money to run it in a businesslike way.

Then we come to the field of housing. There are several things that are hard to take, but if anybody will read the hearings before this committee, including the report of the investigators of the Appropriations Committee, you can clearly see why it was that this committee took the action it did with regard to the Federal Housing Administration.

I ask any of you, when you get letters and telegrams from back home, to read volume 2 of the hearings before this committee before you answer them, and you will clearly see why the committee took the action it did.

With regard to the Expediter's office, I, together with others, have in times past voted to continue that office, not so much in the belief that it would lead to correction of the deplorable housing situation but in the hope that it would lead to an improvement of the housing situation. We have tried to operate under this set-up and it has not worked, and the Expediter, recognizing this, has from week to week relaxed control of materials because he could see that the enforcement of it had clearly broken down. When the OPA ended, people over the country in many cases thought that ended all control of materials. The Expediter's office for months has permitted any individual to buy all the critical materials they could and pile them up on a vacant lot, and the CPA would merely reserve the right to withhold a permit to build. Of course, you cannot do anything to improve housing along that line and in that way.

Personally I felt that regardless of the high hopes of the administration and of the friends of housing and those who want to increase veterans' housing—and I think you are bound to reach the same conclusion—that much as they have tried, hard as they have tried and as much money as the Congress has appropriated, it has failed; and to follow the plans of the Expediter's office to let this agency go forward for 6 months longer is just needlessly dragging out that which is no longer doing any good. The Democrats did that with the OPA, over my vote, I might say, and it did the country no good and the party no good.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself two additional minutes.

I believe that with regard to housing we must make some new approach because that which has been made has not worked out. That was the conclusion of the committee in regulating the expenditures. Further, in regard to the FPHA, if you want to understand the basis for the committee action, read volume 2 of the hearings.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi yields back 1 minute.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER].

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the statements of the chairman of the subcommittee and to my colleague the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] and others. I am certain that they have the best of intentions of working out an acceptable arrangement whereby this investment can be amortized over a period of 40 years. Certainly no one ever had any intention that the investment should not be repaid at some time to the Federal Government. However, the plan in this bill is unfair and unsound as I shall point out.

Under the appropriation bill TVA would be required to pay each year as a minimum two and one-half million dollars for bond retirement, plus 40 percent of the balance of its net income. These payments are required to aggregate within the next 40 years $348,239,240, the net amount which has heretofore been invested by the Treasury in TVA power facilities. Any additional appropriations for power facilities are to be amortized in a 40-year period.

These amortization requirements are wholly unnecessary. Under the existing act TVA is required to pay into the Treasury all of its net proceeds not required for conducting its business operations. It cannot divert its proceeds to any other purpose. Without benefit of any compulsory minimum payment requirements TVA, in the last 2 years, has made payments in substantially the amounts which would have been required under the provisions of the bill. In fact, the requirements of the bill are ostensibly based upon TVA's own estimates for the future. However, its effect is to impose a fixed obligation upon the operations which will seriously impair TVA's ability to meet its requirements for expansion in years of unusually high capital requirements. The bill puts TVA in a financial strait-jacket, without securing any assurance thereby that the net amount of Treasury funds invested as of any time will be a single dollar less than would be the case under existing law. On the contrary, by preventing TVA from making expenditures when required in the interest of sound business discretion, the probability is that over the long run TVA will lose opportunities for new business and will be required to make capital expenditures on the basis of low initial cost at the expense of long-term economy. This shortsighted attitude is harmful to TVA, the Tennessee Valley and the power consumers dependent upon TVA, and bad for the United States Treasury.

Congress has given TVA an important responsibility to perform in building up the wealth and resources of the Tennessee Valley area. It must be remembered that as to the power program Congress has applied a double test of TVA performance, not only that it shall operate in the black, but also that it shall operate for the benefit of the people of the valley, that the power from the river projects shall be widely distributed at the lowest possible rates consistent with recovery of cost. The harmonizing of these two requirements, so that neither of them shall be submerged or disregarded, requires a considerable degree of financial latitude from year to year. The bill almost completely ignores the primary responsibility of TVA to contribute to the progress of the Tennessee Valley area. Large fixed payments must be made, regardless of the effect on TVA's ability to fulfill its functions. Congress thus necessarily prejudices the ability of TVA to carry out the governmental program established by the TVA act. There is no necessary conflict between the two requirements, as Congress recognized from the beginning, and as TVA has already demonstrated. TVA can meet both the program and financial tests, if Congress will continue to provide a suitable legislative framework. In the present bill, however, Congress has shortsightedly emphasized the immediate dollar returns, without long-term financial advantage to the Government, and at the expense of program accomplishments.

The 40 percent of net income requirement, together with the requirement that TVA retire its bonds at the rate of not less than $2,500,000 per year, would mean that the actual percentage of net revenues which TVA is required to pay into the Treasury, in the form of bond retirements or as direct cash dividends, would be substantially in excess of 40 percent. With a net income of $20,000,000, as in fiscal 1947, TVA would be required to pay over nine and one-half million into the Treasury, or 47½ percent. If 1947 had been a year of low stream flows, the income could be as little as $5,000,000, in which case the bill would require total payments of $3,500,000, or 70 percent. With a net income of $15,000,000 the bill would require payment of $7,500,000, or 50 percent. These figures show the extent to which Congress has deprived TVA of the money which in some years may be necessary to carry on its business.

The requirements of the bill are far more strict than the committee can justify on any theory. In the hearings, the subcommittee chairman recognized the need for flexibility by suggesting an amortization schedule on a 10-year basis so that the payments into the Treasury could fluctuate from year to year as long as the 10-year payment requirement was met. This flexibility has somehow been lost in the drafting of the bill. In addition to the requirement that TVA pay off a quarter of the power investment in 10 years, under the bill as now written TVA must pay more than 40 percent of its net income in every year. The committee apparently has forgotten that the requirements for new investment will fluctuate within wide limits. It has put TVA in a position where it may not be able to meet its capital requirements in some years even though it may be fully able to pay off the prescribed 10-year amount if it were in position to average the payments in years of low capital requirements with those in years of high capital requirements.

If in years of low capital requirements TVA pays more than the minimums, it must nevertheless pay the minimum amounts in years of heavy capital requirements, so that the average payments are bound to be even higher than those mentioned. Moreover, the largest payments would be made in the first 23 years, when TVA is retiring its bonds, thereafter, the minimum annual rate would drop to a straight 40 percent. It makes no sense to impose heavier burdens on income in the early years of an enterprise, which are characterized by high capital requirements for expansion, than in the later years, when a larger proportion of net income could be used for cash dividends without crippling effect.

There is no justification for basing an amortization schedule for a hydroelectric system on a period as short as 40 years. The dams themselves are virtually geologic structures which will last as long as the hills in which they have been imbedded. The amortization period should not be shorter than the composite life of the major elements of the property, which is 55–60 years. Even these figures are conservative because they involve establishing an arbitrary service life of 100 years for the dams themselves.

In connection with the investment it should be pointed out that a great many of these dams which were built were constructed for war purposes, for the furnishing of power for the quick production of aluminum at Alcoa and for the atomic energy plant at Oak Ridge and that except for the war they would not have been built at that time and would not have been built as rapidly as they were and probably could have been built less expensively. I think the Members of the House ought to know as it has been demonstrated everywhere that things that are built for war purposes or things done for war purposes are usually foreover lost for any other use. They have little salvage value. These dams are also included in the amount of the investment that is amortized and is to be paid off.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. PLOESER. The gentleman does not mean to say that these dams are now lost and cannot be used any more.

Mr. KEFAUVER. No, indeed, they are good dams. My point was that they were built to meet the war needs of that particular time.

Mr. PLOESER. Does the gentleman realize that construction costs are just as high now if not higher than they were then?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Yes. I am just pointing out the great value of these dams to the war effort, but that in spite of this they are also included in the amortization program.

The two great fears I have about this legislation, to be very frank about it, is that if section 26 of the TVA Act is amended by legislation in an appropriation act, then under the rules of the Senate it can be further amended by a simple majority in the Senate; whereas, if there is no legislation in an appropriation bill on section 26 then it would take a two-thirds vote to include legislation in the other body. We all know, of course, the difficult experiences we have had with section 26 with the Senate in the years past.

There are one or two things about legislation on the TVA Act which I wish to discuss. I would like to call the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee to the first paragraph on page 9 reading:

None of the power revenues of the Tennessee Valley Authority shall be used for the construction of new power-producing projects (except for replacement purposes) unless and until approved by act of Congress.

The interpretation I would put on that, and I am sure that is the interpretation of the subcommittee, is that before beginning any new dam or constructing any new steam plant there would have to be a specific authorization from the Congress. That has been the procedure all along. However, I would not want that language construed as preventing the Tennessee Valley Authority from buying a generator, which would be a new generator, and placing it in some of the stalls they already have where they can use additional generators; also if it is necessary to build a distribution place or power line or if it is necessary to make some addition to a dam that is already in existence, raise it or do something with it, I would dislike to see an interpretation placed upon that language that that could not be done without specific authorization from the Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. I think I can give the gentleman some history of that particular provision which will reveal quite clearly that the intent of the provision is not what the gentleman entertains the apprehension it might be. As the bill was first drafted, the word "project" was "facility." I persuaded the subcommittee to change the word "facility" to "project" for the specific reason that a facility might be interpreted to be a much smaller installation, not only a generator but a small part of a generator. By the word "project," I think it is clear that the committee intends, and I believe it to be the legislative intent that it applies only to new multipurpose dams, or a hydroelectric dam or a major steam plant. It is not the intent, as I understand the committee, nor is it the intent of the language nor the portent of that language, that it would be restrictive of the smaller items such as generators, substations, transmission facilities, and other such operative facilities.

Mr. KEFAUVER. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee, also the gentleman from Iowa, and the gentleman from Missouri if they do not think, however, that the language in parentheses in line 5 "except for replacement purposes" somewhat negatives the general idea that has been expressed by the gentleman from Tennessee? I am afraid that the language "except for replacement purposes" might mean they could not put in a new generator unless there had already been a generator at that particular place. In carrying out what the gentleman says is the intent of the committee, and I wish also that a member of the majority would express themselves about it, I wonder if it would not be better to strike out the language in parentheses?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PLOESER. I see no reason for any such amendment. I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] has expressed the committee's intent. The language is rather explicit. "Except for replacement purposes" means maintenance or replacement of facilities that are necessary, or the replacement of machinery which has already been arranged for, not projects. I see no need for the amendment.

Mr. KEFAUVER. For instance, if a generator had not been in some place where there is a place for a generator in a hydroelectric plant, the gentleman does not think that language would prevent them from buying a new generator for a stall that is already there?

Mr. POULSON. I also hope that this language does not hamper the management of TVA. I am glad to have the distinguished representative of Tennessee call the House's attention to the possible danger of the misinterpretation of the wording in this bill. I respect his legal opinion and furthermore have always considered the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] one of TVA's most persistent and able champions.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, I will confine my remarks at this time to the TVA as it is affected by this bill.

To begin with, Mr. Chairman, the TVA is of vast and vital importance to the people I am privileged and honored to represent, but it is far bigger than that. It is of vast importance to all people of the United States; indeed, the TVA, the largest integrated operating utility in the world, is owned by the people of the United States. In it the people have a huge investment—an investment that already has paid attractive dividends and which, I am confident, will continue to be both a profitable and beneficial investment from a narrow dollar-and-cents basis, as well as from a broader viewpoint.

Where are those detractors and doubting Thomases who said that the program would be a failure, that by making appropriations for the TVA we were pouring the people's money down a rat hole? The record belies their calamitous predictions.

What is the record of the TVA? It is first and foremost a record of efficiency, honesty, and fiscal soundness that has been eminently successful.

This agency has been investigated and its accounts audited time after time. No congressional committee or official agency has yet found reason to point a finger of accusation or suspicion at the TVA. It was just last March 17 that the Comptroller General of the United States, our former colleague, Lindsay C. Warren, submitted to the Congress an audit and examination of the Tennessee Valley Authority. I would like to quote from page 7 of his report:

In our opinion, TVA's accounts generally are well conceived, supervised, and maintained, and the Authority is to be commended as one of the foremost Government corporations in the use of accounting in management, comparing quite favorably in this respect with well-managed private corporations.

Insofar as we are qualified to make general observations regarding the character of the management of TVA, and insofar as covered within the scope of our audit, we believe that the management is entitled to the highest commendation for the effectiveness with which the Authority functions and for its accomplishments in carrying out the objectives of the TVA Act.

Let us first examine the record of the TVA power program from a strictly dollar-and-cent investment standpoint. Through the present fiscal year, the TVA power program will have earned a net income, or profit, of $96,563,428, after depreciation. Of this amount $8,527,500 has been used—or by the end of this week will be—to retire TVA bonds which were held by the Treasury and the RFC. Fifteen million fifty-nine thousand and nineteen dollars has been repaid in cash into the general fund of the United States Treasury, plus $5,225,130 paid as interest on bonds. The remainder of net income from power, plus depreciation has been used in the improvements of and additions to TVA power facilities, thereby increasing not only the real and book value of the facility, now a going concern, but increasing, too, the earning capacity of the utility, as has been shown by the rapid accretion in net income earned annually from operations. As a matter of fact, practically one-fourth of the TVA investment in completed power-plant facilities is now represented by earnings by the system itself. This is calculated on actual costs of the power plant now in service, less depreciation, and without regard to higher present-day values and replacement costs. The accumulated earnings of the power program from 1940 to the end of this fiscal year are as follows:

1940	$6,000,000
1941	13,000,000
1942	17,000,000
1943	29,000,000
1944	41,000,000
1945	59,000,000
1946	76,000,000
1947	97,000,000

Sufficient is now known of the present fiscal year operation to show that the TVA will have a net income from its power operations of $20,000,000. It can be seen from the budget submitted by the President that it was anticipated that the TVA would first retire $2,500,000 of its outstanding bonds and, in addition, out of all its proceeds, would pay $8,000,000 into the Treasury in accordance with section 26 of the TVA Act.

So you see, Mr. Chairman, that TVA should be operated profitably and make systematic repayments to the Treasury is not an innovation—not even a new idea. Indeed, it has always been my understanding that the power program of the TVA, once it was a going operating concern, would operate on a business-like basis and would not only pay its way, but reimburse the Treasury for the moneys appropriated for the power program to the end that eventually the people would be reimbursed for their investment, and that they would still own, free of debt, a going concern from which they could expect continued revenue. That is still my conception of the TVA.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think it is entirely unnecessary to write into law a fixed amortization plan. In the committee, I resisted the inclusion of legislation in this appropriation bill, and I regret that the committee decided to do so against my will. The committee having made that decision, I then undertook, as best I could, to work with the committee to the end that nothing seriously harmful to the TVA would be recommended to the House for passage in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three additional minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. What is the amortization plan provided in the bill to begin with? Is it a 40-year period as pointed out here with the requirement that each annual payment must come from the net income of the preceding fiscal year?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. WHITTEN. We have said to the credit of the majority of this committee, it having been determined to include this legislation in this bill that they also cooperated with the gentleman from Tennessee and myself in modifying any plan to the extent of not crippling the operation of the TVA though in some instances they had no particular regard or did not particularly like that type of operation in Government.

Mr. GORE. I agree with the statement of the distinguished and able gentleman from Mississippi, and although I do not see the necessity of writing this kind of thing in the bill and although I am going to support it with reluctance, I think it is fair to say that the proponent of the bill, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, the lovable chairman of this committee, has no intention in his heart or any desire to destroy the TVA, and I must say in all frankness that I do not share the views of those who think it will destroy the TVA.

Mr. WHITTEN. I may say further for the chairman of this committee and other members that they made every effort to see insofar as they could that this was placed on a business basis and cooperated fully in their efforts to modify to any extent that might be necessary to protect the operations of this authority so long as it has been created by law and is a tremendous operation and working very well.

Mr. GORE. I thank the able gentleman. As he pointed out earlier in the debate, at first the proposal was that a fixed dollar repayment would be required each year. That would have allowed for no flexibility. The majority of the committee yielded on that upon the solicitation of the gentleman from Mississippi and myself to put it on a basis of percentage of net income.

What is the amortization plan written into this bill? To begin with, the bill requires that the Government's present investment in the TVA power program shall be repaid to the Treasury within a period of 40 years, starting from now. Then a minimum annual payment is required out of the net proceeds of each preceding fiscal year. Net income is to be in accordance with the usage in TVA accounts and reports as, for example, in schedule B–2, on page 1414 of the Budget of the United States for 1948, which gives a comparative statement of net income from TVA power operations. The annual payments are to be made within 12 months after the end of each fiscal year. Section 26 of the TVA Act, however, fixes December 31 following the end of the fiscal year as the latest date which the TVA can make repayments to the Treasury out of net income. The June 30 date written into the bill, therefore, actually applies to retirement of bonds.

The committee's plan also requires that the total of the annual payments in each 10-year period of the next 40 years shall not be less than one-fourth of the total amount of the $348,000,000 advanced by the Federal Government for power purposes.

The plan also calls for payments during the next fiscal year of not less than $10,500,000, including $2,500,000 for bond retirement, from net proceeds derived from TVA's 1947 operations. This amount corresponds to the amount budgeted by TVA for payment in fiscal year 1948. In other words, this provision merely legally requires the TVA to do that which they had previously planned to do and which is incorporated in the budget of the President.

Now, there is neither dispute nor doubt about the capacity, or, as far as I am concerned, the intent of the TVA power system, to earn the sum required to repay the Treasury investment within the 40-year amortization period. I do not regard 40 years from now as being an unreasonable period within which the TVA power program would be expected to amortize itself. I think it can do so, and I believe it should do so.

This proposed plan for cash payments does not in any way interfere with TVA's use of its receipts or of whatever amounts of proceeds that are required for operating expenses. Inasmuch as the fixed percentage payments are required to be made from net income, TVA retains flexibility insofar as variation in operating expenses are concerned.

In general, the recommendations of the committee have been based upon the expectations expressed by the TVA in a report to the committee which will be found in the record.

The committee has also included in the bill language which would prevent TVA from using its proceeds for building a new power-producing project. As a matter of fact, such language, like the requirement that $10,500,000 be paid within the next fiscal year, is entirely unnecessary. Not only would proceeds be inadequate for such a major expenditure, but section 26 of the TVA Act would not permit the use of earnings for the construction of a multipurpose dam. The TVA has never done so, and has steadfastly expressed no intent or desire to do so. In the past, appropriations by Congress have provided for such structures; and with or without this provision in the bill, it will be necessary for Congress to appropriate funds for any such project in the future, as well as for any single-purpose power dam or a steam plant. TVA can continue to use its earnings under section 26 for generating units in existing plants, transmission lines, substations, transformers, and such other facilities as are required in carrying on the business of marketing the power generated at its projects.

In this connection, I would like to point out that the TVA record of repayment, since repayment of appropriated funds and retirement of bonds to the Treasury from net income began, has approximated or exceeded the level of requirement of this plan. As normal operations continue, it is entirely possible that this plan would work no particular hardships except that, successful operations taken for granted, the repayment of total appropriated and borrowed funds may be required by this plan in a period considerably shorter than 40 years.

Continued successful operation of the TVA taken for granted, it will be noted from the language of the bill before us that a considerable part of the revenue from this immense operation is left by this plan for improvement and accretion of the power program and facilities. The fact that this Congress, particularly this Congress, reaffirms this principle, is on the credit side of the committee proposal. Too, the plan gives implicit recognition that further appropriational investment must be made in the TVA program, as you will note in the paragraph beginning on line 19 of page 8 of the bill. This, too, is to the credit side of the proposal. This is true because it is certain that additional capital investment in power-producing projects will be necessary, perhaps sooner than even I now think, in order to supply the needs and demands for electrical energy in this great and rapidly developing region.

I have been in the communities, the workshops, and homes of the valley. I have seen a steady growth of washing machines, of electric irons, milking machines, electric lights, and running water in the farm homes and barns. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have seen the standard of living in the area steadily rising and we have by no means seen the end. Our need for additional power-producing projects, perhaps very soon, is certain.

Now where are we to turn for further investment in this program? Only to the working partnership between the Congress and the people of the TVA region. The people of the Tennessee Valley have accepted wholeheartedly and with gratitude this great experiment in regional development. The cooperation of local governments has been without stint and without exception. The desire to make of TVA a success has been well nigh unanimous. True, the people of the region have benefited. Their burden has been made a little lighter, and their hopes brighter, but the country as a whole has benefited, too, not only from the attractive returns from the investment, as I have pointed out, but in a much bigger way in development of production capacity of a vast region. Perhaps it will be pardonable if I recall with pride that at a critical time during the war the TVA was furnishing electrical energy that was producing 51 percent of all the aluminum that went into all of our airplanes. TVA also furnished the power for the Oak Ridge plant that manufactured the atom bomb. These two dramatic examples are, however, but a part of the great contribution to victory which stemmed directly from this agency and from the people of the region. So you see, Mr. Chairman, the people of the valley of the Tennessee look with confidence to a continuation of the mutually beneficial partnership in this regional development. That development has been phenomenal and has enured to the benefit of all America. But, Mr. Chairman, we have not seen the end. As I have pointed out, it is inevitable that further investment for the people through the Congress will be necessary. We have not in the past, nor do we plan in the future, to ask for this investment on any other than a business basis—the basis of regional development and the basis of sound and profitable operation.

I recognize that there are some people who do not share my confidence in the TVA and its administration—and some of them are Members of the present Congress. If the writing of this amortization plan into law will better satisfy my colleagues, particularly my Republican colleagues, as to the soundness and efficacy of this great program with which the future of my people is so inseparably intertwined, then that, too, is to the credit of this proposal. I hope you will pardon me if I say in all good humor that I think the Democrats will recapture control of the Congress next year. But I concede that it is not yet definitely settled—a few districts are yet to be heard from. So it is within the realm of possibility that future development of the TVA program, and therefore the region which it serves, may depend upon the degree of confidence that my colleagues to my left have in the soundness of the investment from a strictly dollar-and-cents basis.

The committee plan, however, is not without danger. The danger of writing a fixed amortization plan into law lies in rigidity of legal language, on the one hand, and on the uncertainty of climatic conditions, business cycles, and other unpredictable qualities of the future on the other. I think this danger is particularly involved in the annual minimum repayment required by the committee plan, even though such minimum is only required out of net income. In a good year, I do not now conceive that it will work any great hardship on the program. But in a bad year, that is in a year in which the net income of the TVA would be small, a hardship and an interference with sound operations might result if, at the same time, average or above-average additions to and improvements of facilities are required to meet utility demands of the area.

Also in this connection, I would like to call attention to the fact that the annual cost of producing TVA power can theoretically vary as much as $15,000,000 as between a very dry year and a year of abundant rainfall. Such wide variation has not been experienced since the TVA program has been in operation, but such a variation in rainfall has been a matter of record. In the event of a year of low precipitation, the TVA hydroelectric power must be supplemented by steam plant production which considerably increases the cost of producing power, and would, therefore, materially reduce net income from operations. So, I doubt the advisability of the minimum annual payment provision of this amortization plan, but in amelioration, it can be said that if such a hardship should occur, the Congress could, and I have no doubt would, make such adjustments in the per period requirements as would permit sound economy and businesslike operations of this very great business, owned by all the people, and so vital to a great region of America.

Mr. Chairman, I have discussed as frankly as is within my capacity the amortization plan contained in this bill, but there are two very, very important reasons, which I have not yet mentioned, why I am not going to oppose this bill on the floor today. One is that in the absence of such an understanding there is reason to believe the TVA might have fared much worse, not only with respect to the amortization plan, but in appropriations also. And, second, it is my understanding that in consequence my colleagues on the committee will resist disastrous amendments to the TVA now pending before another legislative body.

No one in Congress or out could possibly be more concerned that the TVA program have a high standard of operational efficiency than I. If, because of cheap politics, or for any other reason, it should become inefficient and extravagant, the people in the TVA region would be first to suffer. True, all the people of the United States would suffer from the inefficiency in the impairment of their investment and in the impairment of the program of development of a vast area of the United States. But the people in the valley of the Tennessee themselves would be the most directly affected. For it would be they who would receive poorer utility service and at higher rates. Future industrial and economic development of the region is inescapably tied to the success of the TVA.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, as my colleagues on this committee know, I have and will steadfastly demand efficiency and businesslike procedures and economy in the operation of the TVA and nonpartisan consideration of the agency problems.

I turn now to the appropriation features of the bill as related to the TVA. The budget requested an appropriation of $27,000,000 plus for all phases of the TVA program. From this amount the committee has cut approximately $5,000,000 in appropriation funds. I, of course, regretted to see any cuts made in this particular appropriation. I say this, not to indicate that I am lacking in desires to see economy practiced by the Government. I say it because I believe that the budget of the TVA had been pared to the extent below which no sizable reductions could be made in terms of true economy—unless it be in the case of appropriations for the construction of the South Holston Dam, where it is possible to defer certain items from the next fiscal year to the following fiscal year without affecting the completion date of the dams.

The committee has cut $2,000,000 from the budget estimate of $5,000,000 for continuation of construction of the Watauga and South Holston Dams. This $2,000,000 reduction would result in a deferral to fiscal year 1949 of certain necessary work at South Holston, originally scheduled for the coming fiscal year.

Work on the Watauga project is now at a peak stage and any slowing down in fiscal year 1948 would seriously delay the scheduled completion.

Since South Holston is in the earlier stages of construction there is more flexibility in the schedule and more chance to make up lost time. The work proposed for fiscal year 1949 can be intensified and the scheduled date for completion of the South Holston project in calendar year 1951 can be met provided that there is an increase in the 1949 funds corresponding to any reduction made in the 1948 funds.

The activities which would be deferred at South Holston consist largely of the relocation of the State highway in the reservoir area and the placing of orders for the generating equipment. This highway relocation work includes 7 miles of heavy road construction and a large bridge to replace portions of Tennessee State Highway No. 34, which will be flooded by the reservoir. It is probable that the placing of orders for certain parts of the generating equipment could be deferred until the first of fiscal year 1949 if delivery conditions improve, and still obtain deliveries which would not endanger the scheduled date for power production.

Under the curtailed program, work on the construction of the access roads and bridges at South Holston would be started about August 1947; the installation of compressed air, water, and electric utilities together with other construction plant facilities at the damsite would be started in the spring of 1948; excavation and concreting of the stilling basin at the outlet of the diversion tunnel, stripping of the damsite, and other work in preparation for diverting the river would follow.

The budget estimate of $8,600,000 for chemical-plant construction has been reduced by $2,000,000. To indicate with what regrets and disappointment I have seen the committee take this action, I have but to point to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the time the fertilizer program was being considered last year, at which time, I advocated as vigorously as I could appropriations to greatly expand the TVA fertilizer program by the construction of a fertilizer plant at Mobile, Ala. On the other hand, I find considerable satisfaction in the fact that this bill does appropriate $6,686,000 for chemical-plant construction which will greatly improve the TVA facilities for vigorous and progressive research, experimentation, and production of highly the rapid depletion of which has already created a major problem, and I fear concentrated fertilizers which are so direly needed by the soils of America, in the future will create a problem of much more grave concern.

The largest item to be eliminated by this $2,000,000 reduction will be $1,000,000 intended as a contingency against the possible failure of the nitric-acid towers which are an essential part of the ammonium nitrate plant. These towers were built in World War I and have already outlived their normal period of usefulness. The item would not be spent unless needed. With the elimination of this item, TVA now faces the possibility that if the towers should fail it would be necessary to close down all or a part of the ammonium nitrate fertilizer operations upon which thousands of farmers are dependent in order to produce the food required in the world food emergency. Two hundred thousand dollars represents reduction of the estimate for equipping the nitrate plant to use natural gas. The use of natural gas, if available, would mean substantial saving in the cost of producing ammonium nitrate at Muscle Shoals. With a reduction in the funds for the necessary conversion, TVA faces the possibility of not being ready to use natural gas with the promptness which considerations of economy would require.

Deferral of construction of fluorine-recovery plants in connection with fused tricalcium phosphate and sintering operations at Godwin, Tenn., $390,000. The fluorine which would be recovered has high value in industrial processes and as an insecticide, and there seems to be an excellent chance that all or a large part of the cost of recovery would be liquidated by the sale of recovered by-products. Likewise, the installations would have a substantial value to TVA in preventing any possible claims for crop and livestock damage on account of fluorine fumes.

Elimination of provision for beginning a diammonium phosphate plant, $200,000. This plant would produce on a larger scale a highly concentrated fertilizer under a process which has already proved successful in pilot-plant operations. The product contains nitrogen in addition to a high concentration of phosphorus. The Muscle Shoals plant is particularly adapted to manufacture this product since it produces both ammonia and phosphoric acid.

Elimination of provision for beginning a ferrophosphorus limestone plant, $210,000. This plant would utilize by-product materials now largely wasted by converting them into an animal-feed supplement badly needed to supply the demand for animal feeds with high mineral content. Appreciable economy in phosphate operations would be secured through the sale of this material.

I am sorry indeed that this reduction has been made in the fertilizer program, but I consider ourselves lucky to be receiving an appropriation of $6,686,000 for additions to chemical plants.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

TVA—GREATEST DEVELOPMENT OF ANCIENT OR MODERN TIMES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, nothing could be closer to my heart than the Tennessee Valley Authority.

I was coauthor of the bill that created the TVA in 1933. There was a House bill introduced by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] which passed the House, but we struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted the Norris-Rankin bill, introduced by my distinguished friend from Nebraska, Senator Norris, and myself. That bill finally became law.

Under the House bill we could never have built another dam until we had found a market for the power. That meant we never could have built another dam at all.

We could not have built a power line under the Hill bill until we exhausted all our efforts to ship this power over private power lines, which simply meant that we would have been left with only one dam on the Tennessee River, Muscle Shoals, the power companies would have had the power produced there, the people would be paying exorbitant rates, and the farmers of the area would be getting no electricity at all.

At that time power was being sold by the party in power, which is the party in the majority in this House now, to the power company at Muscle Shoals at a little less than 2 mills a kilowatt-hour, while the people within sight of the dam were paying 10 cents a kilowatt-hour for that power for domestic use and the average consumer used less than 40 kilowatt-hours a month.

Today, the municipalities and cooperative power associations throughout the area are paying the TVA 4.29 mills a kilowatt-hour for power and delivering it to domestic users at an average of 1.56 cents a kilowatt-hour; and instead of using an average of 40 kilowatt-hours a month, they are using an average of 209 kilowatt-hours a month.

That 209 kilowatt-hours costs them less today than the 40 kilowatt-hours did in 1933, although the TVA is getting more than twice the wholesale rate the power companies were paying the Government at Muscle Shoals at the time the TVA was created.

The hydroelectric power of this Nation is the greatest wealth we possess, outside of the soil from which we live. When I first came to Congress, the American people were purchasing and using 40,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity a year. At that time they told us we had all the power we needed. That was the argument they put up against creating the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Last year the country used over 200,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours, or about five times as much as they used then, and the demand is greater today than it ever was before.

At that time we had no rural electrification. If it had not been for the creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority, in my opinion, we would have no rural electrification, to amount to anything, today.

One thing that actuated me in introducing the bill to create the TVA was to get this power distributed to the farmers of the area, especially throughout the district I represented.

My success in that respect has far exceeded my expectations. Every precinct in the 10 counties I represent gets TVA power at TVA rates. While we have not been able to reach every farmer in the district, we are moving rapidly in that direction. Thousands of farmers in the district are enjoying the use of TVA power who 15 years ago never dreamed of getting electricity in their homes.

At the time TVA was created, less than 10 percent of the farms of this country were receving any electricity at all, while as I have explained to you, in the average European country, outside of Russia, more than 90 percent of the farms were electrified. Last year, as the RECORD will show, if you will turn to page 6020 of the RECORD of May 28, we had 57.4 percent of our farms electrified, and we are going forward with the program to reach every farm home in America.

This is one of my greatest services to the people of this Nation; for, as you all know, I not only helped to create and develop the TVA, but I have led the fight for rural electrification from the very beginning.

As I have said before, electricity is the lifeblood of our advancing civilization. The cheaper the rates the more freely it flows, and the more freely it flows the greater are its benefits to mankind.

The TVA is the greatest development of ancient or modern times. It is here to stay; and if the American people just knew what it means, they would have an authority on each one of the other great rivers of this country.

The power generated by the TVA exceeds the combined physical strength of every man in the United States living east of the Mississippi River.

It is the greatest servant mankind has ever known, and the only one the man or woman of ordinary means can afford.

Every person in the United States who turns an electric switch is getting benefits from the reduced rates which the Tennessee Valley Authority yardstick has brought. That yardstick on which you have heard such terrific assaults is a magic wand, if you please, which is showing the American people what electricity is worth.

You can generate power with coal, gas, oil, or water power and distribute it in any State in this Union at TVA yardstick rates. That would save you more than a billion dollars a year on your electric light and power bills.

The Tennessee Valley Authority has not only controlled floods on that stream, but it has been able to hold back the flood waters on the Tennessee and prevent the synchronization of those floods with the floods on the Ohio, the upper Mississippi and the Missouri, and save the lower Mississippi from such disasters as that area experienced in 1927.

If we had had those dams on the Tennessee River then we would not have had that disastrous flood that wrought such havoc from Cairo to the mouth of the Mississippi River. In addition to that, we have provided navigation on the Tennessee and enabled the Government to construct and operate the greatest defense plan the world has ever known at Oak Ridge, where the atomic bomb was produced with the power generated by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The TVA has made possible the construction of the Tennessee-Tombigbee inland waterway, which will furnish a slack-water route for all up-bound traffic from the Gulf to St. Louis, Chicago, Detroit, Omaha, Pittsburgh, and all other points on the upper Mississippi, the Missouri, the Illinois, the Ohio, the Tennessee, and their tributaries, reduce the cost of such transportation on an average of more than 50 percent and cut the water distance from Oak Ridge to the Gulf of Mexico by 650 miles.

When John L. Lewis came before our Committee on Rivers and Harbors to protest against the St. Lawrence project where 12,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity are going to waste every year, just as 10,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours a year are going to waste on the Missouri and 10,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours a year on the Ohio, he opposed it he said because it competed with coal. I took the statements of the engineers and showed him that in the State of Illinois power could be generated with coal and distributed all over the State at a rate not exceeding that charged in the Tennessee Valley Authority area. But instead of that we find that last year the people of the State of Illinois were overcharged to the extent of $110,600,000 for their electric light and power.

Following the footsteps of the Tennessee Valley area and giving power to the people of your districts at what it is worth would mean more for your people than anything else that could possibly be done for them at this time.

These tables I have had compiled leave out REA, because we did not have the figures at our fingertips. They leave out the amount that is used for street lighting and for municipal water pumping.

Even so, they show that last year the American people bought and used 170,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity or more than four times as much as the American people were using for all purposes when I first came to Congress.

According to Tennessee Valley Authority rates, the American people were overcharged $1,524,000,000 for their electricity last year.

Oh, but they say, the public power projects pay no taxes. That is bunk. If I had time I should like to go into the tax problem and show you where that even the municipalities that distribute this power receive more in lieu of taxes than were paid by the private power companies before the municipalities took over. The city of Tacoma, Wash., pays more taxes in proportion than the private power companies in almost any section of the country. Yet, according to the Tacoma rates, last year the American people were overcharged $1,736,000,000.

According to the Bonneville rate they were overcharged $1,239,000,000.

According to the Ontario rate they were overcharged $1,463,000,000.

I say the greatest project of its kind that has ever been constructed in all the history of mankind is the Tennessee Valley Authority. Instead of attacking it, the rest of the country had better follow its example.

Here is a table showing the number of residential consumers, the amount of electricity used by them, and the overcharges in each State, during the year 1946:

Here is one showing the total number of customers, the amount of electricity purchased and used by them and the overcharges in each State during 1946.

As I pointed out a while ago, this does not include REA power outside the TVA area, nor does it include power used for municipal lighting or pumping.

Mr. Chairman, the power business is a public business. Electricity has become a necessity of our modern life. It must be handled by a monopoly, since it would be too expensive for four or five concerns to supply electricity to one community. Besides, the water power already belongs to the Federal Government.

If we had more TVA's to furnish yardsticks for the rest of the country as well as to supply cheap electricity to the people in every section of the country, just think what it would mean to the progress and prosperity of the entire Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, I am very happy, coming as I do from the Second District of Tennessee which is in the heart of the Tennessee Valley development, to note the nonpartisan attitude of the entire membership of this House toward this great project.

It is not a question of whether or not there shall be a Tennessee Valley Authority. It is an accomplished fact. This agency was created and now exists by an act of Congress passed May 18, 1933, which has since been amended from time to time. The act is carried into the United States Code under chapter 12a, section 831, and subsequent sections to and including section 831dd of the code.

The corporation created by the act is a creature of the Congress and was created in the language of the act itself—

For the purpose of maintaining and operating the properties now owned by the United States in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., in the interest of the national defense and for agricultural and industrial development, and to improve navigation on the Tennessee River, and to control the destructive flood waters in the Tennessee River and Mississippi River Basins.

Wilson Dam, which was taken over by the Authority upon its creation, was built by the United States Government for the production of nitrates used in explosives during the First World War.

This agency was created and was in existence before you and I came to Congress. This governmental agency since its creation has constructed and is now operating the greatest series of dams, hydroelectric plants, and one of the greatest steam plants, and the greatest system for the distribution of electric current in the world.

The construction of the dams which it built could not have been undertaken by private companies because the dams were constructed not alone for the development of hydroelectric power but in the interests of navigation, flood control, and for the national defense. Prior to the construction of Wilson Dam during the First World War the control of the flood waters of the Tennessee River and its tributaries and the improvement of this river and its tributaries for the purpose of navigation had been discussed for a hundred years.

The Federal Government from time to time has spent billions of dollars along the eastern and western seacoasts of this country, along the Gulf of Mexico, on the Great Lakes, and on the rivers of our country, for the purpose of improving navigation and the prevention of floods. The first extensive expenditure of money by the Federal Government for these purposes on the Tennessee River and its tributaries began with the organization of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The dams constructed by this agency since its organization on the Tennessee River are: Kentucky, Chicamauga, Pickwick Landing, Wheeler, Guntersville, Watts Bar, and Fort Loudoun.

The dams constructed by the Authority on the tributaries of the Tennessee River are: Norris, Hiawassee, Cherokee, Douglas, Fontana, Appalachia, Nottly Ocoee No. 3, and Chatuge.

The Authority now has under construction the Watauga and the South Holston Dams in upper east Tennessee.

It purchased from power companies the following dams: Hale's Bar, Ocoee Dams Nos. 1 and 2, Blue Ridge, and Great Falls.

As a result of the construction of the dams now completed the Tennessee River is navigable the year round from Knoxville, in my district, to the Gulf of Mexico, to the upper reaches of the Mississippi and its tributaries, and to the Great Lakes. With the completion of the Watauga and South Holston Dams the flood waters of the Tennessee will be wholly under control.

The flood control made possible by this series of dams has materially reduced floods on the Mississippi and there has been no recurrence of the millions of dollars of damage caused by the flood waters of the Mississippi in 1927.

The act creating this authority made it possible to translate the energy of the falling waters of these dams into electric current and at this time the entire State of Tennessee, all its cities, towns, industries, and all the people who use electricity for domestic purposes, including hundreds of farmers, in their homes and in their dairies, obtain their electric current from the Authority. And this is largely true of much of the western section of North Carolina, part of western Virginia, parts of Kentucky, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Arkansas.

The Government has invested in this project approximately $800,000,000. A portion of this investment is allocated to flood control and navigation, the balance to power production. The Authority at this time is producing and selling annually 12,000,000,000-kilowatt hours of electric current.

Because of the great supply of electric power made available by the Authority the town of Oak Ridge and the great atomic plants which produced the atomic bomb were built by the Federal Government in Anderson and Roane Counties in my congressional district on an area of 60,000 acres. The atomic plant was located in this section of Tennessee for the following reasons:

First. Oak Ridge is far from the sea coast, surrounded by mountains, by the Clinch River and by hills.

Second. Because of the vast amount of electric current which TVA was able to furnish.

Third. Because of the unquestioned loyalty of our people who worked on this project.

More than 1,000 scientists were engaged in the production of the bomb and more than 100,000 people worked on the project.

In addition to this contribution to the winning of the war the use of the atomic bombs blew Japan out of the war and blew Russia into it.

In addition to this, because we had TVA power in unlimited quantities the Aluminum Company of America at its Alcoa plant in Blount Count, within 16 miles of my home in Knoxville, almost trebled its output of aluminum for war use. It is my conviction that thousands of American boys are alive today who would have been killed in this World War but for the fact that the Aluminum Company of America at its plant at Alcoa was able to turn out all the alumium needed for the production of war planes and that we made and used the atomic bomb.

The Tennessee Valley Authority and all of its dams, steam plants, hydroelectric installations for the production of electric current and the transmission lines for its distribution are the property of all the people of the United States. It is not a sectional institution. It is national. It is my conviction that its operation and control should not be a political football; that it should be managed and operated by career men solely interested in the interests of the people of the United States.

I have had the opportunity to closely observe the manner in which this agency has been developed and operated from its inception to the present. I was one of the attorneys who represented the Knoxville Power & Light Co. in a suit filed in the chancery court of Knox County, Tenn., to challenge the constitutionality of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act and the power and right of this agency to create, distribute, and sell electric current in competition with private enterprise. This suit was carried to the Supreme Court of Tennessee. I am familiar with the Ashwander case and with the suit brought by the 19 power companies to challenge the constitutionality of the TVA Act.

The Supreme Court of the United States in these last two suits upheld the constitutionality of the TVA Act and the power granted to the TVA by the act.

I am in a position to know, and I state without the fear of successful contradiction that those in charge of this agency have not played politics with it. The men who built and operated this great development are patriotic and capable. Their work has been constructive and not destructive.

The TVA in 1945 and in 1946 paid into the general funds of the United States Treasury $23,000,000 earned by it during those years. From its earnings over and above the amounts spent for operation, maintenance, and taxes, it has, since it began operating, producing and selling power, reinvested earnings to the extent of $100,000,000 in power installations and transmission lines, thereby increasing its yearly income.

Of the $65,000,000 authorized bond issue to enable it to purchase the properties of Commonwealth & Southern Corp. it has retired $6,572,500 of said issue and has paid into the United States Treasury as interest on said issue the sum of $4,500,000. It is a going profitable concern.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of the time on this side to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I heard some remarks made during this debate derogatory to TVA. I regret to hear that. I think TVA is a great modern accomplishment of our Nation. I would like to see more of that sort of engineering development on our rivers rather than less.

I cannot fairly understand the business or political opposition to it, for those features may be safeguarded. There is another thing, though, in a broader aspect that bothers me a lot, and that is the whole question in controversy over proper river control. I have heard it said by some in the debates on the floor of this House through the years that I have been here that if any dams at all are built on our rivers build low dams merely for flood control. There were those who opposed that—who wanted to build higher dams for the conversion of their power into hydroelectric energy for our use. This battle has been raging during these years. I can see only one side of it, for I know dams can serve both purposes.

I was born in Lewis County, Mo., just west of Quincy, Ill., across the Mississippi River. I noticed by the paper the other day that the river is at the highest flood stage in its history west of the bluffs on which Quincy, Ill., is located. I know what that means. I have seen some of the finest farm lands in the State of Missouri covered many feet deep with the raging flood of the Mississippi River right at the time the corn was about in tassel, or before or after, as the case may be. Now, every such flood means great loss of property and often loss of life needlessly, for I believe we could prevent such.

Now, what have we done? We have been carrying on flood control on that river, but getting too little of flood protection and not enough power. How many of the dams built on the Mississippi River produce power? Very few of them.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PLOESER. The gentleman is talking now about the Keokuk Dam, is he not?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; that is one that produces power.

Mr. PLOESER. That is what I wanted to tell the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. But there are other dams on the Mississippi that do not produce power. As a young fellow, I took great delight when that great engineer, Mr. Cooper, and others, succeeded in harnessing the Father of Waters by the building of the Keokuk Dam. I wish we had more men with vision like that today. There are those representing private power interests in this country who have fought every effort on our part to put a dam on any river unless it is rendered only half useful. They are even extending that fight into the West where we must build dams to provide storage for irrigation water if we are to have irrigation, and yet when we want to put in penstocks and put in power plants and produce electricity, we are opposed, and even when we succeed in building dams that will produce power, or necessary storage systems to provide incidental power, they fight us when it comes to a disposition of that power. I have never wanted the Government to distribute power to ultimate consumers but it is a short sighted policy not to produce it at all when it is possible.

I think that is short-sighted policy to force the Government to refrain from the fullest possible production. I have heard many times condemnation on this floor on the Republican side of the aisle and some on the Democratic side of the aisle of an agricultural policy which was said to be a "policy of scarcity," plowing under cotton and killing little pigs, and that sort of thing, to bring the price up. I never did sanction that policy in regard to the destruction of crops. I think it is a false policy, but it is just as bad a policy on the part of business to provide for or force an economy of scarcity by failing to utilize the power of nature in moving water through the building of big dams on our rivers as a part of our flood-control program as it is to plow under cotton or kill little pigs. What we want to do is to produce all the food we can produce and produce all the power we can produce and make it available to the American people. I want to see more of the TVA principle applied not only in the southeastern corner of the country—more power to you, my friends from Tennessee, Mr. KEFAUVER, and colleagues—I want to see it extended all over the central part of our country, in the Missouri Valley; and yes, do not forget we need it applied in the West, in the Pacific Southwest, where we have already made great progress but hardly scratched the surface in the production of hydroelectric power.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended (16 U. S. C., ch. 12A), including not to exceed $13,000,000 for the construction of South Holston Dam and Watauga Dam and including not to exceed $6,686,000 for chemical plant additions; purchase, hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft, and the purchase of 221 and hire of passenger motor vehicles; penalty mail (not to exceed $20,000); $22,143,500, together with the unexpended balance of funds heretofore appropriated (the unobligated portion of such unexpended balance to be expended only for public works commenced prior to July 1, 1947), to remain available until expended, and to be available for the payment of obligations chargeable against prior appropriations.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PLOESER: On page 2, strike out lines 4 to 10, inclusive, and insert the following: "U. S. C., ch. 12A), $22,143,500, including not to exceed $3,253,979 for the construction of South Holston Dam and Watauga Dam and not to exceed $6,686,000 for chemical plant additions; purchase, hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft, and the purchase of 221 and hire of passenger motor vehicles; penalty mail (not to exceed $20,000), together with."

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, this is a committee amendment which clarifies an error made in the printing of the bill. On page 2 of the bill, in line 4, you will notice the words "including not to exceed $13,000,000 for the construction of South Holston Dam and Watauga Dam." The amount should have been $3,253,979. As long as an amendment had to be offered to clear up the point, we have rewritten the language so that it reads somewhat more smoothly. I am sure it has the full concurrence of the committee.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, the members of the committee on this side of the aisle are in full accord with the amendment.

Mr. PLOESER. This change does not affect the intent of the bill or the money allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the manufacture and research in the field of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals chemical plant grew out of the National Defense Act of 1916. The plants, however, laid idle after their completion in 1919, while a series of proposals were being considered by the Congress for their use in the public interest. Nearly 150 bills were introduced in the Congress from that time until 1928, when Congress first passed the Norris bill for public operation of the Muscle Shoals facilities, which adequately dealt with the role of fertilizers in relation to basic agricultural problems and operations. The provisions of the 1928 bill became, in 1933, the fertilizer section of the TVA Act.

I would like first to call your attention to the TVA Act itself. The objective of such an undertaking as contemplated in the TVA Act was flood control, navigation, fertilizers, national defense, and the development of power.

Under the provisions of the TVA Act, TVA was instructed to do what it was by then clear the private fertilizer industry could not do; namely, to conduct large-scale, long-term laboratory and pilot-plant research in fertilizer technology with the object of producing better, more concentrated, and cheaper fertilizers; and to arrange with State and local agencies and farm groups for their practical testing and demonstration.

The TVA Act authorized large-scale tests and demonstrations to determine the value, effect, and best methods of fertilizer use and their economic returns. New fertilizer products have to be tested and demonstrated under practical farm conditions. This job obviously can be done most effectively by the institutions traditionally responsible for education in the agricultural field. The TVA Act emphasized collaboration with the experiment stations and extension services of the State agricultural colleges and with the farmers and their organizations.

The decision to produce phosphate rather than nitrogen was an early instance of this collaboration. Experts of the United States Department of Agriculture and the land-grant colleges agreed that the primary need of the valley's agriculture, and for that matter of the agriculture of much of the rest of the Nation, was for phosphate, which had always been deficient in most of the soils. What little was originally there had largely been lost through erosion and leaching as a result of the prevailing summer row-crop system. Without greatly increased use of this plant nutrient, it is impossible to grow forage crops on eroding hillsides, check appalling soil losses, keep silt out of the reservoirs, and incidentally increase production of animal proteins.

The experience of TVA and collaborating agencies and farmers since that time has clearly demonstrated that if the soil resources of our Nation are to be restored and maintained, the farmers who own and manage the land must have access to the vastly greater amounts of concentrated mineral fertilizers necessary for that purpose. Furthermore, farmers must have the opportunity to learn through an appropriate educational process the technically sound practical farming methods, including proper use of the right fertilizers, that will achieve this goal.

Government must lead the way by technological research and development to show industry how to produce concentrated materials which are essential to dealing with the national problems of soil fertility. The fertilizer industry for its part must show a willingness to adopt the tools of modern science and to provide farmers with the plant nutrients their soils require.

All of this requires a continuation of the traditional role of Government in education and research. It necessitates also tremendous increases in the quantities and concentration of mineral fertilizers manufactured by industry, and shifts by farmers away from the use of fertilizers predominantly for the production of row crops to the production of legumes, grasses, and hays in a sound rotating system.

Now let us see how far and to what extent this program has been utilized by the farmers in the test-demonstration areas.

A total of 55,492 farms, covering nearly 8,000,000 acres, have participated in test-demonstration activities since they were begun in 1935. The number of farms and acres involved by States are given in the following tabulation:

It has been pointed out by Chancelor Hutchins, of the University of Chicago, that about one-quarter of the arable land of this country is now ruined or severely impoverished, and that there has been a greater loss of productive soil in the world in the last 2 decades than the accumulated loss in all previous history. Whether, as Dr. Hutchins concludes, another century like the last would be disastrous to our civilization may be debated, but surely it cannot be debated that a Nation with our resource information and know-how cannot afford to let its agricultural plant run down at the heels and become impotent to supply its citizens with adequate amounts of nutritious food. Important time already has been lost. We should be warned by numerous examples of underfed nations and undernourished peoples throughout the world. This is not just a farm problem: it is one which is of vital concern to every segment of our society and the United States Department of Agriculture, TVA, and others concerned with the carrying out of the fertility program must bring the facts of our dwindling soil fertility to the attention of the Nation.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL PUBLIC HOUSING AUTHORITY

Annual contributions: For the payment of annual contributions to public housing agencies in accordance with section 10 of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended (42 U. S. C. 1410), $2,200,000: Provided, That except for payments required on contracts entered into prior to April 18, 1940, no part of this appropriation shall be available for payment to any public housing agency for expenditure in connection with any low-rent housing project, unless the public housing agency shall have adopted regulations prohibiting as a tenant of any such project by rental or occupancy any person other than a citizen of the United States, but such prohibition shall not be applicable in the case of a family of any serviceman or the family of any veteran who has been discharged (other than dishonorable) from, or the family of any serviceman who died in, the armed forces of the United States within 4 years prior to the date of application for admission to such housing: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay any public housing agency any contribution occasioned by payments in lieu of taxes in excess of the amount specified in the original contract between such agency and the Federal Public Housing Authority: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay more than the annual contribution that otherwise would be due or payable with respect to any public housing agency less an amount equal to one-half the total sum shown on the books of such agency as of March 31, 1947, as working capital reserve, reserve for repairs, maintenance and replacements, reserve for vacancy and collection losses, and all other reserves: Provided further, That all expenditures of this appropriation shall be subject to audit and final settlement by the Comptroller General of the United States under the provisions of the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, as amended.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in the report some charges are made about the Federal Public Housing Authority. I thought there should be some clarification of these charges and so asked the Administrator for comment on them. The statements about which I made inquiry and the Administrator's comment on them are:

Inquiry: A provision of the United States Housing Act of 1937 which called for elimination of one slum dwelling unit for every dwelling unit built by the Government "has been almost completely ignored and the slums have continued to develop and grow."

Comment: FPHA knows of no evidence that would support this statement. The United States Housing Act of 1937 provides, in section 10 (b), "that no annual contributions shall be made, and the Authority shall enter into no contract guaranteeing any annual contribution in connection with the development of any low-rent housing or slum-clearance project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless the project includes the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe or insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwellings provided by the project; except that such elimination may in the discretion of the Authority, be deferred in any locality or metropolitan area where the shortage of decent, safe, or sanitary housing available to families of low income is so acute as to force dangerous overcrowding of such families.

As of June 30, 1946—the latest date for which figures are available on equivalent elimination—there were 119,933 dwelling units on projects built under the United States Housing Act of 1937; and the local housing authorities owning these projects had effectuated the elimination of 108,908 substandard units in their respective localities in compliance with their contracts with FPHA. This represents 90.8 percent equivalent elimination. The balance has been deferred temporarily, as permitted by law, in view of the acute housing shortage.

Inquiry: Some FPHA records were in such an "atrocious condition" that a reputable accounting firm declined to audit them.

Comment: On April 30, 1947, the Comptroller General submitted to the Congress a report of a survey of the accounting system of the Federal Public Housing Authority. This survey was made by Price, Waterhouse & Co., a New York firm of independent public accountants, who made the study under the direction of the Corporation Audits Division of the General Accounting Office.

The report of Price, Waterhouse & Co. said: "Our review of the bookkeeping records and financial reports of FPHA has disclosed serious deficiencies in the accounting procedures and in the performance of the bookkeeping work and a resultant lack of accounting control over the assets, liabilities, income, and expenses of the various programs."

The survey was made in the summer of 1946 and was concerned with the accounts for the years ended June 30, 1945, and June 30, 1946. Examination of these accounts necessarily directed major consideration to records and conditions of accounts as they existed in the years before 1946.

FPHA has been fully aware of these shortcomings and has instituted corrective action on its own initiative. Reports of its own Audits Division have pointed out deficiencies and remedial action was begun more than a year before the survey made by Price, Waterhouse.

There were two major reasons for the weaknesses reported in the survey:

1. When FPHA was created in 1942, several types of programs previously administered by other Government agencies were transferred to it. The varied records of these programs had to be brought together and integrated into one accounting system. This huge task is still being carried on.

2. In the period covered by the survey, FPHA used an accounting system suitable for activities carried on with appropriated funds but not suited to the commercial type of operations FPHA was assigned in its war housing programs.

The difficulties presented by this situation were reported by Price, Waterhouse as follows: "Accounts and records for the fiscal year 1945 and prior years were maintained under regulations promulgated by the Comptroller General a number of years ago. * * * This procedure provides for appropriation and fund accounting. * * * However, in the form prescribed, the procedure is not well suited to commercial operations such as those conducted by FPHA, nor does it lend itself to the preparation of statements showing financial position and the results of such operations."

The fact that FPHA had recognized the existence of deficiencies and had taken steps to correct them as early as 1945 is attested by the Price, Waterhouse report:

"The present management [of the Authority] recognized that the accounts and procedures in use in 1945 were inadequate and, at the beginning of the fiscal year 1946 (i. e., July 1, 1945), adopted a revised accounting manual and revised procedures intended to provide both for appropriation accounting as prescribed by the Comptroller General and for financial accounting in the ordinary commercial sense."

Price, Waterhouse stated the opinion that these revised procedures should enable the agency to reconstruct its accounts for the fiscal year 1946 to the extent necessary to prepare an adjusted financial statement suitable for examination. The accountants suggested, however, that this would take time and effort disproportionate to the probable benefits, a view shared by the General Accounting Office.

The deficiencies noted in the report do not involve loose handling of cash or disbursements. This fact is clearly stated by Mr. T. Coleman Andrews, director of the GAO Audits Division, in his letter of April 30, 1947, transmitting the Price, Waterhouse report to the Comptroller General. He wrote:

"The foregoing statement [of deficiencies] is not intended as an implication that there has been laxity in the handling of cash receipts and disbursements. A system of internal control of these is and has been in existence, which should minimize any irregularities in connection with the handling of cash items. The deficiency noted is one of inadequacy of general accounting policies and poor bookkeeping."

Although the substance of the report is concerned with accounts of 1945 and earlier years, Mr. Andrews made this comment concerning the present accounting work of the FPHA:

"The preliminary work now being carried on by this [GAO's Corporation Audits] Division has demonstrated that considerable progress has been made in clearing up old errors and discrepancies and that the recording of current transactions is being carried on in an intelligent, reasonably accurate and satisfactory manner."

Inquiry: More than 31 percent of all public housing intended for low-income tenants is occupied by persons who make more money than the maximum permissible or are otherwise ineligible and FPHA has taken virtually no action to rectify this situation.

Comment: In keeping with the intent of the United States Housing Act of 1937, it is a basic principle of national housing policy that occupancy of low-rent public housing projects shall be restricted to low-income families. FPHA requires that local housing authorities establish income limits appropriate for the housing of such families. Contracts between FPHA and local authorities require the removal of tenants whose incomes exceed such limits.

There are, however, some tenants in Federally aided low-rent projects who are ineligible for occupancy. Some who were admitted as eligible families have become ineligible because of income increases. Others were admitted as war workers to projects that, under an amendment to the United States Housing Act, were used for housing war workers regardless of income for the duration of the war need. When these projects are converted to low-rent use, families with incomes greater than the established limits become ineligible to remain as occupants.

The number of these ineligible tenants is considerably less than the 31 percent attributed to the committee report in news accounts. As of September 30, 1946, only 24.6 percent of the 37,811 families in the 516 low-rent projects were ineligibles. In the projects which have been in continuous low-rent use, 22.6 percent of the families were ineligible. In the 127 projects which had been used to house war workers regardless of income, 35.3 percent were ineligible to remain as low-income tenants.

FPHA permitted local housing authorities to postpone removal of these ineligibles during the war because their removal would have been disruptive of war production and orderly demobilization. With the return of peacetime conditions, however, FPHA required local authorities to begin the removal of ineligibles. At the present time, FPHA requires every local authority to serve vacate notice to at least 5 percent of its total ineligible tenants each month, beginning with those of highest income. The removals are being spread over a period of time in this manner to minimize the hardships involved in relocating families at a time of stringent housing shortage.

Inquiry: The veterans' emergency housing program is a dismal failure.

Comment: Veterans now living in the 165,511 title V accommodations built by the FPHA, instead of in garages, basements, attics, and crowded apartments with their in-laws will be surprised to learn that the title V program is a dismal failure.

The 120,283 family dwelling units and 45,228 dormitory accommodations provided by the FPHA in the title V program constituted nearly 14 percent of all new housing accommodations of all types erected in the United States by private and public agencies combined during the period from the initiation of the title V program about January 1, 1946, to June 1, 1947. Moreover, during the same period, educational institutions, cities, and other local bodies completed 52,133 additional accommodations using surplus Government structures obtained for them under the title V program by the FPHA.

Title V housing constructed by the FPHA has been built at an average cost of less than $2,900 per family unit. It is rented to veterans at an average cost of $31.09 per family dwelling unit per month, including electricity, water, light, and heat. Although the accommodations are temporary and are constructed entirely through the use of surplus Government structures, chiefly Army and Navy barracks, they are built to provide safe, comfortable, and sanitary living accommodations meeting reasonable modern living standards.

The title V program has met an indispensable need during the postwar period. This is particularly true at colleges and universities where the program of GI educational benefits would have been much less effective than it now is if the title V housing had not been provided.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II

The following corporations and agencies, respectively, are hereby authorized to make such expenditures, within the limits of funds and borrowing authority available to each such corporation or agency and in accord with law, and to make such contracts and commitments without regard to fiscal year limitations as provided by section 104 of the Government Corporation Control Act, as may be necessary in carrying out the programs set forth in the budget for the fiscal year 1948 for each such corporation or agency, except as hereinafter provided:

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

NATIONAL HOUSING AGENCY—FEDERAL PUBLIC HOUSING AUTHORITY

Mr. Chairman, many city governments and local housing authorities will be adversely affected by provisions of the Government corporations appropriation bill if it is passed as approved yesterday by the House Appropriations Committee, Commissioner Dillon S. Myer, of the Federal Public Housing Authority, said today:

The bill goes far beyond a mere reduction in the funds to be made available to the Federal Public Housing Authority, Mr. Myer said. The reductions in funds are seriously severe in themselves, but the bill also sets up at least four conditions which may necessitate violations of contracts made in good faith between the Federal Government and local governments.

The bill as introduced would reduce FPHA's funds for administrative expenses from the $15,600,000 requested in the President's budget to $10,400,000 and also reduce the amount available for annual contributions to local housing authorities operating low-rent projects from $7,200,000 to $2,200,000.

The amount of $7,200,000 for annual contributions was requested as the best estimate of the amount FPHA actually would need during the coming fiscal year for payments it had contracted to make to local housing authorities.

These contracts were made under authority of the United States Housing Act of 1937, FPHA pointed out. This act provides that—

The faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment of all annual contributions contracted for.

Local housing authorities have constructed publicly owned housing projects on the strength of this promise of annual assistance and issued bonds based on the assurance of Federal aid in meeting the difference between rental income and operating expenses. An appropriation falling $5,000,000 short of fulfilling these contracts might expose the Federal Government to suits by local housing authorities and private holders of local housing authority bonds to compel full payments due under contracts.

The bill also includes a proviso forbidding any payment of a Federal contribution to a local housing authority which has made payments in lieu of taxes to local governments in excess of the amount specified in the original contract. Contracts vary widely in respect to provisions for such payments in lieu of taxes. A review of contracts now in force indicates that at least 102 of the 272 housing authorities affected would be prohibited from making any payments in lieu of taxes under terms of the appropriation measure as it now stands. At least 61 others would be compelled to reduce their payments in varying amounts. Contracts covering more than 100 more projects have not yet been analyzed.

Stoppage or reduction of payments in lieu of taxes would throw an added burden on the municipalities involved. All of them have provided extra services such as schools and police and fire protection to the housing projects. Many localities have complained that payments in lieu of taxes from the projects have been insufficient to cover the cost of these local government services.

Furthermore the bill would condition payment of the Federal contribution to local housing authorities on a 50-percent reduction by the authorities in the amount of reserves held by them. These reserves are set up to cover repairs, maintenance, replacement, vacancy and collection losses, and other expenses likely to be encountered during the anticipated 60-year life of the projects. These reserves are provided for both in the local authority's contract with the Federal Government and the resolutions under which bonds are issued. They thus involve private bondholders as well as Federal and local government agencies. These contracts cannot be tampered with without subjecting the United States to legal liability.

The existence of reserves is not only dictated by prudent business management but also has contributed to the favorable market enjoyed by local housing authority bonds.

The reduction in funds authorized for administrative expenses is so sweeping that it would require a reorganization of FPHA and a sweeping modification of its program involving discontinuance of functions and consolidation of offices. The present staff paid from administrative funds is approximately 3,500. Preliminary analysis indicates that the maximum staff which can be carried on administrative funds after reductions are made is about 1,720 people, or less than 50 percent of the present staff.

Such drastic reductions might have the effect of reducing the income paid to the Treasury because of inadequate supervision and technical services. If its programs can be conducted according to plan during the fiscal year 1948, it is estimated that a net cash return of $57,000,000 beyond the $15,600,000 requested for administrative use will be returned to the Treasury from housing management profits alone. To this will be added an estimated $30,000,000 from the sale of war housing. These are cash figures. On the basis of sound accrual accounting, FPHA operations for the year are expected to show a net return of $153,000,000.

The bill also imposes an arbitrary ceiling on the proportion of FPHA employees who may be employed in higher-paid positions. This provision is extremely dangerous to the efficiency of the agency because its responsibilities are largely supervisory in character. This emphasis on supervisory functions requires higher grades of personnel than are used for the routines of personnel and fiscal administration.

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] seems to be very much disturbed by the provision in the bill that sets a limit on the amount of this appropriation that can be used for the payment of subsidies to low-rent public housing. I think if the gentleman were to read the record of the testimony and read the report carefully, he would find it is not the intention of the committee, in any way, shape, or form, to affect the legal obligation, contractual obligation, incurred by the United States Housing Authority, pursuant to the Housing Act, for the payment of subsidies. Whatever those obligations are, they are fixed by law. We could not change them if we wanted to, and we have no intention of changing them.

What that limitation in effect means is simply this: the committee estimates that under existing conditions that sum will be sufficient to meet all of the Authority's obligations for the payment of subsidies. Two of the principal conditions that affect the payment of subsidies are these: In the first place, the committee's investigators discovered that a great many of these housing projects under the jurisdiction of the FPHA had become accustomed to accumulating very large reserves, wholly out of proportion to the circumstances under which they came into existence and continue to exist. The aggregate total of those reserves for all of the housing subject to the FPHA amounted to some $40,000,000. That $40,000,000, or the greatest part of it, is not only taken out of income earned from rentals on those projects, and cause thereby an increase in the subsidy liability, because the Government has to make up the difference, but it had also invested it in interest-bearing bonds. So that these housing projects have taken money out of their income that should have been paid for regular expenses, debt retirement and interest, and allowed the subsidy to make up the difference and, on top of that, have invested those funds in Government bonds, and in that way got a further subsidy in the form of interest.

The committee has simply said that until those projects use at least half of those swollen reserves to pay their operating expenses, they may not get a subsidy to that extent.

The other condition that affects the amount of subsidy payable under the contracts and the law is the fact that some 23 percent—that I believe is the statement in the record from the Commissioner—some 23 percent of the residents of these low-cost public housing projects are in income classes far above the maximum ceiling established for those communities, and have been paying rent above the proper maximum rent.

The result has been that the income of the project has been sufficient to carry it, either entirely, as in some cases, or very substantially as in others, and thereby obviate the necessity of any subsidy payment. I believe that disposes of the matter of the subsidies. If we are wrong and more than $2,000,000 is required to pay, then the obligation exists and will have to be met.

As to the operating costs of this agency, as I listened to the remarks of my friend from California I found them strangely reminiscent of the style of the gentleman who is Commissioner of this agency. I call attention to the record and the report of our investigating committee. We gave this agency what we believed was reasonable, proper, and necessary for them to do the job for next year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDEPENDENT AGENCIES AND CORPORATIONS

Export-Import Bank of Washington: Not to exceed $800,000 (to be on an accrual basis) of the funds of the Export-Import Bank of Washington shall be available during the fiscal year 1948 for all administrative expenses of the bank, including not to exceed $100 for periodicals, $200 for newspapers, and $200 for maps; health-service program as authorized by the act of August 8, 1946 (Public Law 658), and not to exceed $24,000 for temporary services, as authorized by section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (Public Law 600): Provided further, That necessary expenses (including special services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, operation, maintenance, improvement, or disposition of any real or personal property belonging to the bank or in which it has an interest, including expenses of collections of pledged collateral, or the investigation or appraisal of any property in respect to which an application for a loan has been made, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the committee on the language which appears in its report, page 7, wherein it refers to the Export-Import Bank of Washington and states:

While there might have been considerations in the national interest for making such loans during the period immediately following the end of hostilities, and before the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development was prepared to transact business, the committee feels very strongly that the Export-Import Bank should forthwith revert to its traditional function of engaging only in such banking activities as directly stimulate the foreign trade of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development is now attempting to get on its feet, and I am taking this time to issue a word of caution to the officials of that bank, because, in my opinion, the only way the Bretton Woods proposal, insofar as the International Credit Bank is concerned, can possibly succeed is for the Bank to be operated in such manner as to keep the necessary confidence in the minds of our people to purchase the debentures which are to be issued by the Bank. In other words, the lending possibilities of that Bank are dependent upon you, and I, and other citizens continuing our savings and buying those debentures to furnish the dollars necessary to the Bank to extend credit to the other nations of the earth.

Here is a case in point: The Iranian Government has an application before that bank for a loan of $250,000,000. Previously I have obtained permission in the House to insert as part of my remarks certain correspondence between the Ulen Realization Corp. and Secretary Marshall and the corporation, correspondence also with me and with the J. G. White Engineering Corp. These people went into Iran as far back as 1928 and built a railroad for that country. That railroad handled our tonnage during the recent war. Under date of May 28, 1947, the State Department through the American Ambassador in Tehran handed the Iranian Government a check for nearly $400,000 for services of the trains of the Iranian Railway to the United States Army from July to December of 1945. Now, mind you, this road was built by American engineers and American capital.

The Iranian Government stepped in without previous notice and drove our citizens off of this construction job, confiscated their records; and since that time, way back in 1930, the Iranian Government has steadfastly refused to make settlement with our people for their claims amounting to over $1,048,000; and yet, here we are proposing to finance the International Credit Bank with our funds to lend to a country which refuses to meet its obligations to our citizens.

This whole matter is on the up and up and is officially before our people, and I take the floor here for the purpose of questioning the State Department and the other departments of the Government O. K.'ing these applications before the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development without in any way protecting the interests of the American people who have legitimate claims against these governments who desire to negotiate these loans. That is the most effective way I can imagine for the International Credit Bank and the State Department to break down the confidence of our people in those debentures that are to be issued by the Bank. I call upon the State Department and the Treasury Department of our Government to pay some attention to the financial liability of other countries to our own citizens, especially where we go in and build these private jobs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the Export-Import Bank is to proceed as recommended by the committee on page 7 of the report, that is to direct its lending powers for stimulating the foreign trade of the United States, then if our people create claims against these foreign countries which they refuse to pay, just where are we to land in the operation of the Export-Import Bank as well as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development insofar as American dollars are concerned?

I wanted to get this officially before the Members of the House because they may have similar cases come up with people who are constituents in their districts.

Mr. Chairman, I include as part of my remarks the following communications:

ULEN REALIZATION CORP.,
New York City, June 5, 1947.

Gen. GEORGE C. MARSHALL,
Secretary of State,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GENERAL MARSHALL: A recent press statement prompts me to bring to your attention one further observation in the matter of the Iranian Government's refusal to honor its debt to Ulen Realization Corp. of New York City for services rendered.

The statement to which I refer is a United Press dispatch from Tehran, dated May 27, 1947, which announced that the State Department on May 26, 1947, through the American Ambassador in Tehran, handed to the Iranian Government a check for nearly $400,000 for services of the Trans-Iranian Railway to the United States Army from July to December 1945. This was the final payment of a much larger amount paid to the Iranian Government for the use by our Army of the Trans-Iranian Railway during the period that our troops were stationed in Iran.

Ulen makes no protest against these payments, for certainly our country could not long maintain its international reputation for honesty and integrity if it did not discharge promptly its contractual obligations.

It is, however, an interesting commentary that our Government should pay Iran for the use of a railway facility when the American company that built the road has, since 1930, been denied reimbursement for its expenditures or paid for its services.

Your files will show that the construction of this railway, used by the United States Army, was initiated by Ulen in 1928. Since May 13, 1930, when the Iranian Government, without cause and without consultation or prior notice to Ulen, arbitrarily and unilaterally canceled Ulen's contracts, the company's protest against mistreatment and nonpayment by the Iranian Government has been on file with the State Department.

The Department on various occasions has stated to Ulen that "all appropriate assistance" would be furnished to assist Ulen to collect outstanding balances from the Iranian Government. To date, no assistance has been forthcoming from the State Department and paradoxically this cash payment of $400,000, as well as previous payments, was handed over to the Iranian Government, without even reminding that Government of its long outstanding obligations and default to Ulen.

While Ulen does not protest its Government's payment to Iran for the use of these facilities, it does protest the State Department's continuing failure to use any and all opportunities to impress upon the Iranian Government that, in order to maintain the respect of the American Government and people, it must, in turn, respect the rights of the Amercans who in good faith have rendered services to the Iranian Government.

For the Department's file in this matter, there is attached a photostatic copy of an original letter written by the J. G. White Engineering Corp. of New York City to Mr. Eugene R. Black, United States Executive Director of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. This letter will indicate to the Department that it also has a responsibility to other important American interests as well as to Ulen in this matter.

I have taken the liberty of addressing this letter to your home inasmuch as I am sure that previous correspondence relative to this matter has not been called to your attention.

Respectfully yours,

FRANK H. REDIKER,
Agent and Attorney in Fact for Ulen Realization Corp.

ULEN REALIZATION CORP.,
New York, June 6, 1947.

Hon. FRED L. CRAWFORD,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN CRAWFORD: Knowing of your interest in banking and foreign credit I am taking the liberty of bringing a matter to your attention which I think will be of interest to you.

Ulen, in good faith in 1928 entered into contracts with the Iranian Government for the construction of the southern portion of the Trans-Iranian Railway. Associated with Ulen in this enterprise were three famous engineering firms of world-wide experience and reputation—The J. G. White Engineering Corp. of New York, the Societe de Construction de Batignolles of France and Stewart & MacDonald Ltd., of London. After constructing 251 kilometers of railway, four large bridges and 2,000 meters of timber trestle in the record time of a little over 1 year after the first arrival of materials and equipment, the Iranian Government, after repeated contract violations, and without consultation or prior notice, arbitrarily and unilaterally canceled the contracts. This action on the part of the Iranian Government resulted in their owing Ulen and associates $1,048,585.42. Despite repeated requests for settlement of this debt that Government and its legal counsel (the Dean Acheson law firm) have steadfastly and consistently refused to discuss or settle the matter.

When the Iranian Government canceled the contracts Government military troops moved in evicting our personnel and forcibly took possession of all records, material, equipment, etc. Ulen kept its accredited representative in Tehran for 2½ years attempting to negotiate a settlement of outstanding differences but to no avail and to illustrate the Iranian Government's methods, when our representative was prepared to return to the United States that Government held him as a hostage, and it was only through a long delay and diplomatic intervention that he was able to obtain an exit visa.

This same Government of Iran, in default to Ulen for over 17 years, has now advised the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development of its intent to make formal application for a loan of $250,000,000 from that organization. Apparently, that Government has our State Department support.

It is reported that on May 26, 1947, the State Department, through the American Ambassador in Tehran, handed the Iranian Government a check for nearly $400,000 for services of the Trans-Iranian Railway to the United States Army from July to December 1945. This was the final payment of a much larger amount paid to the Iranian Government for the use by our Army of the Trans-Iranian Railway during the period our troops were stationed in Iran. It is an interesting commentary that the United States Government should pay Iran for the use of a railway facility which Ulen initially built and all efforts of the latter have been to no avail to obtain reimbursement.

The State Department has on various occasions stated to Ulen that all appropriate assistance would be furnished to collect outstanding balances from the Iranian Government. Curiously enough, to date, no assistance has been forthcoming from the State Department and paradoxically the cash payment referred to above was handed over to the Iranian Government without even reminding that Government of its long outstanding obligations and default to Ulen.

With reference to the Iranian Government's request to the International Bank for a loan of $250,000,000, the State Department's subservience to Iran's every whim including the approval of a $30,000,000 credit for war and surplus equipment and matériel, it will be understood if Ulen expresses anxiety at the prospect of the Government of Iran acquiring substantial credits at the expense of American investors, while refusing even to discuss the matter of settling its admitted legal obligations.

I am attaching hereto certain documents which clearly set forth Ulen's position in this matter as well as that of the J. G. White Engineering Corp. of New York.

Should you require any further documentation or information I am available at all times to furnish it.

With kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

FRANK H. REDIKER,
Agent and Attorney-in-fact for Ulen Realization Corp., University Club, Washington, D. C.

THE J. G. WHITE ENGINEERING CORP.,
New York, May 19, 1947.

Mr. EUGENE R. BLACK,
Executive Director, International Bank for Reconstruction and Development,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BLACK: This is to advise that we are following with interest Ulen's endeavor to collect its claim of $1,048,585.42 against the Government of Iran arising out of the latter's arbitrary and unilateral cancellation of Ulen's contracts for the construction of the southern portion of the Trans-Iranian Railway.

As you probably know, the J. G. White Engineering Corp., together with the Societe de Construction de Batignolles of France and Messrs. Stewart & McDonnell, Ltd., of London, participated with Ulen in the contracts entered into.

Our company is understandably anxious that settlement of this claim be made so that we may be credited with our proper percentage of participation therein.

In light of our position, it is assumed that the granting of any substantial credits to the Government of Iran will not be consummated until such time as this long overdue debt has been satisfactorily settled.

Sincerely yours,

E. N. CHILSON,
Vice President.

Mr. DAWSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, this measure sets up our appropriation of $800,000 for the Export-Import Bank. According to press reports, Henry A. Wallace and others, posing as spokesmen for the common man in America, are advocating financial aid from the United States of America to Russia and her satellite nations. The theory of this aid, according to Mr. Wallace, is to engender a spirit of good will and peace between our countries. In fact, Mr. Wallace made a speech this week at Newark in which he is reported to have said, "The United States has become the center of world reaction and the common man more and more looks to Russia for ideas, help, and inspiration."

I believe the American people would go to almost any extreme, save sacrificing their own honor, to preserve peace in the world, but if history of the past few years is any indication of the effect of the American dollar on good will toward men, then we should have learned our lesson.

I have just received from the Legislative Reference Service, General Research Section, figures which to me are utterly astounding. United States assistance to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and satellite nations—in dollar value—from July 1, 1945, through December 31, 1946, is as follows:

Russia:
UNRRA	$139,197,001
Lend-lease property credits	241,560,000
Total	380,757,001
Albania: UNRRA	15,774,923
Czechoslovakia:
UNRRA	150,362,106
Office, Foreign Liquidation Commission	50,000,000
Export-Import Bank credits	2,000,000
Total	202,362,106
Hungary:
UNRRA	1,291,985
Office, Foreign Liquidation Commission	15,000,000
Total	16,291,985
Poland:
UNRRA	287,769,989
Office, Foreign Liquidation Commission	50,000,000
Export-Import Bank credits	40,000,000
Total	377,769,989
Yugoslavia: UNRRA	257,251,503
Total assistance to Russia in dollar value	380,757,001
Total assistance to Russia's satellite nations in dollar value	869,450,511
Grand total in dollar value	1,250,207,512
Totals by classification of assistance:
UNRRA	851,647,512
Office, Foreign Liquidation Commission	115,000,000
Lend-lease property credits	241,560,000
Export-Import Bank credits	42,000,000
Grand total	1,250,207,512

In addition United States assistance amounting to $99,362,817 was given to Austria, a fourth of which is dominated by Russian influence. This total was divided as follows: UNRRA, $34,716,234; Office Foreign Liquidation Commissioner, $10,000,000 (as property credit); and War Department Civilian Relief, $54,646,583.

The following is the amount of aid to five nations (Austria, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Poland, and Yugoslavia) by various United States Government agencies since VJ-day (September 2, 1945):

1. War Department:
Austria (until Dec. 31, 1946)	$54,646,583
Austria (until Dec. 31, 1946)	54,646,583
Austria (tentative after Jan. 1, 1947)	12,443,000
2. UNRRA (until Dec. 31, 1946):
Austria	34,716,234
Czechoslovakia	150,362,106
Finland	1,175,337
Poland	287,769,989
Yugoslavia	257,251,503
3. Office of Foreign Liquidation Commission:
Austria (property credits)	10,000,000
Czechoslovakia (property credits)	50,000,000
Finland (property credits)	15,000,000
Poland (property credits)	50,000,000
4. Export-Import Bank:
Austria	$750,000
Czechoslovakia	2,000,000
Finland	72,500,000
Poland	40,000,000
Grand total	1,038,614,752

The following is a tentative estimate of assistance to be rendered to certain European countries which are predominantly influenced by Russia in their political and economic actions. They are Poland, Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Albania, Lithuania, Esthonia, Latvia, and Finland, plus Russian-occupied zones of Germany and Austria. The amount to be advanced by the United States to these nations during the period January 1, 1947, through June 30, 1947, is as follows:

UNRRA (to all Russian-influenced Europe)	$200,000,000
Export-Import Bank	40,000,000
United States portion, International Bank	317,500,000
Total	557,500,000
Aid rendered July 1, 1945, through Dec. 31, 1946	1,250,207,512
Grand total	1,807,707,512

This is my first term in Congress and perhaps there are many things I have yet to learn, but if there is anyone in this House who can tell me why we should advance a total of $557,500,000 of American dollars to Soviet Russia and her friends during this current 6 months I would like to hear it.

These roving self-appointed ambassadors can talk all they care to about the love and friendship additional gifts to Russia would bring, but the record to date clearly discloses that these past gifts have brought nothing but abuse and lack of cooperation on the part of our former ally.

If Henry A. Wallace and his friends want to look to Russia for "ideas, help, and inspiration," as he stated in his Newark speech this week, that is their privilege, but I am certain the American people will no longer stand for these huge grants of American dollars to a nation which offers nothing in return but contempt for the American way of life.

Have we not learned our lesson?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAWSON of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman from Utah has struck at a very vital and serious blunder now being made by this Administration. He has asked the question if anyone in this House can tell him why we should during this current 6-month period continue to advance aid to Russia and her satellite countries. I see no one on the floor of this House arise to answer his question and I can assure him that no sensible explanation can be given. No one in this country knows better than Mr. Henry A. Wallace that if we will feed the Russians and their dependents, that permits the Russian controlling group to use their energies to spread their propaganda. Russia cannot spread their propaganda and feed their people at the same time, but if we will feed them, then that leaves them free to spread their propaganda. Every country in the world that is feeding its people today has a government substantially based on the capitalistic, free enterprise concept of life and government. Those countries that do not feed their people are promoting ideas such as communism. If you want to eat you have to give up that kind of activity. If you carry on that kind of activity you have to give up eating. What makes me sore is for American leaders to run up and down this land continually insisting that we feed and clothe and shelter those who refuse to work, and simply want to spread their propaganda.

Mr. DAWSON of Utah. The gentleman from Michigan is perfectly right and I appreciate his contribution.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAWSON of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. The gentleman from Utah has made a very constructive address here that is food for thought for the entire American people. He is to be congratulated on his efforts.

Mr. DAWSON of Utah. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I was greatly interested in the remarks made by the gentleman from Utah, and I am happy to inform the gentleman and the House that this committee is making an attempt, at least in this bill, to bring the Export-Import Bank and all other lending and spending agencies of the Government within and under the jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States. I can readily understand the concern that many people have about this lending of their money by the billions quite promiscuously over the world, and for that very reason this committee, as I said before, is attempting to not only look into the administrative expenditures of all these Government corporations but also to look them over thoroughly and, if necessary, to be in a position to limit their lending authority.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. I notice in the Washington Post today a news item to the effect that this Export-Import Bank—it is an American institution, I suppose, or if it has any money at all, it certainly is American to that extent—is proposing to lend to Poland, a Russian satelite state $600,000,000 to rehabilitate and operate the coal mines of Poland, which means that if they get that American money they will use it to equip Russian armies, some of whom have already taken over Hungary, and others are undertaking or shortly will undertake to take over Austria and perhaps Italy and perhaps France.

In addition to that, today's paper carries the news item that the armies of Mongolia, a Chinese province that we helped to take away from our Chinese Ally in the last war and turned over to Russia, are now undertaking an invasion of a great Chinese province which is a short route to India. Yet we say that we ought to keep on pouring money into the capacious maw of the Russian Soviet nation. It is just cockeyed. I do not know when we are going to stop, but there ought to be some great lunatic asylum where we could put people like that and prevent them from undoing this country.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BREHM. I am certain members of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs could allay all the fears of the gentleman from Tennessee. If they pass the bill they now have up, the Voice of America, it will tell these countries that we gave it to them, and that will make everything all right, according to some of those who favor telling them as well as giving them.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] was talking about the International Bank and presuming they would sell bonds to the American people. If my memory serves me correctly, after the last World War the Bank of America did sell securities of many South American countries, and the bonds of all of those countries, with one exception, were defaulted. Is there danger of that thing happening here again? Are the American people going to be asked to buy these bonds and securities that may be put out; and if so, can we profit by the experience after the last war, when the American people were left holding the bag?

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman knows that neither he, nor I, nor this committee, nor anyone else in America can assure him that we will not have a repetition of the conditions we had after the last war. We do know that unless we can cure, and soon, the destructive New Deal disease spendomania, we will have a repetition, and it will not only be of equal detriment to America, it will be a detriment tenfold greater than what we had after World War I, which will, of course, destroy America. It is up to us as Members of Congress and the American people generally through the voice of the Congress to see to it that America does live and progress and prosper. Surely with all the blessings we enjoy in this fair land that is not an impossible task. But it may take the combined will and strength of every true American, so let us all put our shoulder to the wheel by doing the right thing. We can always count on our colleague from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] to do the right as he sees the right, and for that we all respect you, Doctor.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, two or three times today I have heard Members rise and quote the crazy speeches of Henry A. Wallace.

Let us not overlook our other ambassador of misinformation, Mr. Harold Stassen, who got all the way to Moscow. If there ever was a time on earth when America was fully misrepresented, in my opinion it was while Wallace was speaking in England and Stassen was talking in Moscow.

Wallace's craziest speech was made to the Negroes down in Alabama the other night. He made a Communist speech to a Negro audience in Alabama, and they say that even some of the Negroes who heard him are holding their noses yet. The Negroes in the South have more sense than to believe the stuff Wallace is preaching. They know that what he is preaching under the auspices of this so-called Southern Conference for Human Welfare, which is nothing in God's world but a Communist-front organization, is doing them immeasurable harm.

When you disturb the peaceful relationship that exists between the Negro and the white man, the Negro always suffers. They are getting along fairly well in the South. But when Henry Wallace goes down there and makes a crazy speech to try to stir up friction between the white people and the Negroes, he is doing the Negroes more harm than he could possibly do them good, to say nothing of the injury he is doing the white people of the country.

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

I want to say one word, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER], which may have left some Members in confusion as to the role of the Export-Import Bank and that of the International Bank, which is an entirely different bird. If the Export-Import Bank follows the admonition of this committee it will no longer make foreign government reconstruction loans in competition with the International Bank, but will hereafter confine itself to its original and traditional role of making export-import loans.

I may say that at the hearings before the committee the President of the bank appeared to recognize that position quite fully.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COUDERT. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The reason I was complimenting the committee so much was that the Export-Import Bank was authorized to lend up to some $3,500,000,000 to fill in the gap between the creation of the Bretton Woods agreement, which brought into operation the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and the time the Bank got into its walking suit, you might say. Now, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development is ready to make loans. This committee has recommended that the Export-Import Bank step out of that field. You did a great job when you made that recommendation and the Congress should back you up in it. The Export-Import Bank has no business making these foreign loans to foreign governments. I am talking about rehabilitation loans. Let the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development make those loans. Let the other countries participate instead of insisting that the people of the United States provide all the credit. Out of the 44-member banks to that agreement, only the United States is now proposing to extend credit. That is unfair. It is not in keeping with the general concept. It is up to the Members of this Congress to notify our people of what is going on.

Mr. COUDERT. Needless to say, the committee is delighted that the gentleman agrees with our conclusions. Let me say to him further that reference in the report to the matter is all that the committee had power to do, under the existing state of law. If this bill passes, next year the committee will be able to take more effective and affirmative action in dealing with these situations.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COUDERT. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Will the gentleman tell me where the International Bank will get its funds for operation?

Mr. COUDERT. Of course, that is not within the purview of this subcommittee. But as far as I know, it gets its capital from contributions from the various signatory nations. I think the United States, of course, contributes by far the largest part—30 or 40 percent.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Do we get that by selling debentures and bonds to the American people?

Mr. COUDERT. As I understand it, the Bank sells, if it can, its debentures to the American people or others. These debentures are guaranteed by the United States to the extent of the total American subscription to the Bank's capital funds. So, in effect, they are Government bonds to that extent.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I remember after the last war there were some of these foreign Government-guaranteed bonds. I have in my safety deposit box now a slip of paper that a banker sold to me as being backed up by the United States, but I soon found it was not worth very much in money. My memory may be short, but it is not going to be short enough to buy any more of such debentures and bonds, knowingly.

Mr. COUDERT. At least, the gentleman will not buy any debentures from the Export-Import Bank, because that bank sells them only to the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COUDERT] has expired.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I question whether I should needlessly delay the committee here. I do not mean to differ with my friends in their discussion of loans to foreign countries by the Export-Import Bank. However, I do feel that it should be pointed out that the operation of this bank and the loans made under it to date are vastly superior over certain other actions that this Congress has taken. I think I am in a position to discuss this because my voting record is conservative. I voted against the British loan because I thought the loan should be made by the Export-Import Bank. You voted a few weeks ago for these two loans, one to Greece and Turkey and the other to the Balkans. Those are for loans that will be used in those countries. Under the Export-Import Bank, first an application must be made and the representatives of this bank have a right to look over and demand that the applicants submit the basis on which repayment will be made. They arrive at an agreeable rate of interest and the terms under which the loan will be repaid.

Here is something else. They provide not for the sending of American dollars abroad, but they extend credit, which must be used to buy American products.

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. Yes, certainly I yield.

Mr. COUDERT. I just wanted to say one word, to make it perfectly clear. I hope the gentleman will bear me out, the committee has no criticism whatever of the officials of this bank. We were very much pleased and well impressed with the appearance of its officials in our hearings. We have no word of criticism.

Mr. WHITTEN. The distinguished gentleman is correct and I want it understood that I am not trying to deliver a lecture to the majority members of my own committee, but I would like to point out that if this Nation has any obligation to help these nations to reconstruct their railroads, their industry so they can be self-sustaining and if you intend doing anything toward that end you had better do it under the Export-Import Bank, where they will repay it and where it is an extension of credit to buy American goods, and whereby you can control the expenditure of the money, rather than by a direct grant, as this Congress has done time after time in recent weeks, I might say most of the time against my vote. Certainly, I think the operations under the Export-Import bank are much better. I voted against the British loan for no other reason than I thought you ought to have a definite understanding with reference to repayment so that there could be no misunderstanding in future years when the payments fall due and, further, that credit should be extended to purchase American goods instead of cash. You mark this, the British people at the time that loan was made felt that we ought to give it to them. We felt that they ought to repay it. When the time for repayment comes you are going to see that there will be hard feelings about what each understood about the loan; but under the Export-Import Bank practices there would have been a definite understanding, there would have been a submission by the British Empire of their tax structure and a showing of where they were going to get the money to repay it. Then, too, they could use that credit in this country to buy American goods and would therefore have appreciated the obligation to pay for that which they had. As it is, however, British public sentiment, to a large extent, takes it for granted they should not repay, because we owe this to offset their expenditure, pending the time that we got ready to get into this war.

The Export-Import Bank has been by far the best method we have used in dealing with this matter of loans. I differ with the committee in their handling of this item. I think they showed poor judgment. We are rapidly approaching the time of repayment and then is the time when they should have supervision so that they could see to it that the repayments are made. Naturally in that case the administrative expenses should go up if they are to do a good job; and I think the committee was short-sighted in that regard.

Mr. COUDERT. The fact is that we gave them $40,000-odd more than they got in the current fiscal year.

Mr. WHITTEN. But the test comes in the break-down of the number of their employees. That indicates that during the lending operations they had but few personnel. While the gentleman is correct the bill provides more money than they had last year it is considerably less than was requested; and I think you will agree that Mr. Martin, the gentleman who represented the Bank before the committee, made as fine a showing as any witness who appeared for any corporation and has made a presentation of the necessity for administrative funds to bring back to the Government of the United States the funds which we have lent in good faith and which the foreign governments have agreed to repay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Tennessee Valley Authority: Not later than June 30, 1948, and not later than June 30 of each calendar year thereafter, until a total of $348,239,240 has been paid as herein provided, the board of directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority shall pay from net income derived the immediately preceding fiscal year from power operations (such net income to be determined by deducting power operating expenses, allocated common expense, and interest on funded debt from total power operating revenues) not less than $2,500,000 of its outstanding bonded indebtedness to the Treasury of the United States exclusive of interest, and not less than 40 percent of the remainder of such net income into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. In the 10-year period ending June 30, 1958, and in each succeeding 10-year period until the aforesaid total of $348,239,240 shall have been paid, not less than a total of $87,059,810, including payment of bonded indebtedness exclusive of interest on such bonded indebtedness, shall be so paid. Total payments of not less than $10,500,000 shall be made not later than June 30, 1948.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my distinguished colleague, the Honorable EARLE C. CLEMENTS, a great friend of TVA, may be permitted to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Chairman, upon every occasion when TVA legislation has been considered during my incumbency it has been my pleasure to give it my support. I consider this constructive program of regional development one of the outstanding contributions and accomplishments of the great Roosevelt administration.

The bill under present consideration provides appropriation for not only the continuation but for further development of this immensely worth-while undertaking. The bill provides money for construction of two hydroelectric dams and for chemical plant facilities for fertilizer research, experimentation, and production. I am particularly anxious to see developed better and cheaper forms of fertilizer in order that private industry can better meet the needs of farmers for plant food. Although I am glad to see the appropriation being made in this bill for that purpose, I regret that the committee has reduced the appropriation by $2,000,000 below the President's budget request.

In addition to the afore-mentioned construction appropriation, the bill makes provision for the general operation of the TVA flood control, navigation, fertilizer, and electric-utility programs. I cannot emphasize too strongly, however, that it is false economy to cut the President's budget estimate in this bill.

It is with pleasure that I again support the TVA. I cannot close these brief remarks, Mr. Chairman, without expressing concern over the legislative provisions of this bill, lest they tend to alter the basic program and policy of the TVA. I am pleased with the TVA as it is and see no necessity for these legislative amendments. It has been conducted with wisdom and foresight, and I want it to continue as a mighty factor in the prosperity and happiness of the country it serves.

The Clerk read as follows:

Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation of Washington, D. C.: Not to exceed $200,000 (to be computed on an accrual basis) of the funds of the Corporation shall be available for administrative expenses, including supervision and examination by the Farm Credit Administration and services performed for the Corporation by other Government agencies, and not to exceed $3,200 for penalty mail; and said total sum shall be exclusive of interest expense, legal and special services performed on a contract or fee basis, and expenses in connection with the acquisition, operation, maintenance, improvement, protection, or disposition of real or personal property belonging to the Corporation or in which it has an interest: Provided, That no other funds shall be available for administrative expenses of the Corporation: Provided further, That of the funds available to the Corporation for administrative expenses, not to exceed $20,000 shall be available for payment to the Farm Credit Administration for supervisory or other services rendered.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to say just a word or two on the subject of the Inland Waterways Corporation. You will recall that minority views were embraced in the report last year, which minority views expressed the thought that this Waterways Corporation should be sold. There has been a feeling all along on the part of the subcommittee that they probably have not completely satisfied their legislated purposes, and this year in trying to make a more thorough investigation of the affairs of this particular enterprise on the part of the Government, the committee being aware of the fact that the Small Business Committee of this House was studying all forms of government in competition with private enterprise, requested the Small Business Committee to make their study of this particular Government Corporation in time to be able to report it to the Appropriations Committee. The cooperation between the two committees worked out very well. The report was made and it was adopted by the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Government Corporations and incorporated in part 3 of the hearings, which is devoted entirely to the Inland Waterways Corporation.

Under unanimous consent which was previously granted in the House, I will therefore extend at this point in the RECORD the report made by the Small Business Committee to the subcommittee and which was subsequently adopted.

I do this in order that the Members may clearly understand the matter.

(The report referred to follows:)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS,
Washington, D. C., May 14, 1947.

To: Subcommittee on Government Corporations, Appropriations Committee.

From: WALTER C. PLOESER, chairman, House Small Business Committee.

INTERIM REPORT ON HEARINGS HELD ON INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION

1. The Government should get out of the barge business, and we are concerned only with recommending when and how that should be accomplished.

At the moment the Federal Barge Lines is being managed by capable people who know the barge business, but this has not been true in the past. Some portion of the losses may be attributed to the pioneering nature of the project, but poor management and political pressure would seem to have been contributing factors. The fact that the present management has reduced the budgetary pay roll from approximately 2,213 to less than 1,700 people over a period of 10 months, while the tonnage at the same time has increased substantially, demonstrates this fact.

Past labor policy would seem to have had a part in causing the Corporation's difficulties. In 1924, furthermore, the War Department transferred to the Corporation assets appraised at $10,362,843, which were actually worth much less and possibly as little as $1,500,000. The Corporation added to its difficulties by overestimating the useful life of its equipment and charging it off at 3 percent, whereas it should have been charged off at 4 or 5 percent. Finally, and most important, the Corporation has gone along with obsolescent equipment and antiquated methods in the face of rising labor and maintenance costs. Little thought was given to better management personnel, new methods, new types of floating equipment, and labor-saving terminal equipment until the situation took on the proportions of a first-class emergency. Political considerations and outside pressures also appear to have contributed to the situation.

All of this would seem to show that, even though the present management is exceptionally able, the Government has no business in the barge business as a permanent matter.

2. It appears desirable that the Warrior River unit should be sold as quickly as possible.

No funds should be expended to rehabilitate or further develop this division, which has not met its operating costs in any one year and which has been unsuccessful from the beginning. It is suggested that municipalities and civic groups in the locality be contacted with the idea of interesting them in promoting the organization of a corporation which could purchase the barge line and carry on the present type of service. If no interest is displayed by these groups within a year, then we suggest that the division be offered publicly to the highest bidder, reserving the right to reject any and all bids. In either event, the purchaser should not be required to maintain the same type of service as Federal. In view of the continuing losses experienced in the past, we see no reason for that requirement. If no buyer can be obtained within 2 years, the service should be discontinued.

It should be noted that in the concluding hearing on May 12, a letter from H. E. Parker, president of the Warrior & Gulf Navigation Co., was read into the record which indicated that this company may be interested in negotiating for the purchase of the Warrior unit.

3. It is recommended that the Mississippi unit should be sold in a unit as a going concern.

On the basis of present accounting practices, the Mississippi unit, considered alone, shows an over-all net operating income of $803,000 as of January 1, 1947.

The Government has spent millions to establish this common-carrier barge service. Discontinuance at this time would result in writing off a large part of this investment and the public benefits of the service as a total loss. Existing privately owned barge lines would not provide comparable service.

The Federal Barge Lines has the most extensive joint barge-rail through route and rate structure. Furthermore, the privately owned barge lines generally avoid less-than-bargeload shipments and so-called merchandise or package freight since bulk shipment in bargeload quantities is more profitable.

If the Corporation discontinued service at this time, small business would be driven from the river, since it ships almost entirely in less-than-bargeload quantities. The benefits of river transportation would be restricted to a comparatively few large shippers of bulk freight in bargeload quantities. In effect, river transportation would then be available only to shippers of coal, steel, grain, sulfur, oil, and a few other bulk commodities.

Finally, we believe that the committee should not lose sight of the effect upon the rail-barge rate case (ICC Docket 26712) which has been pending since 1934. The principal advocate of the water carriers' position is the Federal Barge Lines. If the Inland Waterways Corporation is sold in a unit as a going concern, proper prosecution of this case will be assured. On the other hand, if operations are discontinued, a large part of the rates involved will for all practical purposes drop out of the litigation.

4. We recommend that Congress approve rehabilitation of the Mississippi unit.

If the Corporation is to continue its service, it appears that new equipment must be purchased almost immediately. Present equipment is in such bad condition that maintenance costs are prohibitive.

Admittedly, several million dollars for complete rehabilitation is a large sum of money but, when considered from the profit-and-loss point of view, it takes on a different perspective. If it can convert the present annual deficit into a substantial annual profit, as forecast, the expenditure will be well justified.

When a detailed prospectus of future operations is prepared and checked against the actual results of operation of a demonstration unit of the proposed integrated tow, the measure of the justification will be clear. This demonstration unit will cost an estimated $1,000,000. If the test shows that the integrated tow is a failure, no further expenditure should be made for this type of equipment and the amount required for rehabilitation will be substantially reduced.

From the engineering data, it appears that the proposed new equipment would substantially reduce both towing and terminal costs. The so-called integrated tow should reduce towing costs by about half. Container and pallet equipment should reduce the cost of handling certain types of merchandise or package freight to an extent which should put that type of service on a profitable basis.

Towing operations have been divorced from terminal operations as a preliminary to turning the terminals over to private operators or municipalities for public use. Improved types of handling equipment are being installed in order to cut down handling costs.

In this way, the management hopes to demonstrate to the privately owned barge lines that merchandise or package freight can be profitable.

As compared with the millions spent in physically improving these rivers to make them fit for navigation, additional funds to further pioneer river transportation should be made available, and, if justified by the prospectus, will certainly make the barge line salable as a going concern.

5. We recommend that the Corporation should continue its services on the Missouri River and should extend them as circumstances require.

It is apparent that the privately owned barge lines will not initiate service on the Missouri River. These operators are generally of the opinion that operations on the Missouri are unfeasible in view of the speed of the current, and the depth and instability of the channel.

With the proposed new towing equipment, Federal Barge Lines hopes to show privately owned barge lines that operations on the Missouri need not be unprofitable.

Barge service is of great importance to the communities on the Missouri River. Rail transportation is costly from these interior points and it is difficult for them to compete with communities which are closer to their markets. The Panama Canal increased their competition by cutting transportation costs from the Pacific coast. Thus their markets were further restricted. The railroads, then, to compete with the Canal, initiated water-compelled rates from the west coast to Chicago so that it costs less to ship some commodities to and from Chicago from and to the west coast than it does in the case of certain Midwest communities.

By lowering transportation costs, barge service will give this area access to new markets and sources of supply.

6. It is suggested that the Mississippi unit should not be sold in sections.

Sale by sections would break up the joint barge-rail through route and rate structure. Furthermore, less-than-bargeload service and merchandise or package service might not survive the blow. Finally, traffic development on the Missouri would be almost impossible since Federal would be subject to a squeeze play at St. Louis on rate divisions with privately owned carriers, and new types of equipment, which are prerequisite to profitable operation, would not be interchangeable with that of privately owned barge lines.

A number of other factors come into play which demonstrate convincingly that sale in sections would be unfeasible. For example, if barges do not go through without breaking bulk, expensive transshipment is necessary. To secure best use out of barges serving Missouri River, the operator should be in a position to add cargo at St. Louis to barges coming out of the Missouri on 6-foot draft to take advantage of 9-foot draft available elsewhere, and vice versa. A Missouri River operator should have somewhere else to work his equipment during the 4 months closed winter season on the Missouri to reduce the burden of fixed charges. No joint through rates with the railroads exist through Missouri River ports; none could be established in connection with such a truncated operation; interior shippers would get no water rates.

As the net result of all the above limiting factors, traffic volume on the Missouri would be severely limited and costs would be greatly increased, making it extremely unlikely that a profitable operation could be developed in the foreseeable future.

To permit the Corporation to take only freight originating on or destined for the Missouri would not solve the problem. The operation must be balanced—empty barges do not earn profits. Barges must be loaded both going and returning to make money. Even now, with an operation which extends from New Orleans to Minneapolis and Chicago, this is at times difficult; but it would be almost impossible if every bit of freight picked up had to be destined to ports on the Missouri. Shipments going out of the Missouri might be destined for numerous points along the other rivers.

7. Inland Waterways Corporation should proceed to offer the property for sale concurrently with rehabilitation.

Sale of the Federal Barge Lines need not await rehabilitation. The Interstate Commerce Commission should be requested immediately to make the necessary appraisal and to keep that appraisal current so that sale will not be delayed when a purchaser is obtained.

Complete rehabilitation is not prerequisite to sale. Purchasers probably will appear when the rehabilitation has proceeded far enough to demonstrate that complete rehabilitation will put the business on a profitable basis. If the new equipment reduces cost sufficiently to show that operations on the Missouri River can be profitable, and that less-than-barge-load and merchandise or package freight will be profitable, the Corporation should not have difficulty in obtaining a purchaser who will undertake to render the same type of service.

It is suggested that the Corporation solicit interested municipalities, chambers of commerce, other civic associations, shippers, and receivers with the idea of interesting them in promoting organization of a corporation to purchase and operate the Mississippi unit. These groups, all of whom have advocated continuation of the Federal Barge Lines in these hearings, should have sufficient interest to take the lead in promoting the organization of a corporation to take over its operation, provided it has been demonstrated that the corporation can return a profit on its investment. If they do not, they can hardly object to liquidation or unconditional sale of the line.

If such a sale cannot be made because of lack of interest or any other reason, the Mississippi unit should be offered for sale to the high bidder, reserving the right to reject any and all bids.

As is pointed out below, purchasers should not be required to undertake to provide the same type of service.

We feel that sale as a going concern should be accomplished within 3 years and, in any event, the Government should be out of the barge line business within 5 years.

8. It appears desirable that Congress should establish a commission of one Representative, a Senator, the president of Inland Waterways Corporation, and a representative of the Interstate Commerce Commission to see to it that both the Mississippi unit and the Warrior unit are promptly sold.

The present management of the Corporation takes the attitude that the Government should get out of the barge line, but it is believed that such a commission certainly will not harm the sales program and may, in fact, give it impetus.

We feel that Congress would thus insure that its announced policy will be effectuated.

9. It is recommended that the statutory prerequisites to sale or lease should be substantially modified by amendment of the act.

We suggest rescission of the requirement that the Secretary of Commerce first make a finding that navigable channels and adequate terminal facilities are substantially available, together with the requirement that the Interstate Commerce Commission first report to the Secretary of Commerce that joint tariffs with rail carriers have been published and filed. The opinion has been expressed by representatives of the Corporation that these prerequisites have been accomplished. In order to nullify the possibility of a technical argument to the contrary, however, it is believed that these provisions should be deleted from the act.

The prerequisite requiring that the Interstate Commerce Commission first appraise and ascertain the fair value of the facilities should not be changed. If Federal Barge Lines is to be sold to a corporation organized by local people, this necessarily must be accomplished by negotiation. The effect of the appraisal will, therefore, be twofold: It will assure a fair return to the Government and, at the same time, protect the Government negotiators from any charge that they failed to obtain fair value.

There would not seem to be any justification for the requirement that any purchaser or lessor agree to continue the facilities "in the common carrier service in a manner substantially similar to the service rendered by the Corporation" and that he supply "ample security by bond or otherwise to insure the faithful performance of such agreement." If the municipalities, civic associations, shippers, and receivers are interested sufficiently to take the lead in promoting the organization of a corporation to purchase the barge line, there is no need for such a requirement since they will have a vital interest in seeing to it that this service is maintained. If they are not, then there would seem to be no reason to place such a burdensome restriction upon any other purchaser. In fact, we doubt very much that any prudent businessman would purchase the barge line subject to any such condition even though he sincerely intended to render the same type of service. Furthermore, any proposed change in the service by a purchaser is subject to protest by interested parties and suspension by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

We suggest that this provision be amended simply to require a certification by the purchaser to the effect that he has a bona fide intent to continue the common-carrier service in a manner substantially similar to the service rendered by the Corporation. In this way, the participation of interested groups in the ownership and management of the corporation will be assured. In effect, the Congress would forcefully demonstrate that it really means to get out of the barge business. If these groups which have argued so strongly for continuation of the Federal Barge Lines are sincerely interested in that service, they will support the organization of a corporation to purchase the line from the Government.

The provisions authorizing sale in two units, the Mississippi and Warrior units, should be retained, as should that prohibiting purchase by railroad interests. If it develops that a departure from the latter of these restrictions is in the public interest, appropriate legislation to fit the circumstances can be proposed at that time.

In conclusion, the attention of the committee should be drawn to the main point at issue in this case: Throughout these hearings, the preponderance of testimony by those who would be affected most by the liquidation of the barge line has been to the effect that the Government should get out of the barge business, but not until the same service is provided by private capital.

That completes the majority report, and there are reservations by Mr. KEFAUVER and Mr. JACKSON of Washington as follows:

(The reservations by Mr. KEFAUVER and Mr. JACKSON of Washington are as follows:)

RESERVATIONS OF CONGRESSMAN KEFAUVER AND CONGRESSMAN JACKSON OF WASHINGTON

We agree with the conclusions of the majority report that the Federal Barge Lines should be rehabilitated and that it should eventually be sold and operated by private enterprise.

The Federal Barge Lines has done a most useful job in pioneering river navigation and in working out rate schedules for river transportation and for joint barge-rail transportation. It is our opinion that with some rehabilitation the Federal Barge Lines will, within a few years, be able to operate at a profit and that it could then be sold to private enterpise. The sale, however, should require the purchaser to give substantially the same service as is provided in the act creating the Inland Waterways Corporation.

We cannot concur in the majority report that the Warrior River unit should immediately be sold. The last Congress authorized the building of the Tombigbee waterway. This connection between the Tennessee River, Warrior River, and the Gulf of Mexico through the Tombigbee River will furnish economical means for an enormous amount of river traffic from the Tennessee and Ohio Valleys to the Gulf of Mexico, and it will also furnish an alternate route for shippers in the Mississippi Valley. The Warrior unit should be retained to pioneer this new river traffic and to establish favorable rates. It should not be sold until this is done.

Also, we feel that even before the Tombigbee waterway is built, the Mississippi unit of the Federal Barge Lines should operate on the Tennessee River. The reason for the prohibition against operating on the Ohio does not apply to the Tennessee. During the interval until a purchaser can be found for the Mississippi unit who will continue giving substantially the same service, I feel that the Mississippi unit should establish rates and give service to shippers desiring to use river transportation on the Tennessee.

That completes the report, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in certain provisions of this bill, part of title III, the committee, of course, recommended and sought to accomplish extension of the same congressional controls over certain mixed Government corporations as has been extended over wholly owned Government corporations, the purpose being that there is really no difference in interest. The majority stock of these corporations is owned by the Federal Government, in one case the overwhelming majority; as much as 99 percent is owned by the Federal Government; so the same rule of congressional appropriation guidance and control should apply to these corporations as would apply to one that is 100 percent owned by the Government.

In order that the RECORD might be more informative, under the same privilege to extend my remarks, I am going to include at this point in the RECORD a chart of the comparative ownership percentages of Government and other enterprises in these mixed corporations:

Ownership of capital stock in mixed-ownership Government corporations

Mr. Chairman, this bill does deal with vast appropriated sums. Other supply bills seem to dwarf this by their amounts. But this bill is most significant in that it deals with functions of Government which influence or control the credit structure of the Nation's economy.

Total assets of all wholly owned Government corporations—including Commodity Credit Corporation, Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—as of June 30, 1947, are estimated to be approximately $11,800,000,000. The total unobligated borrowing authority of these corporations as of March 31, 1947, was approximately $18,600,000,000. The value of all assets and unobligated borrowing authority at present is approximately $30,400,000,000. This figure $30,400,000,000 can be said to represent the total amount of money, including assets valued in terms of money, which wholly owned Government corporations have under their control at the present time.

Could any bill be more significant in its effect upon the economy? Because of the national and international impact of this vast credit operation it is imperative that the Congress take and hold authority of both expenses and assets of these corporations. In the past it has become a lost responsibility. When this bill becomes law it will properly be a current responsibility. These assets—and what is equally important—the liabilities of the corporations are the assets and liabilities of the people through their Government. The only board of directors in this Government which directly represents the people is the Congress. It is our duty and we must, in my opinion, and the opinion of this committee, carefully assume the performance of such duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ANDERSON of California, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3756) making appropriations for Government corporations and independent executive agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan (at the request of Mr. GRAHAM) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. HARTLEY (at the request of Mr. MATHEWS) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two editorials.

Mr. TRIMBLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the remarks I made today a full report of the Committee on Appropriations on Government Corporations. I make this request, Mr. Speaker, because of the fact that it is a rather full and complete explanation of the action taken by the committee in regard to these Government corporations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN and Mr. GORE asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks made in the Committee of the Whole and include certain tables and statistics.

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include statements he received showing the effect of appropriations in the bill H. R. 3756 on the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement of Navy Service Veterans in opposition to the armed services merger.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin (at the request of Mr. HALLECK) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, Mr. KEARNEY (at the request of Mr. LEONARD W. HALL) was granted leave of absence on account of official business.

HOUR OF MEETING ON FRIDAY

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow, it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Friday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order tomorrow to take up the deficiency bill which we filed this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

SUGAR CONTROL EXTENSION ACT OF 1947

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 242, Rept. No. 561), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3612) to amend the Sugar Control Extension Act of 1947, so as to terminate the authority to allocate or ration refined sugar among users for home consumption. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

VETERANS' PREFERENCE ACT OF JUNE 1947

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 243, Rept. No. 562), which was referred to the House calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 966) to amend section 14 of the Veterans' Preference Act of June 27, 1944 (58 Stat. 387). That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR TOMORROW

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the conferees on the rent control housing bill are now meeting, and it is expected that the matter will be brought into agreement this afternoon. The committee has until midnight tonight to file its report. If that report is filed, as we expect it will be, we will call the conference report up for action tomorrow when we convene. We also hope to dispose of the deficiency appropriation bill, consideration of which has just been arranged for by unanimous consent. The rule on the sugar decontrol bill has just been filed, and we should like to dispose of that tomorrow; and, also, if time permits, we should like to dispose of the bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency on disposition of war housing. It is then expected that on Friday we will resume consideration of H. R. 3342, commonly known as the Voice of America bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Do I understand correctly that regardless of whether or not all the matters that are programed for tomorrow are finished tomorrow, we will go on at 11 o'clock Friday with the so-called Voice of America bill.

Mr. HALLECK. That is my understanding.

COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Veterans' Affairs be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House during general debate for the remainder of this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

Mr. DONDERO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will there be general debate in the House the rest of the week?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot definitely state that. There will be very little general debate tomorrow, the Chair thinks, and of course there will be none on Friday when the bill from the Committee on Foreign Affairs is being read for amendment.

Mr. DONDERO. I understand it is a ruling of the Speaker that committees will not be permitted to sit unless the House is engaged in general debate upon legislation.

The SPEAKER. The rules under which we have been conducting the House this year do not permit committees to hold hearings while the House is in session except when general debate is in progress.

Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PORT OF BOSTON AND ITS ADVANTAGES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the port of Boston possesses excellent facilities and advantages for shipping and industry.

The port of Boston, oldest commercial seaport in the United States where waterborne trade has been going on since 1630, in normal times prior to the war was the second largest in the country in volume of import business.

In 1940, more than 19,000,000 tons of cargo and 2,776,000 passengers, including those on coastwise runs, passed through the port of Boston. Of this cargo, 2,736,225 tons were in foreign commerce with an import value of $164,000,000 and an export value of $29,000,000, with $33,000,000 in customs duties paid.

In this postwar year, under the direction of a new and aggressive Port of Boston Authority, the historic port is making steady strides toward regaining her position of commercial eminence. Steady increases have been recorded in recent months in tonnage figures of both import and export cargoes handled in the port, and this despite the fact that resumption of the once large and profitable coastwise trade has been slow for a variety of reasons.

Three hundred years of experience in handling export and import shipping as well as coastwise trade gives Boston a unique position among the ports of the country. While harbor, track, storage, and labor facilities have been generally strained in American ports since the war, the port of Boston facilities have been tested and found to be capable of handling vastly more than they have had to handle in any previous period.

Boston has an over-all water frontage of some 140 miles, of which 7 miles has a depth of 35 feet or more at mean low water. The main channel approach from Massachusetts Bay along its 7-mile stretch from open sea is 40 feet deep at mean low water. The port is capable of handling at its major piers the largest ships afloat in the largest sheltered harbor in the United States.

Storage and warehouse facilities are excellent, and include the Boston Army Supply Base, the second largest storehouse in the United States, normally available for public use. Commonwealth Pier, Castle Island, and the Army base and the Boston and Albany docks are modern, well-equipped ocean terminals, and the port authority is now at work on a project to implement these facilities by a 10-year construction program which will see two new terminals constructed on the Charlestown waterfront, and additional piers on the South Boston and East Boston shores.

At South Boston is located the largest drydock on the east coast of the United States, constructed by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and of great value to shipping. Within the port area, at Quincy, Hingham, and East Boston are some of the largest and best equipped shipbuilding and repair yards in the Nation.

The important natural advantages of the port of Boston are supplemented by ample tug service, by a variety of terminals for handling specialized cargoes, by excellent floating cargo handling cranes, although lighterage is unnecessary, by direct rail and highway connection to every major terminal, by two grain elevators and by fumigating plants for wool and similar cargoes.

Its waterfront labor is considered the most skilled in the United States, with longshoremen to whom work on the piers is a family tradition and with a number of competent stevedoring firms, equipped with the latest of mechanized cargo-handling equipment.

Safety contests and safety practices have brought insurance rates on industrial risks for stevedores, longshoremen, and other general-cargo handlers to among the lowest in the country, which is an important factor in lowering cargo handling costs.

Boston enjoys the same ocean rates for import and export business as all the North Atlantic ports and today is not only on the same railroad-rate basis as is New York for foreign shipping, via so-called standard line routings, but it also enjoys a lower freight-rate basis than New York on import traffic, via differential routes to the Midwest sections of the United States. This gives an added advantage to shippers out of Boston, since this port provides direct railroad connections to the ships; the port is nearer Europe, the east coast of South America, and the Near East than any other American port, and nearness of shipping brokers and freight forwarders to the customhouse provide for speedy personalized service in clearances of necessary documentary papers.

The port of Boston is freer from the danger of delay arising from congestion than are other important Atlantic ports. One of Boston's great advantages lies in its facility for transfer of goods between ships and railroad cars. No water front in the United States can handle freight between rail and truck and ship with greater facility and economy than at the piers in Boston, served directly by railroad tracks which are usually located in the center of the pier under covered sheds, with rails depressed, avoiding the necessity of lighterage service which is common in New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. To the advantage of shippers from Boston, is the one handling of freight between railroad or truck and ship, thus materially reducing the hazards of damage, breakage, or pilferage, in contrast to the situation in other ports where in many instances merchandise is handled several times.

Present excellent terminal facilities including wharves, piers, supporting yards and track facilities, will be greatly improved with the return of facilities used by the Army during the war and the construction of new piers already authorized. All this adds up to increasing speed of handling; and warehouse space for cargo—the country's second largest and most efficient.

Boston's general cargo trade is served by the following piers: South Boston district, New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad; Commonwealth pier, four berths operated by the Port of Boston Authority; Army base terminal, nine berths, operated by Boston Tidewater Terminal, Inc.; Castle Island terminal, seven berths operated by Terminal Operators, Inc., for account of Port of Boston Authority; East Boston district, New York Central System-Boston & Albany Railroad; East Boston terminal, seven berths, operated by New York Central System-Boston & Albany Railroad; Charlestown district, Boston & Maine Railroad; Mystic docks, six berths, operated by Boston & Maine Railroad; Wiggin terminal, four berths, operated by Wiggin Terminals, Inc.

Boston has two grain elevators, with a combined capacity of 2,440,000 bushels: East Boston Elevator, New York Central System and Boston & Albany Railroad; Mystic Elevator, Boston & Maine Railroad.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. LECOMPTE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on June 10, 1947, present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:
